The Gentleman in the Straw Hat

By Philip Kean

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.)

"It's the gentleman in the straw hat, miss," said the little maid.

"It's a most inconvenient time to see him," Catharine said.

"But he insists."

Catharine trailed the snowy lengths of her satin gown toward the door. "I suppose I shall have to see him," she said. "Did he give any name?"

"No," the maid replied, "but he is the same gentleman that came the other day. I knew him by his straw hat. It seemed sort of strange for a gentleman to be wearing a straw hat in winter."

"Yes, it does," Catharine said, and went downstairs.

Catharine greeted the stranger somewhat coolly. She had suspicions of a book agent, although a second glance at the man before her rather dispelled this idea. He was shabby. He came to the point at once. "I want to paint your picture," he said.

Catharine looked at him haughtily. "Why, I don't know you." Her voice had in it a note of anger, but he did not seem disturbed.

"I want to paint your picture," he repeated. "You are the most beautiful woman I have ever seen."

Catharine stood up. "You have not seen me long enough to call me beautiful."

"I have seen you many times," he said, "and last night as you came out and crossed the snowy pavement on the way to your motor, I was standing on the steps. You were wrapped in white furs and there were diamonds in your hair. I thought of the 'Snow Queen' about whom I used to read in my fairy books."

Catharine leaned toward him eager with interest. "I remember," she said, "but how cruel she was."

"Yes," he agreed, "yes; but your beauty—the wonderful white of the snow, the white of your furs—I want them on my canvas—I must have them."

But again Catharine repelled him haughtily. "I do not know you," she said.

His head went up. "I have no reputation," he admitted, "and I am poor and struggling for recognition, but I love my art. I know I am asking much, but no one will ever paint you better than I shall paint you."

It was said with the calmness of one who knows what he can do, and in spite of his shabbiness, in spite of the peculiar circumstances of his coming, Catharine felt herself drawn by some irresistible force into acquiescence.

"Of course I could not come alone," she said.

"I do not wish you to come; I have no audio. I want to paint you here."

His demand was made so quietly, with such perfect assurance that it would be granted, that again she gave in weakly. When he had gone, however, and she told at the table of the strange circumstance her mother exclaimed against the unconventionality, and her father spoke of the danger of admitting an unknown man to the house. Her cousin, Betty Barnes, however, who was spending the winter with her, thought it something of an adventure.

"It has been so deadly dull lately," she said, "just teas, receptions and things. Can we all come in and see him paint you, Catharine?"

"Of course you can," Catharine answered, "but he won't interest you, Betty. He is the shabbiest man you ever saw."

But as Catharine learned to know the painter she found that it was not poverty alone that made him wear a straw hat. So completely was he wrapped up in his art that he thought little of the things that rule the average man.

Gradually under his hand the picture was taking on great beauty. While he painted he talked to her. He had been everywhere, seen everything. She listened, and, when he left, wished that she might listen still.

"You are falling in love with him," Betty accused her.

Catharine's heart beat quickly, but outwardly she was as calm and cold as the lady in the picture. "As if I could love a man who wears a straw hat in winter," she said.

"I could love a man like your painter," Betty said.

It was when the picture was almost finished that the artist demanded something more of Catharine.

"Tomorrow," he said, "will be my last day here with you—it will be my last day of happiness."

She looked at him, her eyes shining, her cheeks flushed. "Why should it be your last day of happiness?" she asked.

"Because I must leave you," he told her.

For a moment they looked at each other and the eyes of the girl told the man something that he knew her lips would not utter. He took a quick step toward her, then stopped. "You would never marry me," he said, "even if I dared ask you. I have called my picture 'The Lady of the Frozen Heart.' It is not that you have no heart—but you are cold."

She caught her breath quickly. The look had died out in her eyes. "I am glad you know me so well," she said, and presently she left him and went away. He painted until dark came, and then sat there without the light, dreaming in the big chair near the fireplace.

Presently some one came in softly. It was Betty Barnes. She came over and looked at him. "I have found you out," she said slowly.

His eyes tried to pierce the dimness, as he laughed softly. "Oh, Betty Barnes," he said, "who told you?"

Betty touched the button and turned on the electric light. "Let me look at you," she said. She surveyed him while he smiled down at her. "It was your pointed beard and the tan that deceived me," she told him confidentially, as she settled herself in another big chair. "I had seen some one who looked like you, but it wasn't until yesterday that I traced the resemblance to the picture that hung over my brother's desk at college."

The artist nodded. "Yes, I poured tea for you the time that you came on to see Jack's room. I have been abroad since them and have learned to paint, and I fell in love with Catharine at the opera. I did not know a soul to present me to her. I did not dream that you were here, and I was bound that I would paint her picture. So I made up my mind to come here in an eccentric costume, so that she might think that I was some dreamy artist whom she could admit because he fancied himself a genius and because she might help him to fame."

Betty laughed. "And now you are afraid to 'fess up,'" she said.

"Do you think she would ever forgive me? She is so distant, so cold, so hard to touch."

"That shows how much you men know about it," Betty said, scornfully. "She is dead in love with you right this minute."

But he would not believe it. "There was a look in her eyes today that made me hope for a minute."

"It's a man's place to let a girl know that he cares."

But even wise little Betty did not know Catharine, for the lady of the frozen heart was in her room, dreaming with her eyes on her own little fire, the flames of which cast shadows over her thoughtful face. "He loves me," she said to herself, "but he is poor and afraid to tell me." So a little later she crept down to him.

Betty had gone after an admonition. "Don't tell her how rich you are, at first," she said, "or it will spoil the romance for her."

As Catharine entered the room she found the man who loved her gazing at the picture he had painted. She crept up behind him softly. "I want you to paint another," she said.

He turned to her quickly. "Another picture?" he stammered.

"Yes," she said, "I want you to paint me as the 'Lady of Dreams.' I don't want any snow or ice or frozen things, but flowers and sunshine. You have made me a thing of ice and hardness—I want you to paint me as a woman who can love."

He stood silent before the beauty of her surrender. "Could you even love a gentleman in a straw hat?" he asked.

"I could love—you."

After a time, when they had said all the wonderful first things that lovers must tell, he explained his deception. "There was no necessity for the straw hat," he told her, "nor for the shabby clothes." But he did not let her know that he was rich, he wanted first to paint her as his "Lady of Dreams" and to feel the happiness of the man who knows that not because of his position, not because of outward things, is he beloved, but because of his own true worth.

A Bishop's Conversion.

At a London (Eng.) East End temperance demonstration in the People's palace quite recently, the Bishop of Stepney related how he was converted last summer to total abstinence.

It was, he said, when he was working in the hopfields of Kent. He had always been, he hoped a very moderate drinker, but for four days in the hop gardens he had tasted the pleasures of total abstinence, drinking tea and lemonade. At the age of fifty-six he tried this experiment, and he had gone on with it ever since. As a total abstainer he had been quite as well as he ever was before. He went to a doctor, who was not a total abstainer, and said: "Should you advise me to go on?" The doctor asked him two questions—"Are you sleeping as well as ever?" and "Are you eating as much?" He replied that he was doing both rather better, and the doctor said the practice could be judged by its results.

To the Cotton Interests.

The coming year, in our opinion, offers to cotton producers an opportunity which perhaps not fully appreciated. Hence the following:

Last season we realized the crop o be a very short one, and fifteen cents appeared a reasonable figure o us under the circumstances. That price, we may say, was maintained against the combined efforts of the entire world, and indeed, the only reason the price did not rule higher was the fact that the crop then available followed the longest one on record—14,000,000 bales. Accordingly, there were then very large visible and invisible stocks in spinners' hands, as well as a large supply of manufactured goods on spinners', jobbers' and retailers' shelves.

It would have been impossible to maintained last season's price if that price had not been justified in every particular. All interests bought the advance strongly, so that this season finds spinners', jobbers and retailers with the smallest supplies known since the war. In other words, the situation in this respect is exactly opposite from last year, at the same date, and there is absolutely no reserve stock to fall back on to supply any shortage that may develope.

The world would require a supply of 13,500,000 bales minimum this coming season to hold stock for this time next year in a position no more standing than they occupy today. A crop of 12,500,000 bales would be given away if sold under 16c The world would have to take it all at even higher prices if it were held for same.

And what crop may we expect? Last year the states, exclusive of Texas and Oklahoma, produced about 7,500,000 bales, and there is no reason to expect a larger yield from the same State this season, especially when the crop is three weeks late. In fact any increase must be extremely small, and on the contrary there is a strong probability that instead of an increase there will be a decrease. Texas and Oklahoma certainly do not indicate over 4,000,000, and their figures also are more likely to be reduced than raised. Therefore the total yield indicated is certainly not more than from 11,500,000 to 12,000,000 bales.

Now at the opening this year the trade is hovering over the market like a vulture, hoping that the producer will rush to market his crop as he has in seasons past, even if he can get only 13c. for it. In our judgment, those who follow such a policy will not only be robbing themselves—they will be throwing away the opportunity of a lifetime; and there will also be distroying the value of their neighbors' property.

It is a matter of little concern to us that our efforts to establish a fair price for cotton, according to the law of supply and demand, were neither realized nor appreciated by those interested last season. That is now past history but to allow this crop to rush to market without first warning the producers of the costly mistakes they may make and the advantages they stand to realize with wisdom would not be just to the cause we espouse.

Nor do we forget the ultimate consumer. He does not believe it but it is true, that the price of raw cotton effects him but little. Prices remained virtually unchanged to him last year, in the fact of the advance recorded on the cotton exchanges, and there is every reason to believe that the actual consumption last year was larger than the year previous. When we must adjust ourselves to is a gradual yearly increase in price to supply industries and growing population, the world over. But this increase will make itself felt gradually in retail prices. Cotton could advance enormously before the appreciation would be felt by the ultimate consumer. Most of the cost of the finished product both by the ultimate cousumer is accounted for in the many and varied progress of manufacturer, transshipment and rehandling. What rules the producer, though, it is not the cost of manufacture, but the law of demand and supply and to him we say that in our belief, a crop of 11,500,000 bales would readily be consumed this season at twenty cents.

Tall Building for Bees.

The tall building idea is found to be successful with bees as with city folk. Many beekeepers claim that bees swarm because they have not enough room for their work. Swarming is the bane of the beginner in the industry. It will be found that a colony can be started out with a single story hive. As the season advances a second story can be added. Then a third and on until the capacity of the hive will be about 50 pounds. This method has been tried with success by beekeepers of experience.

A Tested Womans' Remedy.

If you are despondent and have fits of nervousness; if your sweet little children annoy you; if you feel that your friends are neglecting you; dark rings under the eyes, hysterical, headache, constipation, pains above the pelvic bone across the lower bowels and about the kidneys—it indicates that you need a female remedy such as VIN-O-VITÆ. It builds up diseased tissue, strengthen the womb and appendages, and by it's fine tonic properties gives women perfect health. Try it and be convinced. Druggists sell it at $1 per bottle. Granger Medicine Co Chattanooga, Tenn.

An Indigestion Remedy Free

Many people who are otherwise healthy suffer from indigestion, or dyspepsia. When you consider that the stomach and allied digestive organs are the most important organs of the body, it would seem that a disorder there is to be taken very seriously.

Dyspeptics cannot eat the things they like; food sours in the stomach; then chronic constipation begins, or, as is often the case, you have been constipated all along, and the stools are forced and irregular.

But there is no use letting indigestion go until it becomes chronic and undermines your health. It is good advice to suggest to you that you go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the wonderful cure for stomach, liver and bowel troubles. That is what C. Fowler, of Carson City, Mich., did and he is well today. Others who did the same and are cured are Ida A. Fortune, of Grand Junction, Tenn., B. F. Thompson, of Shenandoah, Ia., who actually considers that it saved his life. You can obtain a 50-cent or $1 bottle of the druggist, and, taken according to directions, it will probably be all you need. It is a liquid, acts gently, never gripes, and besides the laxative effect, contains exceptional tonic properties which tone the stomach, and that is what is especially needed in indigestion.

All sufferers from indigestion who have never used Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can obtain a free test bottle by writing the doctor. It will be sent direct to your home without any charge. In this way thousands have proven to their own satisfaction Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the very remedy they needed to cure indigestion. When once you use this grand remedy you will throw violent cathartics, tablets, salts, etc., away.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

EXCELLENT SPRING FOR DOOR

Spiral Hinge Makes Door Close of Its Own Weight—Clears Carpets and Rugs.

By taking advantage of the law of gravity, a Washington (D. C.) man has invented a hinge which also acts as a spring. Spiral strips of metal are screwed at top and bottom and middle of the door casing. Other metal strips, with slots for the screws to pass through, are fastened to the door at corresponding distance apart from the hinges. When the door is opened it rides up on the spirals and also may be at the bottom. Then when the pressure on the door is released it settles of its own weight as closes slowly and gently as the closing strips slide down the spirals. There is no necessity to have any latch device attached to prevent the door from closing with a bang as in the case with many other doors. These spiral springs are made of strong metal that will not rust or break, and as they are kept lubricated automatically, there is no squeaking or grating noise.

ROTATION RESTS THE LAND

Allowing Land to Lie Idle Does Not Bring About Result Lazy Farmer Imagines.

BY R. PIERSON.

A neighbor of ours is a bit disaged over his crop outlook and his soil needs a rest, therefore talking of fallowing his land year. Allowing to lie idle for a may be a good thing for the farmer, but I never could see other reason for it. The idea course, is to "rest" the land conserving of an extra season single crop. This might be provided the man has cultivated the fallow period, a fine mulch tained, and the weeds kept down if it is all to grow up to weeds grass this will take out quite moisture as a crop of corn or anyplace. Soil cannot assimilate food unless it is cultivated, and sure, it follows that much of the goes to waste on fallow land. farmer would set his plants deeper, keep the cultivator more steadily, "rest" his land change of crops, buy a manure or, then use it, his farm would duce twice as much as it will carries out his fallowing plans.

Allowing Land to Lie Idle Does Not Bring About Result Lazy Farmer Imagines.

BY R. PIERSON.

A neighbor of ours is a bit discouraged over his crop outlook and thinks his soil needs a rest, therefore, he is talking of fallowing his land next year. Allowing to lie idle for a season may be a good thing for the lazy farmer, but I never could see any other reason for it. The idea, of course, is to "rest" the land and the conserving of an extra season for a single crop. This might be done provided the man has cultivated during the fallow period, a fine mulch maintained, and the weeds kept down, but if it is all to grow up to weeds and grass this will take out quite as much moisture as a crop of corn or anything else. Soil cannot assimilate plant food unless it is cultivated, and therefore it follows that much of this food goes to waste on fallow land. If the farmer would set his plants a little deeper, keep the cultivator going more steadily, "rest" his land by a change of crops, buy a manure spreader, then use it, his farm would produce twice as much as it will if he carries out his fallowing plans.

Succeeding With Alfalfa.

The men who have succeeded best with unirrigated alfalfa have prepared their land well and then seeded it when an abundant supply of moisture was present.

POULTRY NOTES

All poultry that are not pure-bred are not scrubs.

The houses and pens the fowls are placed in should be scrupulously clean.

Generally a hen with a nice, clean-cut head and a full, bright eye will be a good layer.

Crossing an African gander on Toulouse geese is said to give the largest sized offspring.

It is well to consider what is the best treatment of fowls while they are passing through the moult.

Fowls always seem to moult earlier and quicker when they are warm and in places where they are exposed to the sun.

When moulting actually commences, it is best to feed liberally on rations which are easy of digestion and rich in protein.

The cockerels should be culled out early and sent to market. Pullets will develop much better if this is done.

Some hens in every yard are too old for good service. Have you any? Good time right now to get rid of them.

Among the several varieties of the Cochin family the Partridge is considered by many to be the most beautiful.

Skimmed milk is a good feed not only for raising calves, and pigs, but it is also an excellent feed for raising chicks and for egg production.

It is as difficult to name the best breed of fowls as it is to name the best breed of hogs or sheep, or the best make of corn planter or cream separator.

Many people are realizing the profit in raising heavy geese, as they are worth more a pound than the lighter breeds and every year there is more demand for the Toulouse.

Of first importance is to keep young stock growing vigorously. Too many poultry raisers compel their young stock to shift too much for itself during the middle and last summer months.

RATION TO FATTEN POULTRY

Method Adopted at Maine Station and Gives Much Satisfaction—Coops Are Used.

At the Maine station the following ration for fattening is fed to fowls in small pens with great success.

Hundred parts of cornmeal.
Hundred parts wheat middlings.
Forty parts of meat meal.

This was fed as porridge, thick enough to drop, but not run, from a spoon. Milk is preferable for moistening the mixture.

French and English fatteners who make a specialty of the business of fattening thousands of chickens each year confine them in small coops. The coops used at the Maine station had a floor space of 16 by 23 inches, in each of which four chickens were placed. This method can be used when the space is limited. At the Maine station it was found that chickens fattened in a pen put on weight as rapidly and at as low cost as those in crates or on which cramming machines were used.

Where a pen is used the fowls should have shade, grit and the water must be fresh and plentiful. Feed them three times a day and be careful to see that none is left in the troughs between meals.

Poultry Business.

The poultry business is not adapted to sluggards. The lazy man loses money with hens. Every neglect in poultry raising has its cost.

He who is constantly complaining about "bad luck" is only advertising the fact that his methods are at fault. Bad luck investigated will nearly always prove to be wrong management. Good luck and proper management are akin.

Supply Foreign Stamps.

A queer business in New York city is the supplying of current foreign postage stamps to business houses which want to send foreign mail with stamped envelope for returning the answer. Of course Uncle Sam's 50-cent stamp is no good in Sunjel Ujong, upper Rhodesia or the Falkland islands, but a stamp of any of these countries of the equivalent value may be had for seven cents by going to one of the shops that sell them.

For Cleaning Windows.

For cleaning windows and mirrors, there are several proprietary articles on the market, but a little soda or kerosene and a little thin starch put over the glass and allowed to dry will give excellent results when rubbed off and polished with newspaper or cloth that leaves no lint. In very cold weather a little alcohol on a cloth is effectual.—Harper's Bazar.

THE KING'S MARRIAGE FEAST

Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 11, 1910
Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 22:1-14. Memory verses 4, 5.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Many are called, but few are chosen."—Matthew 22:14.

TIME.—Tuesday, April 4, A. D. 33. Three days before the Crucifixion.

PLACE.—The Temple court at Jerusalem.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

The Kingdom of Heaven Like a Wedding Feast.—Vs. 1, 2. And Jesus answered the unspoken needs, desires, and questions of the people. By parables, the most picturesque method, compelling attention, but not antagonistic. The enemy could not easily attack it, while to those who wished to know it was full of light.

The kingdom of heaven, the new order which he came to establish on earth, in which each citizen lived according to the laws of heaven. The king represented God. The son was Jesus Christ.

This feast represents all the blessings which God has provided in his gospel, enjoyed in large measure here, and perfected in heaven. The emphasis is on the marriage, the union between Christ and his people. It is the highest ideal of love and friendship. It expresses intimate fellowship with God, the mutual love and delight in one another, the protecting care on the one hand and perfect trust on the other, the unity of purpose, of character, of hope, the abiding forever in one perfect home, all of which belong to the union of Christ with believers.

The Invitation.—Vs. 3, 4. And sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden. Literally, "to call the called," to summon those who had previously been invited; because they had no timepieces, and the hour when the feast could be ready was very uncertain. This custom is not now observed "very strictly among the common people, nor in cities where western manners have greatly modified the Oriental; but in Lebanon it still prevails. If a sheik begs, or emeer invites, he always sends a servant to call you at the proper time. These having refused to come, he sent forth other servants, who were "not merely to invite to, but to command the feast, with a view to create a desire." Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings, i. e., smaller animals, as lambs, calves, specially fed for the occasion. All things are ready; come.

How the Invitation Was Received.—Vs. 3-6. They refused without giving any reason, they would not come. They simply did not regard the invitation as worth attending to. They treated it with indifference. They plead other interests. Their farm duties, their business gains, weighed more than their king's service and good will. Others displayed active opposition.

The king . . . was wroth. Any ordinary earthly king would be angry at the insult, and indignant at the folly of those that refused, and would feel the necessity of punishing those who openly rebelled in the act of refusing. There was no other way of preserving his kingdom. God's "anger" is never passion, never desire to harm even the worst of beings, but a burning indignation against wrong.

Go yet therefore into the highways. Or, "the partings of the highways," the cross-roads, the places where great numbers meet, "the broad, well-trodden ways of the world."

Gather together all . . . both bad and good, whoever was willing to come and by that very act showed that they wanted to be good.

The fullness of the time had come. The preparations were complete. Everything was prepared for the redemption of man—heaven, love, the atonement, the strongest motives, the power of the Holy Spirit. The world was in the best condition for the coming of Christ. Never before or since has there been so fitting a time—one government, one language, peace, roads, synagogues of the Jews everywhere. The slaying of the animals is an allusion to sacrifice. Only when the Lamb was slain on Calvary were all things ready for the marriage. The long preparations for the Gospel were completed; the forerunner had done his work; Jesus himself had come from Heaven, and had taught the Jews the divine message.

The leading Jews had very much at stake—their country, their holy city, their temple, their synagogues, their rank and wealth, their leadership of the people. They were so busy with these, they were so afraid they would lose them if they accepted the humble Nazarene as their teacher, and obeyed his precepts, that they were unwilling even to consider his claims.

The kingdom of God was transferred from the Jewish nation to the Gentiles. The Jews henceforth, instead of being the people and kingdom of God, would be a mere Semitic nationality. Many of them then and since belong to the kingdom of the Messiah. The Messianic kingdom is today the mightiest power on earth.

There has never been a king on earth with a tithe of the power and influence, and of the number of subjects which King Jesus today possesses.

The world is still full of excuses for not coming, many of them mere excuses, but we must look much deeper for the real reasons. And we should be far more careful to understand and remove the reasons than to try to answer their excuses. It is for this reason that much of the arguing with irreligious men is so useless. It is like scraping the furred tongue, but leaving the fever.

Enjoy Good Health.

To enjoy good health keep the liver in good condition, otherwise the effete matter and bile will accumulate in the system and cause disease.

St. Joseph's Liver Regulator

is old-established, reliable, thoroughly endorsed, and is specially recommended for use in all disorders of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

It has become popular and indispensable in a great many homes as a valuable systemic Regulator and Invigorator.

HOME-MADE CHICK FOUNTAIN

Handy and Inexpensive Receptacle for Watering Little Ones—Many Advantages.

The above sketch illustrates a practical chick fountain which can easily be made from a tin can and an earthern or tin dish.

Procure a tin can about four inches in diameter (baking powder usually comes in cans this size) and punch a hole in the lower rim with a nail about five-eighths of an inch from the bottom; fill with water and place a dish over same (diameter of dish must be about two inches larger than diameter of can).

Turn the can and dish over quickly and set where desired.

The advantages of this simple arrangement are many, the chicks cannot stand in the water and foul it, neither can they turn it over, and the dish is automatically filled from the tank as fast as the chicks drink it.

Pure Titanium.

Titanium chloride reduced with sodium, yields pure titanium as a metal resembling polished steel. It is brittle when cold, but at low red heat can be forged like iron. Though very hard, it can be shaped with a file.

SCIENCE TO HELP FARMERS

Plan That May Revolutionize Farming Methods in Genesee Valley in Western New York.

Several farmers of western New York are considering a plan that has been suggested to them by one of their sons who is attending the Cornell agricultural school. The plan consists in a number of farmers who reside not too far apart forming an association and hiring an expert scientific farmer who could intelligently direct the farming operations of the members, analyze the different soils and determine what they lack and the crops best suited to the land, instruct the members in the preparation of the different formulas for spraying trees and growing crops and the proper time to spray, and in the proper selection of different seeds for planting.

The farms in that vicinity will not average much over 100 acres and in the rough draft of the plan it was figured that if twenty farmers could be enrolled who would be willing to pay $100 a year each, a first-class man could be secured and he would have but slightly over 2,000 acres to supervise, with no manual labor to do. With the superintendent located at some central farm where he could be accessible on the telephone and with some fairly rapid means of conveyance the plan looks feasible and may revolutionize farming methods in the Genesee valley.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE FARMERS.

The much talked of season of hard times and business depression has failed to arrive; the prophecies of the chronic knocker are wanting in the fulfillment and the dire misfortunes predicted by the ever present calamity howler have died in the borning. Alabama, Chilton county and Clanton, instead of going to the bow-wows, as forecasted by would-be-wise sages, has gone steadily onward upon the road of material development that leads to certain success and abundant prosperity.

We are enjoying the fruits of our labors as never before; the cry of poverty is hushed throughout this heaven-blessed section; on every side is heard the tuneful tones of thrift and prosperity. The frugal farmer will not have to draw upon the store house of the West for his corn supply, for the harvest within our own fields is abundant in the extreme.

The cotton producer is satisfied with the results of his labors and the shining coin which high prices for his staple enables him to secure and jingle in his jeans, not only makes a gladsome sound to his ears, but fills his heart with joyful anticipations of a happy Christmas-tide. All things conspire to make his lot a pleasant one indeed.

The Chilton County Farmer is fast assuming that place in the economic relations of life which his avocation predestined him to occupy the front rank—a leader among the advance guard. Long faces have been succeeded by smiling countenances and mortgaged homes and farms are soon to become happy firesides and productive fields of pleasure. Hard times have been vanquished and prosperity is victorious.

Contentment, peace and plenty are knocking at every door.

We are now entering upon an era of commercial development never heretofore anticipated; a season of rich rewards for honest toil is now dawning and will soon burst with noonday splendor upon our people.

The farmers are happy as they should be, for mother earth has yielded them rich trophies for their plucking; prices are soaring amid the radiant beauty of the stars; his products are in demand as never before.

Cotton is again King and corn is the Prince Imperial. What more could the planter desire to make his cup of gladness overflow?

Desiring to have you make our place headquarters, we have arranged to pay the very top notch for every pound of the fleecy staple brought to our store.

We want to have a hand in your prosperity; we wish to be remembered in your rejoicing.

Come to us with your sample, we will top the market on every occasion; call upon us for your wants, our large and varied stock enables us to meet your every requirement and at prices that will make glad for the visit.

We hate the chronic croker, we despise the knocker and the pessimist. The old world is bright with hope, buoyant with success, happy in plenteous abundance. We want you to know that we rejoice at your season of success, you desire it and we hope you will enjoy it to the fullest extent.

Come to see us, your happy faces make us glad indeed.

Come whether you want to buy or sell, both or either or neither. We will be glad to greet you.

We are going to set the gait this year and those who would keep up with us must clip it off at a merry chase.

Cordially yours,

Farmers of Chilton County, we greet you as the two fold keepers and producers of our prosperity. You are they who have produced the wealth of our Country and upon your heads we pour our praises in unstinted measure. You have earned your reward and should enjoy the fruits of your labors.

The Merchant who has bought wisely and well rejoices at your success,

The cotton buyer whose heart beats in unison with your own delight in the oportunity afforded him to give you good prices for your staple; he who would with hold from you the best and highest the market affords is neither a friend to the farmer nor a wise man of business.

We want you to succeed, because in your success we also shall share.

We have bought not stingily but well; we have purchased in keeping with your position and your desire; you want the best, therefore we supplied ourselves with the best that we might accommodate both your taste and your demands.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER
Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

The Democrats of Chilton county met at the court house, Clanton, last Saturday, and duly nominated J. A. Mahan for Representative in the Legislature, no candidate having been nominated at the recent primary. Mr. Mahan is an agreeable, well informed young man who would doubtless make an excellent representative if the voters see fit to elect him to the position.

A strange tale came to town Tuesday morning from East Chilton. Mrs. Ellis Mims and another lady were out in the woods near Mitch Mims' place, and found a small child, apparently about eight years old. They endeavored to catch the youngster, but he eluded them and is still at large. Parties are out in the woods searching for the strange child, says Mr. H. T. Smithfield, who brought in the news.

The democratic barbecue arranged for next Saturday promises to be very interesting, the best speakers in the State having been invited, and Governor Emmett O'Neal has promised to be present. Everybody come and have a good time. Good speakers, plenty to eat, plenty to drink—Clanton is famous for pure water.

The following committees have been appointed:

Police Order—E. A. Matthews, Chairman, I. S. Catts, J. M. Morgan, Ed Smitherman, J. Q. Wade, T. Gore, Jno. Thompson, J. D. Bagget, J. B. Carwile, T. M. Bell, P. M. Moore, J. W. E. Hodges, H. F. Chandler.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

C. W. Reynolds, who recently failed for nearly thirty thousand dollars, has been ordered by the Federal bankrupt court to show cause why he could not turn over for the benefit of his creditors $17,000 or its equivalent. The citation is the result of an adult of the merchant's books by C. W. Haden and Gledden Harrison, and adult having been made at the request of the creditors.

In the absence of the official order which, it was said was in the hands of lawyers, it was stated that the citation does not indicate that Mr. Reynolds has kept back any assets but that, on the fact of the books, it was apparent that he was due the above amount. He has not yet filed his answer and it may throw a different light on the case when he does.

The matter was to have been herd besore Reference Asa E. Stratton on Thuriday morning at which time it was expected also that the bankrupt's answer to the citation would be present but on motion of counsel, the hearing went over until 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon.

That the dankrupt case is of more than passing importance is indicated in the proceedings. Five of them appeared in the bankrupt court. They were: Tipton Mullins and T. A. Curry, of Clanton, Henry Fitts, of Birmingham, and W. H. Samford and Mealy Foster, of Montgomery.

PATTERSON QUITS TENNESSEE RACE

Will Not Bar Way of Democratic Success.

THE PARTY IS PARAMOUNT

Governor of Tennessee Withdraws From the Race for Governorship to Prevent Probable Loss of State to Republicans—His Stormy Career.

Governor M. R. Patterson has withdrawn from the race to succeed himself as governor of Tennessee. Governor Patterson was the nominee of the "regular" faction of the democratic party, and has been bitterly opposed by the independent-state-wide prohibition democrats, who, in coalition with the republicans, elected a state judiciary last month, defeating a ticket for which Governor Patterson made a strenuous campaign of the state.

Governor Patterson, in his address announcing his withdrawal, declares he will not be an obstacle in the way of his party's success at the polls, nor will he willingly contribute in any way to the possibility of success of the republicans in Tennessee. He withdraws in the interest of harmony and that democratic factions may get together to prevent the loss of the state in November.

He makes reference to interferences of a republican president in Tennessee politics. In an interview following the issuance of the statement, Governor Patterson declares that he has no personal preferences in the matter of a democratic nominee, and that he will take the stump for him, whoever he may be. Patterson's political career has been a stormy one, including his defeat of former Senator E. W. Carmack for the gubernatorial nomination in a sensational campaign, followed by the killing of Carmack here by the Cooper's. Their trial, which attracted nation-wide attention, and Patterson's pardon of D. B. Cooper within a few minutes after his conviction by the supreme court.

FATAL AUTO ACCIDENT.

Savannah Man Killed and Several Other Persons Injured.

M. K. Jones, one of the best-known furniture men in the south, was killed in Savannah at the Serpentine turn on the Grand Prize automobile course 8 miles from Savannah, when a rear tire exploded, and his automobile turned completely over and righted itself.

Mr. Jones' neck was broken and his skull was fractured.

Frank Butner, a close friend of Mr Jones, in another car, came up quickly and, taking the dying man in his automobile, supported him with one hand while he made a thrilling drive to Savannah in search of a physician. As Mr. Butner rode up to the Savannah hospital, Mr. Jones breathed his last.

In the car with Mr. Jones were four friends, all of whom were rendered unconscious by the crash, but none of whom were permanently injured.

CAMPAIGN EXPENSES.

What Rival Candidates Spent in Late Georgia Election.

According to reports Governor-elect Hoke Smith spent a total of $17,596.10 incident to the recent Georgia primary election of which he paid $10,489.62 out of his own pocket. The rest was contributed by friends.

Governor Joseph M. Brown spent in the same campaign $3,950.75, of which he paid $3,300.75 out of his own pocket the rest being contributed by members of the family.

These are in substances the sworn statements of the two candidates for governor in the recent primary which resulted in the nomination of Mr Smith.

It is evident that it costs something to run for governor in Georgia; it is difficult to see where the man without funds or resources would be in it.

The salary of the governor is only $5000 a year; hence the governor-elect paid out of his own pocket incident to his campaign $489.63 more than he will receive as salary from the state during the two years he will be in office.

REVENUE SEIZURES.

119 Plants, Worth About $9,000, Raided in One Month.

The monthly report of the internal revenue agent's work, of whom James H. Hurber is chief in Georgia, for the month of August, has just been completed.

During August 115 distilleries were seized by revenue agents, eighty-six plants being located in Georgia and twenty-nine in Alabama.

The value of the stills destroyed amounted to about $8,000. Fifteen arrests were made and sixty-five warrants were sworn out for parties supposed to be engaged in the work of illicit whiskey making.

Of the eighty-six distilleries seized in Georgia, two were found in Fulton county. Four successful raids were made in Campbell county, four or five in Hart son county and three in Troup Dawson, Rabun, Habersham, Pickens, Gilmer, Pike and Jasper county each produced a yield and in some instances two.

Alabama's twenty-nine give-ups came from Randolph, Cleburn, Walker, Forsyth and Jefferson counties—one of the seizures being within the shadows cast by Birmingham's tall buildings.

LEAD PENCIL CAUSED DEATH.

"Jackie" Sent to the Unknown By a Jab of the Weapon.

The stub of a lead pencil was the weapon which brought death to Albert Curren, of the Jackie gunboat Hancock. Curren had obtained a leave of absence to visit his sister in Brooklyn, N. Y.

In a saloon near home he became engaged with John Schmidt, an acquaintance, in a lively discussion as to the merits of the battleships of Germany and the United States. Schmidt declares Curren struck him. Schmidt said he did not realize that he had a lead pencil in his clinched hand when, resenting Curren's attack, he struck back. The blow caught Curren on the neck and the pencil pierced his jugular vein.

39 PERISH WHEN FERRY BOAT SINKS

Disastrous Accident Reported on Lake Michigan.

BOAT SANK IN MID-LAKE

Ferry Boat on Its Way From Ludington to Milwaukee With Cargo of 32 Cars When Overtaken By Disaster—Conflicting Reports.

Pere Marquette car ferry No. 18 sank in Lake Michigan, 20 miles off Sheboygan, Friday morning.

Thirty-nine mebers of the crew lost and three saved when the car ferry sank in mid-lake about 20 miles off Sheboygan, according to reports received.

The car ferry No. 18 was bound from Ludington to Milwaukee with a full cargo of 32 cars, consisting of 11 cars of coal and 21 of miscellaneous freight.

All the members of the crew were from Ludington.

The car ferry left Ludington after a thorough inspection before entering the freight carrying track across the lake. The first word of the ferry being in distress was received in a wireless message from the captain asking for assistance from car ferry No. 17, and the dispatch of tugs.

First reports received indicated that the crew had been saved, but a later dispatch brought the news that only 3 out of the crew of 42 had been saved.

DEATH OF JULIUS BROWN.

Prominent Atlanta Lawyer and Oldest Son of Late Senator Brown.

Julius L. Brown, son of Georgia's war governor, one of Atlanta's most widely known citizens, a leading member of the bar, and prominent in the Masonic order, died Sunday at his home on Washington street, after a long illness.

Though Mr. Brown has been in poor health for a long time, his death came as a surprise to many who had known him.

More than three years ago he gave up business entirely, and set about recuperating. He visited the best specialists in various countries, and yet did not improve.

Julius L. Brown was the first child and the oldest of eight children of Hon. Joseph Emerson Brown, Georgia's war governor, and one of the state's few chief executives who occupied the governor's mansion four terms, and a member of the United State senate for many years.

Mr. Brown leaves a wife, two sisters, Mrs. Dr. Connally and Miss Sallie Brown, and three brothers, Governor Joseph M. Brown, Elijah Brown and George Brown, and a number of nephews and nieces.

Mr. Brown was one of Atlanta's most princely entertainers, and has had as his guest at his home some of the most prominent and distinguished people of the country.

PRIMARIES HELD IN MANY STATES

LaFollette Sweeps Wisconsin Overwhelmingly.

5 TO 1 OVER STANDPATTER

Indications Are That the Independents of Tennessee Have Indorsed Gen. W. Hooper, the Republican Nominee, for Governor.

It is said 27 out of 32 counties already heard from, where independent democratic mass meetings were held for the purpose of electing delegates to the independent democratic state convention to be held in Nashville on September 14, indorsed Hon. Ben. W. Hooper, the republican nominee, for governor. It is expected that the reports from the remaining counties will be the same ratio.

Louisiana.

Returns from the democratic primary election held in Louisiana indicate the renomination of Congressman John T. Watkins, of the fourth district; Joseph E. Ransdell, of the seventh district.

Vermont.

Lieutenant Governor John A. Mead, of Rutland, retired physician and prominent business man, was elected governor by the republicans in the state election by a plurality of about 17,000 over Lawyer Charles D. Watson, of St. Albans, his democratic opponent.

Wisconsin.

United States Senator Robert M. La Follette has swept the state of Wisconsin in the primary election for re-nomination, defeating his opponent, Samuel W. Cook, of Neemah, from 3 to 5 to 1.

SENATOR LAFOLETTE

Michigan.

United States Senator Julius C. Burroughs, of Kalamazoo, in the primaries was defeated for renomination by Charles E. Townsend, of Jackson.

New Mexico.

Indications are that the republicans elected 64 of the 100 delegates to the state constitutional convention which meets at Santa Fe October 3. The vote was light.

BIG FRAUD ALLEGED.

Cotton Factors' Liabilities Exceed Assets by $3,000,000 or More.

Sensational evidence relative to the details of the alleged fraudulent methods of the defunct Steel-Miller Company, cotton factors at Corinth, Miss., developed during the taking of depositions in the United States banking court at Jackson, Miss.

Figures compiled by Expert Accountant Elliott show that the liabilities of the firm exceed the assets by more than three million dollars, and that the working capital of the Steele-Miller Company did not exceed $10,000. No effort has been made to ascertain how far back the series of alleged frauds perpetrated on European spinners extends, but it has been shown that the Steele-Miller Company entered the new cotton year on September 1, 1909, with a shortage of 16,300 bales. In other words, it is alleged, they had issued bogus bills of lading for this amount of cotton that did not exist. A few weeks later the firm owed Schauch, of Havre, France, 25,000 bales of cotton for which bogus bills of lading had been issued and then transferred its business to a firm in Bremen with whom it became involved for 36,000 bales.

Postoffice Inspector W. C. Watson, who is attending the investigation, stated that, in his opinion, none of the local agents of the Steele-Miller Company were in any way involved in the criminal acts of the firm.

"TEDDY" TO TOUR TEXAS.

Col. Cecil Lyon, Chairman Republican Committee, Makes Announcement.

Colonel Cecil Lyon, chairman of the republican state executive committee, who has been at San Antonio, Tex., conferring with local republican leaders has announced that ex-President Theodore Roosevelt will tour Texas next March.

Colonel Lyon will meet Colonel Roosevelt in New York next January and the itinerary for the latter will then be arranged.

EXPLOSION ON SHIP.

Four Men Killed and Nine Injured On Dreadnaught.

Another of those tragedies which go to show that the sailor offers his life to his country in time of peace as well as in time of war, was enacted Friday, in the dreadnaught, North Dakota, about 10 points from Norfolk, Va., in lower Chesapeake bay, when an explosion of oil and ensuing fire cost the lives of three men and more or less serious injury to nine others, including Chief Lieutenant Orrin G. Murfin.

The accident happened far from any shore, and for several hours the wildest rumors circulated to the effect that the Delaware, sister ship of the North Dakota, had been blown up.

Rear Admiral Seaton Schroeder commanding the Atlantic fleet, Friday made the following succinct statement of the accident.

"Between 10:30 and 11 o'clock off from room No. 3 in the North Dakota caught fire while the first squadron of the Atlantic fleet was making passage from the Southern drill grounds to Hampton Roads. Under a request from the commander of the North Dakota the commander-in-chief of the fleet immediately ordered the North Dakota to leave the fleet formation and the battleship New Hampshire put near to render assistance in case they could be of service.

"No assistance was necessary, and by 11:30 o'clock the fire on the North Dakota was under control.

"It has not yet been ascertained how the fire started, although it is not believed that the accident was due to any carelessness of the men on the North Dakota. A board of inquiry was named to investigate the accident."

ROBBERS GET $8,000.

Kill Paymaster and Driver in Lonely Lane Near Hudson, N. Y.

Masked men sprang out of the bushes alongside a lonely lane near Hudson, N. Y., held up Dent Fowler, paymaster of the Atlas Brick company and negro driver, shot the driver dead, wounded Fowler mortally and made away with a chest of pay envelopes containing $8,000.

George Ragsdale, the driver, died instantly; his head was torn away by two 44-caliber revolver bullets. He was 60 years old, and a trusted employee. Fowler was wounded over the heart and died without ever regaining full consciousness. He was 21 years of age, a son of Everett Fowler, of Havestraw, N. Y.

The robbers escaped.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES

The strike of 44,000 coal miners in Illinois, which has been settled, is estimated to have cost the miners $12,000,000 in wages. The loss to the operators during the five months shutdown is placed at $15,000,000. The annual production of coal in Illinois amounts to 50,000,000 tons and the shortage this year due to the strike will be in the neighborhood of 20,000,000 tons.

Governor Hadley paroled Louis Decker, of St. Louis, from the penitentiary, where he served eighteen months of a five-year sentence for bribery. He was a member of the St. Louis house of delegates and was caught in the boodle crusade. Decker weighs more than 400 pounds and was never inside of a cell in the penitentiary, because the doors are too narrow. He slept in the guardhouse. His size prevented him from working at a regular trade.

Miss Helen Dutrieu, the French aviatoress, established a new record for women pilots in distance and altitude with a passenger. With a companion in her aeroplane, Miss Dutrieu flew from Ostend to Burges and return, a total distance of about 28 miles.

A romantic courtship lasting six weeks reached a climax at Milan, Tenn., when 19-year-old Henry Johnson, of Memphis, took as his bride Mrs. Aleck McDonald, 65 years old. Johnson conducted his courtship. It is said, with such vigor that he gained the consent of his aged bride to an early marriage, which was solemnized Wednesday. The bride has been a widow ten years.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES

Little Michael Schmeca, the three-year-old son of Dr. Michael Schmeca, a prominent Italian physician of New York, is safely in the hands of his relatives after having been held for nearly 3 months a captive by "Black Hand" kidnapers. The abductors of the boy have so far escaped the police dragnet.

Oscar E. Eason, a young man employed at the new dam being built across the Chattahoochee river at Goat Rock, north of Columbus, met death in a peculiar manner. While he was on the works a plank flew against his head, breaking his neck, and pinning him to the timbers, his body being suspended above the water; when the plank moved his body fell into the wter, nd it was carried down stream a hundred feet where it was subsequently recovered.

Renewing an old feud after they had shaken hands and agreed to be friends, Joseph Villines and L. Walker, both about 62 years old, opened hostilities at a public speaking at Baxley, Newton county, Ark., with the result that Walker is dead; the sheriff of the county, who tried to part them, was severely cut, and three sons of Villines received knife wounds.

S. F. Innes, a well known shoe merchant of Charleston, S. C., shot and killed himself in his room at the Hoffman house in New York. The merchant was discovered lying in bed with a bullet wound in the side of his head. A revolver lay nearby. Mr. Innes came here from Charleston to undergo an X-Ray examination for what was said to be a minor affection. The merchant left no notes to indicate the reason for his act.

Frank Osborne, of Whippany, N. J., will lose the sight of his right eye as the result of an accidental encounter with a hatpin. Osborne was adjusting the hatpin for his wife when it slipped, the sharp end piercing his eyeball.

Gen. W. C. Oates died at Montgomery, Ala. He was formerly governor of Alabama, a Confederate veteran and a brigadier-general in the Spanish American war. For many years General Oates served in congress and there made quite a name for himself as one who always served his country to the best of his ability.

Captain Frank P. O'Brien, mayor of Birmingham, Ala., died suddenly in the Bryn infirmary in Baltimore. He was taken there several weeks ago for treatment. He was suffering from insomnia and other nervous troubles while the incumbent mayor and sought relief in the east. He served in the Confederate army during the Civil war. He was born in Ireland 69 years ago.

Ralph, the 5-year-old son of N. B. Moore, at Plainville, six miles north of Rome, Ga., had both feet chopped off by a mowing machine Thursday morning. The boy is in a local hospital and is not expected to recover.

Miss Cora Peavy, aged 20 years, of 17 Holderness street, accidently plunged through four stories in the elevator shaft of the Lamar-Rankin Drug Company building, 26 Central avenue, Atlanta, Ga., and died four hours later from her injuries. Miss Peavy was the sister of Arthur Peavy, the young carpenter, who on July 20, was dashed to death in a ten-story fall from the top of the Forsyth theatre building, in the same city.

The Southern Railway passenger train leaving Knoxville for Cincinnati, ran into an open switch east of Laurel and the locomotive and two cars were derailed and three persons injured. Charles Moore, fireman, of Knoxville, side hurt; J. D. McCracken, of Harriman, a passenger, leg hurt; R. L. Crawford, of Powell Station, side hurt.

Henry Peterson, able seaman on board the schooner Charles Nelson, sacrificed three toes and probably saved the ship and his mates from instant destruction a Seattle, Wash. A box containing 100 one pound sticks of dynamite was poised ten feet above the deck when the sling began to slip. Peterson, who was waiting on the deck, stuck out his foot and broke the fall. His foot was badly crushed and three of his toes are so mangled that they will have to be amputated.

D. J. Shea, foreman of a steel gang for a lumber company, jumped from a second story window at Mobile, Ala., receiving injuries from which he died shortly afterward. He knelt and prayed, and asked a friend to call a police just before he made the leap.

Two persons were killed, 15 seriously injured, five perhaps fatally, and 20 others suffered minor injuries in the wreck of an eastbound Burlington train on the Great Northern at Coram, 30 miles east of Kalispell, Mont. The train was en route from Seattle to Kansas City.

Pursued by his two sisters, with whom he had quarreled, Charles Young, a silversmith, rushed to the roof of a five-story tenament in New York and jumped to the street in sight of 500 persons. He was instantly killed.

W. I. Horning, after shooting a steer in the head near Savannah, Ga., rushed to it to cut its throat. He had a long butcher knife in his back pocket and as he reached the steer's head he fell, the knife piercing his body. It is feared he will die.

FROM FOREIGN LANDS

The century-old fisheries dispute, the source of constant diplomatic friction between the government of the United States, Great Britain, Canada and Newfoundland, was closed at The Hague with the award of the international court of arbitration. The award was largely in favor of the United States.

The German army officer who was arrested at Portsmouth, Eng., while engaged in sketching the fortifications there is detained at Fort Purbrook. The man's name is supposed to be Elmer and he is connected with the construction division of the German land forces. Documents found upon the alleged spy are said to include sketches of the forts all along the hill's. The papers have been dispatched to the war office.

George Chaves, the Peruvian aviator, broke the world's record for height at Paris, France, rising in a monoplane 8,792 feet. The best previous record was made by Leon Morane, whose mark was 9,471, made on September 3, at Deauville. Chaves, who is a young Peruvian, used a new racing Bleriot machine equipped with a 50-horse power Gnome motor. He intends to enter the cross-the-Alps race with this machine.

The two dirigible balloons used for aerial scout duty by the opposing armies in the imperial maneuvers, failed greviously at Preussich, Hoffland, one crew leading its army into an ambuscade, while the other crew fell into the hands of the enemy when the motor of its machine gave out. The invading army triumphed.

At the resumption Friday in London of the trial of Dr. Hawley H. Crippen and Ethel Clare Leneve for the murder of the former's wife, Public Prosecuter Humphfers introduced evidence to establish the claim of the crown that the parts of the mutilated body found in the Crippen house cellar formed a part of the person of Belle Elmore, the missing wife, and to corroborate what has been popularly regarded as the missing link in the chain of circumstantial evidence against the accused.

BOXES FOR THE BRIDE'S CAKE

Some in All Shapes and Sizes, and Practically at Any Cost to Suit.

The statement that it is not what is done, but how it is done, that counts, verges on the trite; but it is particularly applicable to the little things that contribute toward a pleasant time for wedding guests.

A wedding cake is no longer kept for weeks and weeks; it is cut into little pieces and sent or presented to the guests and friends of the happy pair. Just how to give this in an attractive form is sometimes a question that clamors for its answer in the rush of the last few days.

Boxes can now be purchased at stationery departments of any large store and the accessories are within the reach of the majority of brides.

There is a charming little circular box that looks like a miniature wedding cake. When tied with white ribbon or with the silken cords that reflect the color scheme of the decorations it is well worth having. The ends of the bow are gathered into the tops of tiny silver bells.

Perhaps the heart-shaped box of white is more appropriate. This should hold a heart-shaped piece of cake, and the top of the box should be tied down with broad ribbon, fastened under a rosette. Square forms are always good. The addition of a card with the best wishes of the bride and bridegroom is a little personal touch that is well worth while. Through the knot of ribbon a spray of asparagus fern can be slipped. It lasts for weeks and gives the freshness that is desirable, especially for boxes that are to be sent away through the mail.

To the friends who are present there can easily be given a spray of leaves with a blossom from the decoration of the table or rooms. Tied with a gold or silver cord, a long, narrow box will hold a fresh sprig of flowers. People like to carry with them some part of the festivities. The mania for souvenirs still prevails.

Of course, the custom of having the cake cut by the bride herself can be easily observed, for during the reception following the small pieces can be boxed and tied by a special committee of friends and distributed to the guests before their departure.

As to the dreams that may come when the fair recipients sleep with the bride's cake beneath their pillows, who can tell whether they can vie with the pleasure of receiving it in so charming a form?

Fish That Carry Candles.

Some of the fish found at a depth of about ten thousand feet by a German deepsea expedition, resembled the fossil species in the rocks of the Mesozoic era, when the earth's atmosphere was dense with carbon. There fish in many cases had special means of collecting light. Some possessed enormous eyes occupying nearly the whole side of the head and some were supplied with telescopic organs. Others carried their light on their heads in a manner similar to that of the glow worm.

The best kind of a flannel for a fomentation is a piece of soft old blanket, old flannel answering better than new. Remember always to dry the patient's skin carefully after removing one fomentation and before putting on the next.

A cooked potato is excellent as a means of cleaning and whitening the hands. The potato should be cut in half and rubbed over the backs and fingers after they have been soaked for a minute or two in warm water. Potato should be used in this manner instead of soap.

If the hands should have become much stained with ink they should be rubbed with lemon juice. Should this fail to remove the stains a good plan is that of adding a little pearl ash to water and dipping the hands in the solution, rubbing them well with a piece of flannel until the marks have disappeared. Care must be taken to avoid washing them with soap for some time afterward or the spots will reappear.

A good toilet water for summer use can be made at home of an ounce of glycerin, 19 ounces of orange-flower water and a quarter of an ounce of powdered borax. This is simply mixed by pouring the ingredients into a bottle so that it is only three parts full, and then shaking it well. A little applied to the face and hands will prevent a shiny appearance in hot weather and will not injure the pores like powder.

Crocheted Whip for Baby.

Girls who can crochet or knit will find a whip made of this handiwork an attractive gift for a baby. The innermost part is a soft whip. This is wound around with cotton batting and then bound with a cord so that it is securely covered. Then a case for it is crocheted or knit and put on with a tassel to finish the pointed end, securely fastened on so that if the child tries to put the whip in somebody's eyes it will not do any more harm than a soft handkerchief. Bells are fastened on the whip part way up, and on the handle end there is a loop.

The whip must be so soft everywhere that it cannot possibly do any harm. It may be given separately or with a set of crocheted or knitted reins.

Russian Braid.

Coarse Russian braid is used a great deal for trimming coats and capes.

Rights.

The American people undoubtedly are entitled to a great many rights, and if the truth were known it would show these rights to be worth having. But the trouble with these rights is that they are never around when they are needed. They are either in cold storage or in safe-deposit boxes or in litigation or in some ward-heeler's vest pocket. Inaccessible rights are worse than no rights at all.—Life.

Brown Took No Chances.

In a Scottish village a farm laborer named Bill Brown lost his wife. Whilst on her death-bed she implored him to never marry again after she was gone; furthermore, should he do so she would scratch through the ground and come back to punish him. The threat apparently had due effects for some months, the widower rejecting many tempting offers. After a time, however, the village got to whispering about Bill being seen walking with a certain lass. Met one day by a relative of the wife, he asked if there was any truth in the rumor that was about the village, to which he replied in the affirmative.

"Are ye no afraid of poor Mary's threat?" queried the relative.

"Nae fear o' that, my lad. I took good care to hae her berrit face downwards, so the mair she scratches the farther she'll gang doon."

MASSAGING THE EYEBROW

Care of the Face and Hints of Little Avail If This Important Feature Is Neglected.

Women are beginning to realize the importance of beautifying their eyebrows and understand how that to manicure the nails and massage the face for youthfulness avail little if such important features as brows are neglected.

Massaging the brows and applying tonics must be in the daily routine of most women, and those to whom nature has given pretty shaped brows must take care of them.

In care of the brows there must be a special brush. One with bristles no stiffer than those used on a young baby's head is the kind. When the brows are luxuriant and sufficiently dark in color, it behooves a woman to keep them so. Morning and night she should put a drop of sweet almond oil or glycerin on her finger tip and rub the finger over one brow, repeating the application for the other. Then she should stroke them for two or three minutes with the brush. This treatment nourishes the hair follicles, just as the scalp is toned by similar applications, and brushing of course acts as it would on the hair on the head. It may be worth while to state that without this treatment brows which are black and pretty may be gray and wiry at the age of fifty.

I know one girl who improved her eyebrows by using a paste made from the yolk of eggs and sulphur, to which she added a few drops of sweet almond oil. This paste she made from a teaspoonful of the raw yolk and into which she put powdered sulphur, as much as a small pea. A teaspoonful of sweet almond oil, stirred in drop by drop, made the paste thin, and this she spread on her brows every night. The paste must be kept in the refrigerator when not in use, for the keeping properties of egg are delicate. In the morning the girl massaged her eyebrows with almond oil, the rubbing consisting of stroking the hair over and over again with an oily finger. The strokes were made the same way, that in which the hair should grow. This oil was finally wiped off.

When brows are so long they are unruly it is not wise to clip them, for by cutting the hairs develop the quality of bristles. At night they should be pasted to the head with gum arabic or bandoline. Such a sticky paste can be made from two tablespoonfuls of quince seed gently simmered in a pint of water for three-quarters of an hour. When cold the liquid will be sticky. This mixture should be strained while hot. It is stroked on the brows while the unruly hairs are held in the line they should stay in until dry. A few weeks of such treatment will make the face more attractive and the brows will not grow bushy.

SIMPLE AND STYLISH

Here is a simple costume in a style suitable for serge, tweed or cloth; the skirt is laid in flat plaits turning from the front.

The semifitting jacket has a velvet collar, and revers that are faced with striped silk.

Coarse straw hat trimmed with velvet.

Materials required for the costume: 6 yards 46 inches wide, 4½ yards lining silk for jacket, ¼ yard velvet for facing collar, ½ yard silk for revers and cuffs.

Odds and Ends.

The ruchings of matlines that come ready for hat trimming will aid the home milliner. The ruching is known by the name of chantecler and comes in a combination of colorings such as green, blue and mauve, cherry color, white and black, gray and cerise, brown and blonde, as well as plain colors.

Another novelty is the quill decorated with a narrow valenciennes lace edging. Strips of the lace run the entire length of the quill, the edges of lace and quill being even.

About half an inch of the quill shows on either side of the stem. This is an excellent way to make old quills look like new.

Breaded Baked Eggs.

These delicacies are liked by almost all children old enough to eat them, and if there is any objection to the bread the eggs can be prepared without it. Boil the eggs that will be needed until sure they will be hard and mealy. Leave them for half an hour in cold water, then peel and cut in lengthwise slices. Scoop out the yolks and work them to a paste with olive oil or a little sour cream; add salt and a squeeze of lemon juice and then put in enough toasted crumbs, finely powdered, to make a mixture dry enough to pick up in the fingers. Stuff this in the white shells, cover each one with a sprinkle of crumbs and set in the ice box until needed. At the utmost two halves—a single egg—is enough for an eight-year-old stomach, for these eggs are very substantial.

Conscience Stricken Regularly.

Uncle Sam has acquired a second regular contributor to the conscience fund. On the first of every third month for the past year the treasurer has received a check for $30. It always is accompanied by a brief statement that it is the return of a pension received by an undeserving man.

For many years a man with a tender conscience residing at Annapolis, Md., has regularly turned into the treasury his monthly pension. The name of the man is not known outside of three or four persons. But he has been a regular contributor for many years.

Dropsy—
Given up by Doctor

"I had dropsy, and was told by my family physician that there was no chance for me. My family also gave me up. My limbs and body were swollen one-third larger than natural, water collected around my heart and I had to be propped up in bed to keep from smothering. I took Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy until I was entirely cured. This was in 1902, and I am now able to do any kind of work on my farm. My cure was certainly marvelous."

L. TURLEY CURD,
Wilmore, Ky.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy has been wonderfully successful in relieving heart trouble. Its tonic effect upon the heart nerves and muscles is a great factor in assisting nature to overcome heart weakness.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is sold by all druggists. If the first bottle does not benefit, your druggist will return your money.

We cannot help ourselves, the rules of the post office are not to be trifled with.

Ex-Governor W. C. Oates died at his home in Montgomery last Friday, after a long and useful life in the service of his state and country. A gallant Confederate soldier, a fine statesman and lawyer has passed away, leaving a record much to be envied.

Alabama suffered another loss last Friday, in the death of Capt. Frank P. O'Brien, mayor of Birmingham, who died in a sanitarium at Philadelphia, where he had gone in hopes of improving his health He was one of the pioneer citizens of Birmingham and had been a great factor in the upbuilding of that city.

Some of the older inhabitants of Clanton will remember John C. Lawrence, who, with his brother. Hayward, conducted the Chilton View, rather more than twenty years ago. With regret we learn that Mr. John Lawrence came to his death at Lanton, Okla., where he removed about two years ago, from a self-inflicted pistol shot, dying almost immediately. Mr. Lawrence was a pleasant gentleman, well known throughout Alabama, and his untimely death is much regretted.

A GOOD POSITION.

Can be had by ambitious young men and ladies in the field of "Wireless" or Railway telegraphy. Since the 8 hour law became effective, and since the Wireless companies are establishing stations throughout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. Positions pay beginners from $70 to $90 per month, with good chance of advancement. The National Telegraph Institute operates six official institutes in America, under supervision of R. R. and Wireless Officials and places all graduates into positions. It will pay you to write them for full details at Memphis, Tenn., or Columbia, S. C.

For a mouth before marriage and a mouth after death. a man regards his wife as an angel.

Some women kiss their pug dogs in preference to their husban; some men are borned lucky.

Any man can make at least one woman happy for life. All he has to do is to remain a bachelor.

A man may not have a single reason for refusing to join a club—but he may have a married one.

The man who believes only half that he hears generally gets along all right if he happens to select the right half.

To call on a friend and find a bent pin on your chair, is a sine that there is a small boy in the family.

Alabama State Fair.

Superintendant W. E. Mathews of the live stock department of the Alabama State Fair declared in an interview Monday that his department of the Fair this year will be longer and more interesting than at any previous fair. "I have received success," said he, "from enough exhibitors to insure the success of my department even though half of them should fail to carry out their promises to show.

"I can not give out a list of my prospective exhibitors because cattle and stock people are very peculiar. They never want the fact that they will be at any fair made known until they are on the grounds and their stock in place. This is a peculiar phase of the stockman's character over which I have puzzled many times. I have never found a satisfactory reason for it.

"Unwittingly this oddity of the stockman's character works for the good of a fair. For instance many of my prospective exhibitors are of such repute that if the fact that they will be at the fair became known it would keep many smaller exhibitors away and the fair would be the loser thereby.

Mr. Mathews has been a dairyman and a breeder of blooded stock for a life time. At one time he owned the only herd of thoroughbred jersey cows south of the Ohio river. At the World's fair in Chicargo in 1895 he carried off a Worlds record, he having exhibited there the largest herd of dairy jersey cows of any other exhibitor.

An unusual fact about Mr. Mathews is that although a dairyman by proffession he can not coax the milk from the udder of his own or any other cow.

A Wedding Feast

By Martha McCulloch-Williams

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.)

Peter Winboro, actor and gentleman, tapped rather hesitantly upon the door of his next neighbor, Natalie Peyton. For three months they had been harbored in Mrs. Jones' severely respectable lodging house, Natalie in the hallroom front, Winboro in the bigger chamber adjoining. Since their first meeting he had given the girl a respectful salutation at each encounter. She had answered with a nod, a smile and murmured word; nothing more. But somehow his days had been the brighter for them. It had hardly gone beyond that. Once he had ventured to lay a magazine at her door; once, also, she had sewed up deftly an untimely and annoying rent for him. He had got it carelessly just as he was starting out, and already late, so the kindness had been as real as it was trivial.

He had meant to return it in the shape of a matinee ticket. But he had found out that Miss Peyton was at work every day—their encounterings had been as she came in from the shop, and he went out to dine before the theater. The shop was a bedizened place on the avenue—Peter did not know it—where fine hand-sewn custom lingerie was made. But wages were not at all proportionate to prices, so when the slack season came and there was work only for the regulars, Natalie, new to the city last autumn, found herself idle, with no friends, faint prospects and a scant hoard of money.

Winboro had somehow sensed the situation—helped, perhaps, by hearing her move about her room in daylight. Her face, too, had a subtly terrified look, though she held herself straighter than ever, and smiled as brightly at him. "She's game—as game as she's good," he told himself upon a certain bright Sunday afternoon. "Hanged if I don't chuck the Blenton crush, and take her for a walk—and to dinner afterward."

Youth loves company the same as misery. Natalie, young and miserable, went without demur, though she had been bred to the strictest social observances. Neither did she balk at the suggestion of dinner.

"It's a risk—I am truly frightfully hungry," she warned him, with a smile that was piteously brave.

It was memory of the smile that emboldened him, as they sat over their coffee in a quiet place, yet still far from cheap, to say, lightly touching her free hand: "Why don't you get out of all this? You don't in the least belong."

"How do you know I could get out of it?" Natalie parried.

Winboro smiled softly and flicked the ash from his cigar. Finding him silent the girl went on: "I haven't run away from adoring parents—only from a stepuncle and—well, Aunt Mary—and John—"

"I see," Winboro interrupted. "John—now, tell me all about him."

"I can't. There's nothing to tell—if there were—" Natalie cried, stopping short with a vivid blush that made Winboro smile again and shake his head.

"You'll never in the world make an actress," he said. "Those eyes of yours can tell only the truth. John is hasty—foolishly hasty. He wants to marry you out of hand. When you want to find the great adventure?"

"How do you know?" Natalie again demanded.

Winboro looked straight into her eyes, his own kindling. "I have been young—now I am—aging, if not old," he said. "Still, I have not forgotten the deliciousness of—folly. In your case—I wonder is it only folly, or some big hulking fellow six feet high, a regular football hero?"

"I—I—hate you. Take me home! At once!" Natalie said imperiously.

Winboro looked at her, his breath coming quicker. "I'm corry for John," he said. "So sorry you must listen to a little more."

"Well!" Natalie breathed rather than said, settling back to place. Winboro's face darkened.

"You know about the Minotaur—the fabled monster that devoured yearly virgins in thousands!" he asked abruptly, then waiting for no reply he ran on: "The most of life is in the fable—only we mortals refuse to understand. So our yearly sacrifices mount up almost to millions—and some heartaches for every one of the victims, involuntary victims mostly—there's the real pity of it. How much money is there tonight betwixt you and starvation?"

"You have no right to ask—to speak to me so," Natalie cried, making to rise, though she trembled violently.

Winboro smiled grimly. "I could guess," he said. "Severe respectability is costly—and you have laid up—let me see—possibly two dollars weekly—"

"Whether or no I have, I shall not tax—anybody's charity," Natalie said rising, her head very high, her eyes lambent.

Winboro also rose. "No; you would starve as becomes a gentlewoman," he said. "But you shall not—I will see to that—whether or no you like it. I'm your fairy godfather."

They went home in silence, Winboro torn by conflicting impulses. He was indeed aging—he had next to no money, and but dim prospects in a most uncertain profession. The same delicate tastes that so hampered Natalie were also among his inheritances. They had hampered him too—made him squeamish and finical in many ways—especially over things that other men held good business. The girl beside him deserved infinitely more of Fate than he could promise any woman. He must dragoon her, if needs be, back to the shelter and comfort of this half-confessed John—and pray that she might live happy ever after.

Yet—at her door, he kissed her, lightly upon the cheek, rushing away without a word. He hardly slept that night, but dawn brought heavy slumber. A light tap roused him from it around 11 o'clock, and Natalie's voice called:

"Come in! Quick! I want to show you something."

Half an hour later he stood staring open-eyed at cake, unmistakable country wedding cake, rich and sweet, and light as a feather, iced half an inch thick, in generous slices, in wedges, in half-loafs. Tarts likewise, and small fancifully ornamented cakes. Natalie beamed above the array, flourishing in her right hand wedding cards.

"John's," she explained succinctly. "Oh, I'm so glad. The best fellow in the world—but nothing else. If he had had a thimbleful of personality, I could never have said 'No.' All of them were so anxious to have us marry each other—indeed, Aunt Mary said she had raised me on purpose, so her best things would have the right care. But now—she's quite reconciled, and John happy as the day is long—"

"He was probably caught in the rebound," Winboro interrupted.

Natalie laughed softly. "I don't know," she said. "What I do know is—Aunt Mary wanted to send for me, but the bride forbade. You ought to see the apologies; I mustn't be hurt, but must come home and stay always if I choose—and it's such a shame to send me so little, but there was no bigger box candy—and ever so much more."

"No wonder you are consoled," Winboro said, possessing himself, uninvited, of a specially tempting slice of cake.

Natalie shook her head at him, saying, "This puts off the starving by at least a week—and maybe I shall find work again—but it must be rough on you, you had such a fine scheme of philanthropy all ready to put in execution."

"No, it only makes possible the execution of a finer scheme," Winboro said composedly. "Only this time the beneficiary is myself."

"Indeed? Tell me about it," Natalie said, crunching a tart as she spoke.

Winboro drew a deep breath. "The wedding feast is spread, the bridegroom ready," he said. "Don't you think you might be persuaded to act as bride?"

Natalie's answer is immaterial. Suffice it, that within a week the May family at Hazlehill farm were astonished and delighted to receive the wedding cards of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Winboro.

Warden Not Much for Changes.

When George J. Warden took his manufacturing business to a new location recently it was a noteworthy thing for him to do. For Warden is about as little addicted to making changes as any man in Cleveland. He himself was speaking of this fact a day or two ago.

"I lived more than 36 years in the same house on old Perry street, he remarked, "and for 42 years I took milk from the same family, never missing a day. Then, for 31 years I was shaved by the same man in the same shop.

"Our family began taking milk from Mr. Schurmer, a farmer out Strongsville way, about fifty years ago. When he died we bought milk from his sons and for 42 years we got milk from them without missing a single day. Eight years ago a man by the name of Shuman bought out their milk business and we have been taking milk of him ever since. So you could almost say that I've been getting milk from the same place for an even half century."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Boll Weevil Enters Alabama.

The Mexican cotton boll weevil spreads almost entirely by flight. The movement each year begins about August 15th and may continue until well into November if atmospheric conditions are favorable. Early in the season while cotton squares are abundant, the weevils seem satisfied to feed and to reproduce in the field which they first enter in the spring or in which they develop. But when the crop begins to mature, so the squares become scarce, or if all the squares in the field become infested by the weevil, they seem then to develop a strong tendency to fly in search of fresh unfested cotton. On warm, sultry days particularly, the weevil fly very freely and may cover long distances. Flight may be in any direction but only that toward new territory can be detected. For this reason, the annual spread of the weevil seems to be very much in the nature of an overflow and this overflow has averaged about fifty miles per year since the weevil entered southern Texas. The spread through southern Mississippi in the fall of 1909 covered a wider area than any previously known, extending over about 125 miles and bringing the weevil to within a few miles of the eastern Mississippi line in Jackson County.

Those who are familiar with the habits of the weevil have been expecting the insect to invade Alabama duaing the present season. Newspaper reports of its occurancy in various parts of the state have been investigated and invariable found to depend upon the occurence of some other insect which has been mistakes for the boll weevil. In the southwest corner of the state which was very certain to be the first portion infested. Examinations were made at a number of points in Mobile county. The eastern most point at which weevils were found was at Wilmer, Mobile County, on Sept. 3, within about 4 miles of the Mississippi line. No trace of the weevil could be found as far north as Citronelle or even at Semmes, which is 7 miles south east from Wilmer. This is the first time that the weevil has been found breeding in this state and the occurrence is notable for that reason. The weevil producing the infestation found entered the Wilmer fields about August 20, as is known by the age of the immature stages taken in squares and bolls. The advance of the weevil may continue until some time in November. It is likely that the line of infestation may then extend into several of the western tier of Alabama counties.

These weevils will do practically no damage to the crop of the present season but finding squares and bolls in which they may reproduce, they will become est ished, pass throungn the winter, and be ready for the crop for 1910 an. Plate s living in or near the weevil infested area, should by all means begin immediately to adopt the methods of raising cotton which have been found most effective in previously infested states in securing good results in spite of the presence of the weevil. The whole system of fighting the weevil is based upon the idea of avoiding or preventing injury rather than to depend upon the destruction of the weevil after the damage has been done. Various steps in the progress of fighting the weevil will be made public from time to time in the column of the state press. Watch for these articles or send your name and address to the Experiment Station at Auburn, from which place they may be obtained free. Specimens suspected of being the boll weevil should be referred to the Experiment Station at Auborn for identification and information in regard to such specimens may be had for the asking.

Liver Trouble Remedy Free

Any intelligent person can be his own doctor in the ordinary case of liver trouble, for the symptoms cannot be mistaken. If the white of the eye becomes yellowish, if the skin becomes sallow, if pimples and blotches appear, if the bowels do not move, if you have sick headache, if you are bilious, you may be sure that your liver is torpid or inactive.

The quickest and surest remedy yet found for the cure of liver trouble or any of its symptoms is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the great herb laxative compound. This wonderful remedy is not only a laxative, but a tonic as well. It will start the flow of gastric juice, thereby soon enabling the liver to do its work naturally. A bottle of this great liver remedy can be bought of any druggist for 50 cents or $1, and in many cases a single bottle has cured a chronic case.

For example, John W. Lee, 615 S. Pennsylvania, ave., Indianapolis, Ind., had a stubborn and very long-standing case of liver trouble, with pimples, blotches, jaundice, etc., and it cured him. Mrs. B. Flinchum, Jackson, Ky., says the same of it. Thousands of families keep it in the house against just such an emergency, as you can never tell when some member of the family will need a good laxative.

In order to have you or any other sufferer from the liver make a test of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin without personal expense, Dr. Caldwell will send you a free test bottle if you will send your name and address. The sample will show you how pleasant it is to take, how gently it works. It will start you on the cure of your trouble and convince you that you have found a cure. That is the object of the sample, and the doctor urges you to send for it today.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Sheep Parasites.

Internal parasites are the worst enemies of sheep, and the stomach worm is perhaps the worst of these. Any ground long pastured with infested sheep will become infested with these parasites. Prevention is better than a cure. Change pastures often, and pasture as much as possible in stubble fields and other fields that have been in cultivation. Especially pasture the ewes and lambs in clean pasture. in the fields that have been cultivated the parasites have been killed off.

Cultivate Rose Bushes.

When the rose bushes are in the soil and have started growth, give them good, clean cultivation during the summer to keep the surface soil worked fine with a rake, or mulch the soil with lawn clippings or other litter to hold moisture in the soil and to keep the roots of the bushes cool.

A Tested Womans' Remedy.

If you are despondent and have its of nervousness; if your sweet little children annoy you; if you feel that your friends are neglecting you; dark rings under the eyes, hysterical, headache, constication, pains above the pelvic bone across the lower bowels and about the kidneys—it indicates that you need a female remedy such as VIN-O-VITÆ. It builds up diseased tissue, strengthen the womb and appendages, and by it's fine tonic properties gives women perfect health. Try it and be convinced. Druggists sell it at $1 per bottle. ALLIES OF FARMERS' UNION

Public Meetings Do Much Good for Members of Organization and Those on Outside.

The season for the summer rallies the Farmers' Union has almost ushered us. These open public meet- of the union men have done much good, both to the members of union and to those on the outside, Hon. L. W. Jarman in Southern Cul- tor. We would speak a word in behalf of these educational and social gatherings, that they be not neglected the farmers this year. By all means every county union should have day of meeting every summer, when every farmer or any of the farmers' friends should be invited to meet to- gether, and to discuss the vital prob- lems relating to the welfare of farms and farmers.

In the past these rallies as they are generally called have done much toward the extension of the union's business. It is here that the world has had the opportunity to come into close contact with the Farmers' Union workings, and learn something of its methods, its aims, its ideals. In many cases this association of non- union men with their friends of the union has been conducive of good to both sides. There mutual need the help of the other, is often brought clearly to view in these meetings; many good men learn enough of the principles of the union to lead them to unite with the union.

The social feature of these gather- ings is likewise important. We farm- ers have few enough social opportun- ities. Opportunities to meet with our friends in a social way. These sum- mer gatherings afford an excellent means of bringing together our friends and families. Thus the different parts of a county become better acquainted; the influence of which may be far reaching. Adjoining counties are often brought more closely into touch, new friendship made, and old ones re- newed at these meetings. Surely the leaders will continue these most en- joyable occasions.

One suggestion. At these meetings we must take care that we have some one around men to address the people on topics of importance to the farm- ers. We must not be content with some two- or three-cent scratching that may have been picked from somewhere, whose only merit is the fact that he repre- sents the Farmers' Union, coupled perhaps with the fact that he knows how to raise certain union men and how to work, and shout allegiance to the union. Instead of to the union. Get the very best timber to be had. Good men men who know things, and are known should be invited to address the meetings regardless of the fact that they may not be members of the union. Don't hesitate to go down deep in your pockets to pay the expenses of a man of worth and of note to any reasonable distance to be with you. Call on your agricultural schools and colleges, your experiment stations, or any one you will to fur- nish you with the best to be had in the way of encouragement and infor- mation. These rallies, properly used, will do a great deal for the union. Don't give them up.

Clay Soil for Tomatoes.

Tomatoes are grown with entire suc- cess on all types of soils. The sandy loams are considered superior and the earliest varieties such soils produce the finer fruit. Clay soils, however, are favorable to large yields, and if earliness is not a consideration the crop may be entirely satisfactory.

LIVING IN CO-OPERATIVE AGE

Thousands of Ways in Which Farmer Can Be Benefited by Forming Local Organizations.

We are living in an age of co-operation and it is beneficial so long as its legitimate functions are adhered to. All trades and professions are more inclined to the co-operative idea than farming and there is where the knight of the soil makes a mistake. There are a thousand ways in which farmers can be benefited by forming local co-operative associations, concerning a given territory, and holding meetings at stipulated times, not too far apart, says Farm and Orchard. The farmer is penny wise and pound foolish who is not willing to leave his field a half day occasionally to mingle and ex- change ideas with his fellows.

Smith, Jones and Brown each needs a harvester. Three machines can be bought proportionately cheaper than one and the transportation charges will also be less. Each may have for sale a small crop of wheat. The quan- tity owned by one is not sufficient to justify looking for the best market advantages, but put the three crops to- gether and they can be marketed jointly to the benefit of all three and with no more effort than would be re- quired to dispose of the holdings of one. The same holds good in the pur- chase of all kinds of seeds, fertilizers, live stock and farm implements of all kinds, as well as in the marketing of everything produced on the farm. There are different pieces of ma- chinery that might be owned and used jointly by farmers and in that way represent but a small outlay by each.

There is no subject in which farm- ers and rural dwellers generally should be more interested than in the construction and maintenance of good roads. Take a road over which one ton only can be hauled to market with a two-horse team, improve it so as to be able to haul two tons with the same team, and the distance to mar- ket has been reduced by one-half. The extra tax required for road improve- ment is a mere bagatelle compared to the advantages the good roads will afford.

The feeders of public roads are pri- vate roads, and several farmers may often use and enjoy the same private right of way and keep it in repair at their joint expense. Aside from all the considerations sounding in dol- lars and cents, it is the pleasure of so- cial intercourse and personal friend- ship resulting from it in the country in the coming together of men for one common purpose. The selfish, narrow-minded individual who wants to live entirely to himself and for himself is a curse to himself, and to the whole human family.

Phone Sensitiveness.

Preece has calculated that an au- dible sound is produced in a telephone by a current of 6 to 10.13 ampheres, and Pellat has calculated that a sound is produced by a difference of poten- tial between the two station amount- ing to only one two-thousandth volt. These statements give sme idea of the great sensitiveness of the modern tel- ephone, but the sensitiveness of the human ear; which perceives the in- visible vibration of the telephone dia- phragm, is no less remarkable.

Rhodesia Diamond Industry.

New life appears to have come again into the diamond industry at Rietfontein, Rhodesia, on the Vry- burg-Kuruman border. Only recently 38 carats of diamonds were taken out of a small hole of 15 feet square by 9 feet deep. The diamonds are of fairly good quality, and were sold for $775. The parcel consisted of about fifty diamonds, the largest of which weighed seven carats. In consequence of the discoveries there has been a rush of diggers from the Vaal river.

Rich Indians.

The accumulation in the hands of the government of the money derived from the sale of the big pasture lands is making the Comanches one of the wealthiest tribes of Indians in the southwest. They will probably never be able to come up with the Osages, who have oil and gas royalties to draw on, in addition to their other sources of income, but their income is decided- ly in excess of that enjoyed by most Indians.—Indianapolis News.

Molded His Chin.

Concerning the young king of Spain it is said that when he was a very small boy he was found one day by his attendants standing in front of Velasquez's famous picture of Philip IV. of Spain. The young monarch looked long and earnestly at his an- cestor's portrait, and then he said: "I will have a chin like that." From this instant he set himself the task of daily molding his chin with his hands into the true Bourbon shape, with the result that today his like- ness to Philip is singularly striking.

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 22:15-22, 34-46. Memory verses 37-39.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's."—Matt. 22:21.

TIME.—Tuesday, April 14, A. D. 30. The same day as our last lesson.

PLACE.—The Court of the Temple in Jerusalem.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

The rulers of the Jews had deter- mined on the death of Jesus (Mark 11:18), and were now seeking some way of ensnaring Jesus into expressing opinions which could be used as an accusation for which he could be con- victed in the courts. But by Jesus' an- swers Divine truth was made more clear.

The question was asked by a wily combination of two parties. It was, Is it lawful to give tribute to Caesar, or not? The Pharisees sent their disci- ples, learners, students, who would come as those who wanted to learn, and not as the teachers who, being supposed to know, would appear to be merely wanting to entrap Jesus, "A cunning device." These would repre- sent one side of the question, opposed to paying tribute to Caesar.

"Fierce opposition was offered to the tribute law . . . which was regard- ed as an impiety, inasmuch as no Lord could be recognized but God. . . . Others offered opposition to the legal- ity of the tax, while one leader, Judah of Gamala, associated with a Pharisee named Zadok, formed a party to work solely on this line of attack. Then ven- geance was sworn against whomso- ever should transgress the Mosaic law, and the Zealots were pious assassins who imposed upon themselves the sa- cred obligations of killing all trans- gressors of the law."

The Herodians were adherents of the Herods, who owed what power they possessed to the Roman govern- ment. "They vied with the Sadducees in skepticism, and with the Greeks in licentiousness, pandered to the vice and cruelty of the Herods and truckled to the Romans." These represented the other side of the question, favoring tribute to Caesar, and opposed to the Messianic hopes of the Pharisees.

No matter which side Jesus took it seemed impossible for him not to seri- ously damage his cause. If he decided for either party, the other would be his enemy. He was sailing between Scylla and Charybdis. If he said it was not right to pay taxes, he would be in col- lision with the whole Roman power, which would regard and treat him as a criminal. His career would be ended. If he said it was lawful for the Jews, the great mass of the people would be against him, and he would lose his hold upon them; for they hated the Roman government, and one of the first and greatest things they expected of the Messiah was deliverance from this subjection to a foreign power. "The taxes were a constant cause of revolt."

They say unto him, Caesar's (pronounced Kaisar by Romans and Greeks. It is the German kaiser and Russian czar). "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's." The image and superscription on the coin implied the sovereignty of Caesar. The Jews, by using the coins, in so far were served by the Roman govern- ment. They therefore owed it some service in return. This service was the payment of taxes.

"And unto God the things that are God's." God as your maker, preserver, giver of countless good gifts, one of the choicest of which was the gift of his Son, their Messiah, had a right to claim love and obedience from them.

Christians have to live in countries where the government is not perfect, and it is their duty to be good citizens in them, the best citizens they have. This was one of the ways by which Christianity conquered the Roman em- pire. To have fought the empire with their worldly weapons would have been ruin; as Christ himself said: "For all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. 26:52).

God's image is stamped in the soul of man. It is sometimes soiled in the mire of sin, dimmed by the friction of worldly cares, bent and distorted by wrongs done and wrongs received; but every man was created in the image of God. This makes it possible to be re- stored, to receive the fuller, sweeter, more perfect image of God's holiness.

When Tamerlane was in his wars, one of his captains dug up a great pot of gold, and brought it to him. Tamer- lane asked whether it had his father's stamp upon it; but when he saw it had the Roman stamp, and not his father's, he would not own it.

A lawyer, a scribe, a student and teacher of the law, asked, "Master, which is the great commandment of the law?" Tempting him, testing him to see what kind of an answer the wise teacher would give to one of the stock questions which divided the Jewish teachers into rival schools, for he realized that Jesus had answered wisely the Sadducee's question (Mark).

All we have and are we owe to him; and the only way in which we can make any return is to love him and obey him in love. That is all that is ours to give; to withhold it is unut- terably mean. "The best thing in man is love, and God wants the best." Such love not only honors God, but elevates man. Love is the most ennobling act of the soul; and the nobler and higher the object and the more intense the love, so much the more is the one who thus loves ennobled, purified, enlarged, exalted in nature. In him are found all that ought to move the highest af- fections of man.

NATURE
Needs an Assistant.

"And upon the farmer's bin descent plen- tiful." So more can Nature, alone and un- aided, always perform the enormous tasks that are so often forced upon her.

Nature Needs an Assistant.

Perfect health is the result of study and research. It has taken centuries to under- stand the human body and to find the best conditions and remedies to develop a health- ful equilibrium.

Any one with a sick stomach, sluggish liv- er, bilious, constipated and nervous is not at all likely to regain their health unaided.

Nature Needs an Assistant.

ST. JOSEPH'S Liver Regulator

IS NATURE'S BEST ASSISTANT.

This remedy has proven itself the true and tried friend of the human family by giving prompt relief when taken for Constipation, Indigestion, Biliousness, Dyspepsia, Flat- ulence, Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Colds, Fever and Malaria, and by toning up the liver and digestive system.

It is a pleasant cathartic of great power, and Nature's assistant, in the highest degree. It is made in both liquid and powder form, is pleasant and agreeable to the taste, prompt in action, and leaves no sickening, weaken- ing after effects.

It is an Ideal Liver Medicine.

We have a large number of letters from satisfied patrons who have been benefited and cured by it.

St. Joseph's Liver Regulator is sold by druggists and general merchants, or you can send to us for it. Price, Liquid, 50 cents a bottle. Powders, in tin boxes, 25 cents a box. Sample of powders and booklet sent free on application.

Onion Salad.

When baking new beets allow two extra ones for this salad, as the baked beets has a finer flavor than plain boiled beets. Spiced beets can be used or canned beets, but the baked beets give preference. Cut the beets into quarter-inch slices, then into strips. Cut a medium-sized Spanish onion into quarters, then slices. Scald and drain quickly and while still hot marinate with a spoonful of fresh dressing and let cool. If you have enough tender white celery to make a cupful into dice, add to the beets and onion. Also a tablespoonful of capers or chopped pickles. Season to taste with salt and pepper, mix and mask with a good dressing.

Her "Foolest" Friend.

When Mrs. Lysander John Appleton is in trouble she sends for her foolest friend. And after she has told of her troubles and sighted holes in her straight-front corset, and soaked three or four handkerchiefs, the foolest friend makes a number of fool sug- gestions, not one of which is practical or of any use, after which Mrs. Apple- ton, having sighed and wept to the limit, cheers up. "You are so help- ful," she says to the foolest friend, and then looks around in her cupboard to give the foolest friend something to eat.—Atchison Globe.

The Simplified Check Book.

This is a true story as stories go. There was once a gilded youth who decided to live the simple life. What did he simplify first? His check book. He hit on a plan by which he would just write a note to the bank explain- ing the matter and asking them to send him money and then he would send his valet to the bank with the note and his valet would get the mon- ey and bring it back to him. In that way he would save himself the trouble of drawing checks.

Cold Storage Eggs Best.

Professor Coulter of Minnesota de- clares that cold storage eggs are bet- ter than the so-called fresh variety, because the former are all carefully in- spected and the others are not. He adds that nine out of every ten dozen so-called fresh eggs sold in the stores are more than a year old.

Japanese Is Hardest to Learn.

The Japanese language is claimed to be the hardest of all to learn. Even the Japanese find it hard, and several American army officers have found it impossible to master it. It takes the Japanese child seven years to learn the essential parts of the alphabet, and one must become fa- miliar with 214 signs to learn this simple part of the language alone. The 214 signs serve as the English initial letters in our alphabet. To be able to read any of the higher class of Japanese newspapers one must be the master of from 2,500 to 3,000 ideographs.—Albany Journal.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE FARMERS.

The Chilton County Farmer is fast assuming that place in the economic relations of life which his avocation predestined him to occupy the front rank—a leader among the advance guard. Long faces have been succeeded by smiling countenances and mortgaged homes and farms are soon to become happy firesides and productive fields of pleasure. Hard times have been vanquished and prosperity is victorious.

Contentment, peace and plenty are knocking at every door.

We are now entering upon an era of commercial development never heretofore anticipated; a season of rich rewards for honest toil is now dawning and will soon burst with noonday splendor upon our people.

The farmers are happy as they should be, for mother earth has yielded them rich trophies for their plucking; prices are soaring amid the radiant beauty of the stars; his products are in demand as never before.

Cotton is again King and corn is the Prince Imperial. What more could the planter desire to make his cup of gladness overflow?

The much talked of season of hard times and business depression has failed to arrive; the prophecies of the chronic knocker are wanting in the fulfillment and the dire misfortunes predicted by the ever present calamity howler have died in the borning. Alabama, Chilton county and Clanton, instead of going to the bow-wows, as forecasted by would-be-wise seers, has gone steadily onward upon the road of material development that leads to certain success and abundant prosperity.

We are enjoying the fruits of our labors as never before; the cry of poverty is hushed throughout this heaven-blessed section; on every side is heard the tuneful tones of thrift and prosperity. The frugal farmer will not have to draw upon the store house of the West for his corn supply, for the harvest within our own fields is abundant in the extreme.

The cotton producer is satisfied with the results of his labors and the shining coin which high prices for his staple enables him to secure and jingle in his jeans, not only makes a glad some sound to his ears, but fills his heart with joyful anticipations of a happy Christmas-tide. All things conspire to make his lot a pleasant one indeed.

Desiring to have you make our place headquarters, we have arranged to pay the very top notch for every pound of the fleecy staple brought to our store.

We want to have a hand in your prosperity; we wish to be remembered in your rejoicing.

Come to us with your sample, we will top the market on every occasion; call upon us for your wants, our large and varied stock enables us to meet your every requirement and at prices that will make glad for the visit.

We hate the chronic croker, we despise the knocker and the pessimist. The old world is bright with hope, buoyant with success, happy in plenteous abundance. We want you to know that we rejoice at your season of success, you desire it and we hope you will enjoy it to the fullest extent.

Come to see us your happy faces make us glad indeed.

Come whether you want to buy or sell, both or either or neither. We will be glad to greet you.

We are going to set the gait this year and those who would keep up with us must clip it off at a merry chase.

Cordially yours,

Farmers of Chilton County, we greet you as the two fold keepers and producers of our prosperity. You are they who have produced the wealth of our Country and upon your heads we pour our praises in unstinted measure. You have earned your reward and should enjoy the fruits of your labors.

The Merchant who has bought wisely and well rejoices at your success,

The cotton buyer whose heart beats in unison with your own delight in the oportunity afforded him to give you good prices for your staple; he who would with hold from you the best and highest the market affords is neither a friend to the farmer nor a wise man of business.

We want you to succeed, because in your success we also shall share.

We have bought not stingily but well; we have purchased in keeping with your position and your desire; you want the best, therefore we supplied ourselves with the best that we might accommodate both your taste and your demands.

THE MAN ON THE CORNE

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some Saw Him

Never before in the history Chilton county was such a galaxy oratorical power gathered together in one day as that which assembled at Clanton last Saturday. It was democracy's greatest day, and a big crowd, as many as 3,000 people it is said, were present to listen to the many speakers and also to partake of the barbecue.

Early in the morning they began to come into town, and as the day progressed the crowd thickened.

A brass band from Birmingham played spirited music and much enlivened the occasion.

The barbecue and speaking took place in the shady glades of Kicker grove.

Hon. Tipton Mullins was master of the ceremonies, and in a cheerful and business like manner introduced the several speakers—and there were many. Mr. Mullins, forseeing a big day's work before him did not waste any time in the introductions, and the flood of oratory began.

Hon. Fred L. Blackmon, candidate for congress from this district was first on the list and pitched into the republicans in great style.

Then Hon. Walter D. Seed, candidate for lieutenant-governor, addressed the meeting for about an hour, receiving a hearty welcome.

Next came the hero of the day Hon. Emmett O'Neal, candidate for governor, and he made a stirring speech, which was frequently applauded by the interested listeners who highly appreciated his remarks.

And then a recess was taken and the important part of the barbecue was indulged in, while the band played lively airs, aiding the appetite and the digestions of the participants. The barbecue was done to a turn and many were the encomiums passed upon the management for this part of the entertainment.

After dinner Col. P. G. Bowman made one of his sledge-hammer speeches, hitting out in fine style.

Robert H. Mangum followed with a telling speech, and after him came the genial Reuben F. Kolb, candidate for commissioner of agriculture, and F. Loyd Tate, well known to his hearers.

It was approaching four o'clock before the proceedings brought to a close, it being generally admitted on all hands it was the Democrats' greatest day.

The municipal election at Clanton on Monday resulted in victory for the Potts ticket by a decisive majority, and there is not the slightest doubt but that a majority of the voters voted for "those who have the interest of Clanton at heart." The new administration will not have the profits of a dispensary to use and make a big show, but will doubtless do the very best possible for the town under the circumstances.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

PEOPLES SAVINGS BANK
CLANTON, ALA.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

Reynolds must pay $20,969 60

C. W. Reynolds, who recently failed for nearly thirty thousand dollars, has been ordered by Referee in Bankruptcy Asa E. Stratton, to deliver by September 30th goods, wares, money, merchandise and other property valued at $20,969.60, alleged to belong to his estate.

The order requiring these assets to be turned over to the trustee, George Stuart, was issued by Referee Stratton several days ago, but access to the order could not be had until Tuesday.

The mandate issued by the referee is in the following language:

"The matter of the alleged shortage of the bankrupt herin came on for hearing and determination, and after hearing the evidence, with the report of the experts appointed to examine and audit the books of the said bankrupt, and being fully advised in the premises, it is found that after giving credit to the bankrupt for the sum of $9,229.70 for the goods and other propery turned over by him to the receiver and trustee in bankruptcy, that he is short in the further sum of $20,969-60, which he should have turned over to the trustee, and has failed to do so, and it, therefore appears that C. W. Reynolds, the bankrupt has failed to turn over to his trustee in bankruptcy, George Stuart, of Montgomery, Ala., goods, wares, merchandise, money and other property of the value of $20,-969 60.

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said C. W. Reynolds, the bankrupt herein, turn over and deliver to his said trustee in bankruptcy on or before the 30th day of September, 1910, the goods, wares, merchandise, money and other property of the said value of $20,969.60."

Although the verbiage of this order would indicate, on its face, that it is final, yet it is stated that the decree is not of a final nature, and that the ultimate order will be issued by the referee after the hearing which is scheduled to take place at 10 o'clock on the morning of September 30. At this time Mr. Reynolds will likely file an answer to the court's order.

Notice.

Alpine

On September 3 the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Ousley and took from them their loving little baby. He was only thirteen months old when he was called to go, leaving a father, mother, four brothers, and four sisters and a host of friends to mourn his loss. He was laid to rest in Alpine cemetery. We do not feel that we could say anything that would ease their aching hearts or fill the vacant place, but we can say that he has joined the band of angels and we hope that we shall meet him in the sweet by and by.

OUT OF PEN GAINS SEAT IN CONGRESS

Nomination of Caleb Powers In Kentucky District.

RECEIVED 7,000 MAJORITY

Pardoned for Alleged Complicity in the Famous Goebel Murder. He Defeats Edwards for Seat in the National House of Representatives.

Pleading for votes on account of what he called his eight years of "martyrdom" in jail in connection with the Goebel assassination, Caleb Powers, former secretary of state, has defeated Congressman Ben C. Edwards for the republican nomination for representative from the Eleventh congressional district of Kentucky in a primary election by 7,000 majority.

CALEB POWERS.

At the headquarters of Congressman Edwards in London, Ky., it is conceded that Powers has carried all but four of the nineteen counties which comprise the district. Edwards carried only Laurel, Bull, Pulaski and Perry counties.

Congressman Edwards is serving his third term. Powers, who defeated him for renomination, made his race upon an appeal to the voters of the district to give him the nomination as a "vindication" of his alleged complicity in the assassination of Democratic Governor William Goebel in 1900.

Powers, who was secretary of state at the time of the assassination, was confined in jail during eight years, his first three trials resulting in conviction and the fourth in a disagreement.

Last year Governor Wilson swept the court records clear of all of the cases remaining untried in connection with the Goebel murder by granting pardons to Powers and several others.

CENSUS OF CITIES.

Chicago Ranks as Fourth City in the World in Population.

The population of Chicago is 2,185,283, an increase of 486,708, or 28.7 per cent., as compared with 1,698,575 in 1900.

This leaves Chicago ranking in population as second city of the United States and the fourth of the world.

The population of New Orleans is 339,075, an increase of 51,971, or 18.1 per cent., as compared with 287,104 in 1900.

While New Orleans' growth during the past decade was only slightly below her percentage of increase of the previous decade, the Crescent City, through the more rapid growth of other cities in the 100,000 class, loses its position of twelfth in the list of the country's biggest cities and now occupies fifteenth position. Detroit, with a 63 per cent. increase; Milwaukee, with 31 per cent., and Newark, N. J., with 41.2 per cent., all have jumped ahead of New Orleans in the number of inhabitants, and now occupy twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth positions, respectively.

TO CONTINUE CURTAILMENT.

Present Campaign Will Be Waged Into October, So Manufacturers Say.

As has previously been stated, curtailment among southern mills, both cloth and yarn, at present amounts to at least 50 per cent and has amounted to that much since July 1.

Indications at the present are that this curtailment will be kept up until October, and perhaps later, unless there is improvement in the markets in the meantime.

For a time the cloth business was in better shape than the yarn trade, and curtailment among cloth mills was lighter, but it is said that at present both cloth and yarn mills are cutting down their output at least half.

The action of the Southern Hosiery Yarn Spinners' association, which met in Charlotte, N. C., several days ago, is significant of the general situation in all lines of the cotton manufacturing industry. There were about 400,000 spindles represented at this meeting, and the resolution to continue present curtailment on to October 15, or to such time as is deemed necessary, was unanimously adopted, it is reported.

ULTIMATUM SENT.

European Bankers Reject Validation Plan of American Bankers.

At a conference in London of European bankers interested in the cotton trade, it was decided that they were unable to accept the validation plan submitted by the American Bankers' Association.

The decision was reached after a session of the bankers embodying this decision expressed regret at being unable to regard the American proposal as affording the protection desired by European banks accepting cotton. Consequently, and in default of the production of any other satisfactory plan of guaranteeing American cotton bills of lading, the meeting confirmed the resolution passed by the committee in July. This resolution of the English bankers to the American bankers, declined to accept drafts against bills of lading unless these latter were guaranteed.

The conference is still prepared, however, through its committee, to meet a deputation from the American Bankers' Association in London.

IN UNCLE SAM'S GRASP.

Ex-Official Arrested for Alleged Robbing of Chicago Sub-Treasury.

George W. Fitzgerald, a former teller in the Chicago subtreasury, was arrested in that city by Deputy United States marshals charged with the mysterious theft of $173,000 from the subtreasury on February 19, 1907.

Fitzgerald was arrested on a bench warrant based on an indictment returned secretly by a federal grand jury on February 17, 1910. Three days after the indictment was secretly returned and suppressed, on February 20, it was announced that the statute of limitations had operated to stop possible criminal prosecution in the peculiar case.

Coincident with the rush by the authorities, secret service men were detailed to watch Fitzgerald constantly and make a rigid investigation of the former teller's financial interests and affairs. Discoveries made by these secret service operatives resulted in the order for Fitzgerald's arrest.

AFTER PACKERS AGAIN.

Ten Indictments Returned by Jury Against Officials.

The federal grand jury, which has been investigating Chicago packers, has returned indictments against ten high officials of Swift, Armour and Morris concerns. There are three indictments against each, charging combination, conspiracy and illegal monopoly.

The first indictment in detail charges all defendants with engaging in a combination in restraint of interstate trade in fresh meats.

The second charges conspiracy.

The third charges the defendants with monopolising the trade in fresh meats by unlawful means.

That the purpose of the grand jury inquiry was the indictment of individuals rather than the packing corporations was shown when Judge Kennesaw M. Landis, famous for the $29,000,000 Standard Oil fine, launched the investigation.

A GHASTLY DISCOVERY.

Bodies of Two Men Found Wedged on Pilot of Engine.

Tightly wedged in the pilot of a Royal Blue express train on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, the bodies of two men, badly mangled and supposed to be those of Winfield D. Cullin and Jesse Cullin, of Belcamp, Md., were found when the train arrived in Philadelphia.

In addition to the bodies, parts of which were missing, a piece of a horse blanket and a portion of what is believed to have been a carriage wheel were also found on the locomotive.

In the pockets of the clothing of the bodies were found letters containing the names and addresses above given. These letters are the only clue the railroad people have to the identity of the men. The fact that the men were killed by the train was not discovered until the train neared Philadelphia.

FOLK IS INDORSED.

Party Leaders Complete Platforms at Jefferson City, Mo.

Platforms of the Democratic and Republican parties in Missouri were completed by the party leaders, who have been in convention at Jefferson City.

In the Democratic platform, Joseph W. Folk, former governor, is indorsed for president in 1912. The platform denounces the Payne-Aldrich tariff law and declares for tariff for revenue only. Criminal prosecution of trusts is urged.

One plank declares for merchant marine and a strong navy. The party platform declares, favors an employers' liability law.

The solution of the liquor question is local option, according to the platform. Speaker Cannon is scored and Colonel Roosevelt and President Taft are denounced.

Prolonged discussion by representative bankers of England and the continent.

The voters of Shreveport, La., have declared in favor of the commission form of government at a special election by a majority of 887.

DEMOCRATS CARRY STATE OF MAINE

Republicans Surprised at Results of Late Election.

A DEMOCRATIC LANDSLIDE

Maine went Democratic Monday. It elected Frederick W. Plaisted, of Augusta a democrat, as governor; unseated the hitherto solid republican congressional delegation in at least two and possibly all four of the districts, and to the surprise of the political leaders, democratic as well as republican, the returns indicated the probability that the next state legislature will be democratic. The senate will surely have a democratic majority. The house complexion is in doubt.

Returns from all but forty-eight of the election districts of the state showed a plurality for Plaisted for governor of 8,500.

CAROLINA FOR LOCAL OPTION

Statewide Prohibition Candidate Defeated by Small Majority.

With over 95,000 votes out of a possible 110,000 votes accounted for, returns from the second primary indicate the election of Cole L. Blease, of Newberry, for governor by a small majority over C. C. Featherstone, of Laurens.

W. W. Moore, of Barnwell, is safely in the lead for adjutant general. For railroad commissioner, G. McDuffie Hampton, of Columbia, holds a good lead over James Cansler, of Tirzah.

Blease entered the race as a local option advocate with Featherstone the champion of state-wide prohibitionists. In the first primary there were four other candidates, but all were eliminated save Messrs. Blease and Featherstone.

The result is largely a defeat for state-wide prohibition, as many of Blease's votes were drawn from men opposed to state-wide prohibition. Especially was this the case in Charleston, which gave Blease a majority of nearly 3,000.

Mr. Featherstone's very radical views of the liquor question and the enforcement of the liquor laws with respect to Charleston, expressed at the campaign meeting prior to the first primary, were very inimical to his chances in that city.

The vote may be as high as 110,000, and will probably pass the 105,000 mark the former record for state primaries.

ELIMINATE MIDDLEMAN.

Texas and Oklahoma Unions Form Plan to Transact Business Direct.

It was announced at Galveston by the president of the Farmers' Union of Texas and Oklahoma, that a determined effort will be made this season to eliminate the middleman in marketing cotton from that section. As a result of the Galveston bankers and cotton dealers coming to the assistance of the cotton producers of Texas and Oklahoma during the financial troubles of 1907 and 1908, the Farmers' Union contracted to handle the cotton of its members through the port of Galveston last season. This was successfully accomplished and the contract has just been renewed for another year.

Speaking of the matter, President Loudermilk, of the union, said Galveston was selected because it is the purpose of the union's selling agency to bring cotton producers directly in touch with the spinners and dealers, thus cutting out the middlemen, who are a tax alike on the producer and the spinner.

SENSATION SPRUNG IN CHURCH CIRCLES

Savannah Pastor Ousts Elders Seeking His Own Scalp.

TEN WERE DISPOSSESSED

Rev. W. A. Nesbit, at One Time a Merchant of Atlanta, but Now Pastor of Presbyterian Church in Savannah, Suspends Elders Who Were Fighting Him.

A sensation was sprung in church circles in Savannah when Rev. W. A. Nesbit, pastor of Westminster Presbyterian church dispossessed ten of the fourteen elders and deacons of the church who voted to ask for his resignation several weeks ago. This act prevents the elders and deacons from taking the sacrament or performing any official duties in church or Sunday school.

Among those "dispossessed" are the superintendent of the Sunday school, three of the assistant superintendents and several teachers. The act practically disorganizes the Sunday school.

The "dispossession" followed the refusal of the elders and deacons of the church to continue their duties as such until the pastor resigns according to a request made by eleven of them.

The refusal of the resignation was made on the point that the period of the pastor's usefulness to the church had passed.

After the request for his resignation was made, the pastor announced that an offer had been made by a donor, whom he did not name, to erect a $40,000 memorial church to bear the name of the donor, and that he had accepted the offer. The deacons took the position that as the building committee of the church they ought to have been consulted. They wanted to accept the donation under the condition that the plans of the donor would be acceptable to them.

In a congregational meeting the members of the congregation stood by the pastor, and the deacons and elders, among whom are some of the best known financial and business men in the city, gave up their books and declined to continue their duties further. This was followed by the pastor "dispossessing" them.

This act is being contested by the deacons and elders, who claim the pastor cannot take this step and that only the presbytery can excommunicate them.

A special meeting of the Savannah presbytery has been called to pass upon the matter. The deacons and elders will ask the presbytery to sever the pastoral relations of Mr. Nisbet with the church.

Before entering the ministry, about thirty years ago, Rev. W. A. Nisbet was a prominint furniture merchant of Atlanta.

PENNY NOVELS HIS DOWNFALL.

Charles Gallagher, 14 Years Old, Is Arrested on Serious Charge.

Charles Gallagher, 14 years old, who is said to be a reader of dime novels, was arrested at Chicago, charged with robbing two boys of a revolver and a rifle and with shooting two other boys with a double-barreled shotgun.

Peter Socks, 10 years of age, and Raymond Depew, 12 years old, were the victims of the robbery, and Martin Josephon, 12 years old, and Clarence Anderson, 13 years old, were wounded with buckshot when they got in the way of Charlie Gallagher's dad aim when he fired at the two former boys.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES. Pearls are growing on cocoanut trees in the Malay peninsular and the novel discovery has been made the subject of special report from Consular-General Dubois to the department of commerce and labor at Washington, D. C. The pearls are said to be not unlike those of the oyster, containing calcium carbonate and a little organic matter. Certain creations form just beneath the stem of cocoanut shells and the result is a pure white pearl, which brings a high price. The pearl is supposed by the Malays to possess some kind of charm.

The Klondike placer mining district in Alaska has produced $130,000,000 in gold since 1898, and mining experts estimate the amount yet to be mined will equal that already produced. Consul Cole, of Dawson, states that the gold output for 1910 will exceed that of 1909 when more than three and a half millions was produced. Most of this gold, he states, was shipped to the United States. A small quantity went to the new Canadian mint. Consul at Dawson reports that rich deposits of copper ore have been discovered in the southern part of the Klondike district.

Lieutenant Helm, the alleged German spy, was arraigned in court at London, Eng., charged with having committed a felony in obtaining information concerning the Portsmouth defenses for the purpose of communicating the same to another state. Helm was arrested while sketching the fortifications. The case was adjourned to September 28.

The largest gathering of negroes ever held in the city of New Orleans occurred at Washington Artillery Hall, when President H. E. C. Morris, of Helena, Ark., called to order about 7,000 delegates to the national convention of Negro Baptists. Governor Sanders welcomed the negroes to Louisiana, and Mayor Behrman delivered the address of welcome on behalf of New Orleans.

The Utah Democratic state platform adopted at the state convention at Provo, Utah, demands a prohibition law, direct primary elections, the election of United States senators by popular vote, the initiative and referendum and recall and a tariff commission. The conservation plank advocates co-operation by the state and national governments and the widest use of public lands for settlement and mining.

Mrs. Winship will take an optional course and says that she is going to college simply because she likes to acquire all the knowledge she can. She has recently returned from Michigan, where she has been attending a summer school.

General Akersha, of the Japanese army, has stated that quiet prevailed throughout Korea. He said that the inventors of the stories that disturbances have been frequent and that several Koreans had committed suicide in protest against Japanese domination would soon be compelled to prove their assertions in a court of law.

Thomas R. Preston, president of The Nashville American, has denied the report that The American property had been sold. Mr. Preston said, "There has been no sale of The Nashville American property. As president of the company I make this announcement and this is official and absolutely correct."

Seven young men, the honor graduates of colleges at which army officers are serving as instructors, have been appointed second lieutenants in the army, according to a Washington, D. C., dispatch. Among those appointed to the infantry are Whiteman R. Connelly, Ninety-six, S. C., and Robert G. Sherrard, Burnett, Texas.

President Taft was 53 years of age Wednesday, the 16th. Many congratulatory letters and telegrams were received by the president at his summer home on Burgess Point, Beverly, Mass., but there was no particular celebration of the day.

Charles A. Goodwin was nominated by the state republican convention for governor of Connecticut on the second ballot. His vote was 318 to 259 for Everett J. Lake. Senator Dennis A. Blakeslee, of New Haven, was nominated for lieutenant-governor. Congressman-at-large John C. Tilson, of New Haven, was renominated.

The New Jersey Democratic state convention nominated Dr. Woodrow Wilson, president of Princeton university, for the office of governor of the state. Dr. Wilson was nominated on the first ballot and received forty more votes than was necessary to nominate him.

The board of directors of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railway met at Nashville, Tenn., in their fifty-ninth annual session and reelected the old officers.

Robbers forced an entrance into the bank of Trenton, Ky., and got away with $100, all in copper cents. The other funds in the safe were not disturbed.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES A special from Godfrey, Ga., says that Mrs. Lula Crumley, an aged woman, died there from hydrophobia, the result of being bitten by a mad dog on August 13. Mrs. Crumley was a well-known woman and is survived by several children, one of whom, Miss Annie B. Crumley, resides in Atlanta. All efforts of physicians to relieve her sufferings were unavailable and she died in horrible agony.

A mule belonging to P. H. Morris, of Dallas, Paulding county, Ga., was the victim of an unusual accident that resulted in his death, at the corner of Lucile avenue and Culberson street, in West End, Atlanta. The animal gouged himself to death on the tongue of the wagon, which he had just broken in shying from a street car.

One dead, one fatally injured and five seriously hurt is the result of a gas explosion caused by a miner's defective lamp in Vandalia mine No. 10, nine miles from Linton, Ind. There were three hundred men working in the mine, but they had been changed to another part of the mine, and this fact alone prevented a fearful disaster.

A registered mail pouch containing several thousand dollars in gold bullion, shipped from Fairbanks, Alaska, for Seattle, Wash., is missing, and is supposed to have been stolen. The package was sent over the government trail to Valdez. Secret service men have been at work on the mystery for several days.

Isaac Glover, a negro, was shot to death by a posse of citizens four miles south of Springfield, Ala. The posse shot two members of the posse before he was fired upon. Glover killed Captain John Terry, one of the most popular citizens of St. Clair county, without provocation. Captain Terry met him in the road and the negro evidently thought he wanted to arrest him and fired point blank, killing Captain Terry instantly. Posses were immediately organized and had been searching for the negro ever since.

Locusts by the millions have descended upon the cultivated regions of Yucatan, and have left in their wake nothing but ruin and destruction among the principal crops. Yucatan generally has suffered the chief loss being in the corn crop, a large percentage of which was destroyed. Consul McCowan, of Progreso, Mex., reports to the department of commerce and labor, at Washington, D. C., that vast quantities of corn will be imported.

Alexander Sessoms, a prominent stores magnate of Waycross, Ga., died at the county hospital at Fayetteville, N. C., aged 76. The deceased, a native of Cumberland county, entered the naval stores business when it was in its infancy and accumulated immense wealth.

J. S. Jones, of Memphis, Tenn., who was shot in a sensational manner by his wife on a crowded thoroughfare, died at the city hospital from the effect of his wounds. Mrs. Jones, who was arrested immediately after the shooting, is held at the police station on a charge of murder. She is a resident of Hernando, Miss.

A steam engine burster at John Smith's shingle mill, two miles south of Cumer, Ga., and killed one of Mr. Smith's sons and injured another one of them so badly that the chances for his recovery are very poor. No cause can be assigned for the engine bursting.

Cliff Rickard, a member of a prominent South Carolina family, was arrested at Leesville, S. C., by a detective from Columbia, charged with firing the barn and stables of Henry Adams, who lives about 6 miles from Leesville. Rickard was sent to jail at Lexington. ANTIQUITY OF FAKED FOODS

Many Tales of the Adulterations Practiced in Ancient Rome—Wines Often Were Doctored.

So much is heard of pure food laws and food adulteration these days that it is prone to assume that the abuse in question is a result of modern conditions of trade and competition. Such, however, is not the case, for the Greeks and Romans complained as bitterly as the men of today of the adulteration of their food.

In Pliny is found an account setting forth how the bakers of Rome were wont to mix with their dough a white earth, soft to the touch and sweet to the taste, thus turning out a foodstuff that had weight and fine appearance, but little food value.

Pliny also touches upon wine adulteration. He assures us that not even the rich Roman noble could be sure that the wine he purchased was pure. Moreover, the famous wines of Falerno were doctored, and wines from Gaul generally esteemed to be the best were as a matter of fact artificially colored by aloes and other drugs.

Much complaint was made in Athens touching wine adulteration, so that in time it became necessary to appoint special inspectors with a view to putting an end to the evil.

There was one wine merchant named Canthare, who was so skillful in the matter of adulteration that his name actually became a synonym for the expression "clever deceit." Canthare's long suit was in imparting the flavors of old age to new wine.

And so on. Throughout Europe, from the tenth century onward, are found numerous instances of food adulteration in general practise by bakers, brewers, vintners, etc. The tricks of the trade were originated more than 1,000 years ago.

Weeks Lived Long Enough to Win.

Mr. Henry C. Weeks, the New York architect who years ago moved the north of his Long Island neighbors by pouring oil into swamps to keep down mosquitoes, lived long enough to have the laugh on his side, dying Friday at the age of 66. His is not the only instance, by thousands, of the pioneer being called crazy by those whom he was seeking to benefit by an operation that justifies itself. Fulton was "crazy" in the opinion of those who jeered him as he went on his way to the yard where the Clermont was building. Their incredulity was different in expression only from that of Laplace, who assured Napoleon that there was nothing in Fulton's idea and that steam had about enough motive power to propel a child's plaything.

Isaac Glover, a negro, was shot to death by a posse of citizens four miles south of Springfield, Ala. The negro shot two members of the posse before he was fired upon. Glover killed Capt. John Terry, one of the most popular citizens of St. Clair county, without provocation. Captain Terry met him in the road and the negro evidently thought he wanted to arrest him and fired point blank, killing Capt. John Terry instantly. Posses were immediately organized and had been searching for the negro ever since.

Locusts by the millions have descended upon the cultivated regions of Yucatan and have left in their wake nothing but ruin and destruction among the principal crops. Vegetation generally has suffered, the chief loss being in the corn crop, a large percentage of which was destroyed. Consul Wickham of Progreso, Mex., reports to the department of commerce and labor, at Washington, D. C., that quantities of corn will be imported.

Admiral Simms, a pioneer naval officer, captain of the south, late of the Confederate navy, died at the High Smith hospital, Fayetteville, N. C., aged 77. The deceased, a native of Cumberland county, entered the naval service of the United States when it was in its infancy and accumulated immense wealth.

J. S. Jones of Memphis, Tenn., who was shot in a sensational manner by a woman in a crowded thoroughfare, died at the city hospital from the effects of his wounds. Mrs. Jones, who was arrested immediately after the shooting, is held at the police station on a charge of murder. She is a resident of Hernando, Miss.

A steam engine bursted at Babe Smith's saw mill, two miles south of Cedar Gap, and killed one of Mr. Smith's sons and injured another one of them so badly that the chances for his recovery are very poor. No cause can be assigned for the engine bursting.

Will Rickard, a member of a prominent South Carolina family, was arrested at Leesville, S. C., by a detective from Columbia, charged with firing the barn and stables of Henry Adams, who lives about 6 miles from Leesville. Rickard was sent to jail at Lexington. His arrest has created quite a sensation.

Decoyed to a lonely place near Glendale, 6 miles from Spartanburg, S. C., by a call for his professional services, Dr. William G. Sexton, of that city, was waylaid by two white men, who overpowered him, rendered him unconscious with chloroform and robbed him of $500.

Fire of unknown origin which started in the furniture warehouse of L. E. Sanders, Ennis, Texas, destroyed six business houses. The loss is estimated at $75,000.

ANTIQUITY OF FAKED FOODS

Many Tales of the Adulterations Practiced in Ancient Rome—Wines Often Were Doctored.

So much is heard of pure food laws and food adulteration these days that one is prone to assume that the abuse in question is a result of modern conditions of trade and competition. Such, however, is not the case, for the Greeks and Romans complained as bitterly as the man of today of the adulteration of their food.

In Pliny is found an account setting forth how the bakers of Rome were wont to mix with their dough a white earth, soft to the touch and sweet to the taste, thus turning out a foodstuff that had weight and fine appearance, but little food value.

Pliny also touches upon wine adulteration. He assures us that not even the rich Roman noble could be sure that the wine he purchased was pure. Moreover, the famous wines of Falernus were doctored, and wines from Gaul generally esteemed to be the best were as a matter of fact artificially colored by aloes and other drugs.

Much complaint was made in Athens touching wine adulteration, so that in time it became necessary to appoint special inspectors with a view to putting an end to the evil.

There was one wine merchant named Canthare, who was so skillful in the matter of adulteration that his name actually became a synonym for the expression "clever deceit." Canthare's long suit was in imparting the flavors of old age to new wine.

And so on. Throughout Europe, from the tenth century onward, are found numerous instances of food adulteration in general practise by bakers, brewers, vintners, etc. The tricks of the trade were originated more than 1,000 years ago.

PUTTING UP FRUIT

SOME POINTS WORTH KEEPING IN THE MEMORY.

Saving May Be Effected Through the Proper Care of Cans—Sterilization a Most Important Part of the Process.

The annually recurring problem in all well regulated households is how, when, what and how much fruit to put up—little or much—and whether to preserve or can it. The first expense of cans is considerable, but they last for years with ordinary care. With fruit in the market all the year around, the work required in the preparation of the fruit sometimes seems to cost more than it comes to.

But even with the best of markets there is a distinct place for canned fruits and preserves, especially for those who can raise their own berries. The canned fruits are excellent for pies, puddings and such things, and as but little sugar is required for them the expense seems small. If preserves are used to take the place of pies and puddings and other confections for desserts and are more highly appreciated than what they displace, no one will want to do without them.

The art in preserving and canning is connected both with the cooking and with the choice of fruit. Perfection cannot be attained unless the fruit is chosen with the most minute care. It must be at the right stage of ripeness or unripeness—just before it is perfectly ripe is best, since in all soft fruits the fermentation stage follows closely upon the perfectly ripe stage—and particularly at the right stage of preservation. Decay and blemishes disqualify fruit for either preserving or canning.

The subject of sterilization of cans—complete, effective and unquestionably thorough—has received so much attention and so much has been written upon the subject that a housewife has only herself to blame if her fruits ferment or mold. Heat is the sterilizer and it must be applied in sufficient amounts and at the beginning of the process of canning. The surest method of sterilizing all utensils is to put them in cold water, bring it to a boil and let it boil for 15 minutes.

Corks and cans and rubbers must be perfect as well as perfectly sterilized. If anything is to go in bottles and be corked it is poor economy to buy cheap corks. No paraffine or anything but the densest wax will keep what is put up from fermenting from "spouting through the rotten corks." Often not an inch of liquid will be left in a quart bottle when this happens.

To keep the air out of jars it is best to fill them to the running over line. Every destructive agent has presumably been killed by heat and no space should be left for others to get in.

Sugar increases the nutritive value of fruit, but too large a quantity spoils the flavor and makes it less easily digested, so that the rule of "pound for pound" needs to be applied with variations from canning with no sugar at all—as when berries are to be used for cooking purposes—or about one-fourth sugar—to preserving with half and half or something short of that. Miss Parloa says: "In the case of most fruits canning with a little sugar is to be preferred to preserving with a large quantity of sugar. There are, however, some fruits that are good only when preserved with a good deal of sugar. Of course such preparations of fruit are desirable only for occasional use."

Plum Roll.

Sift thoroughly one pint of flour, one teaspoon baking powder, and one-half teaspoon of salt. Rub one teaspoon of butter into the prepared flour and mix with milk to a soft dough. Roll out and sprinkle with one cup of raisins, seeded and chopped and one-half cup of chipped citron. Dust with cinnamon; roll up and steam for 30 minutes. Serve warm with hard sauce.

A BRIDAL LUNCHEON

NEW IDEAS IN TABLE DECORATION AND PLACE CARDS.

How the Hostess May Easily Evolve Something Attractive for Luncheons, Teas and Dinners Connected With Marriage.

Every hostess takes pride in investing novel and pretty decorations for her luncheons, teas and dinners, and she takes special pride when the guest of honor is a young bride or bride-to-be. It is never a difficult matter to evolve something attractive for a festivity connected with marriage, for there are so many charming designs that can be used—cupids, hearts, wedding bells, wedding rings and the like.

At a recent luncheon given for an engaged girl the color scheme was pink and white, pink being the favorite color of the bride-elect. The hostess was the latter's closest friend and all the guests were intimates of the two, which made the luncheon a very jolly affair.

The chandelier, above the table, was festooned with pink and white tulle, and suspended from it was a large golden hoop simulating a wedding ring. From the hoop streamers of pink and white ribbon stretched to each cover, held in place there by tiny cupids, each cupid bearing a card with the name of the guest to whom the place had been assigned. Bride roses filled a cut glass bowl in the center of the table, were clustered in vases and bowls on sideboard and mantel, and nodded in banks from the low window seats.

Yellow luncheons are very appropriate when the guest of honor is a bride since yellow suggests sunshine. At one such luncheon in early summer last year a wedding bell covered with field daisies with yellow hearts and black-eyed Susans with yellow petals hung above the table. A big flat dish of old brass, filled with yellow lady's slippers, stood in the center of the table, and a wreath of daisies and smilax followed the curve of the table, just inside the plates. Daisy festoons stretched from the chandelier to the four corners of the room and daisies and black-eyed Susans and tall feathery grasses were banked on the mantelpiece and massed in earthenware pots of quaint and unusual shapes.

The place cards at this luncheon were tiny yellow satin slippers filled with rice, the little card with the name on it half hidden in the rice.

Other pretty place cards for engagement or bridal luncheons are hand-painted designs showing a girl's head framed in a wedding ring, cupids peeping through a heart design, or twin hearts pierced with arrows. A woman with some skill in water colors and a certain amount of invention can easily paint the cards for a luncheon and, knowing the fads and fancies of her guests, can get in little personal touches that will enliven the luncheon immensely.

RAFFIA TRIMMING THE VOGUE

Gives Extremely Effective Touch to Many of the Season's Styles in Millinery.

Many of the new hats in the looser weaves of straw are being trimmed very effectively in colored raffia and velvet flowers, the raffia being covered with net of the same shade and arranged like a scarf. Raffia comes in nearly 25 shades, and where an unusual color must be matched, the white or natural colored can often be dyed to the exact tint. One girl tried for days to stain exactly a rather bright blue raffia, and after failing with all sorts of paints and dyes succeeded by dipping the natural-colored grass into ordinary washing blue.

With the help of raffia and net very modish hats, indeed, can be trimmed entirely at home, for even the velvet flowers can be made with practise by the amateur. Often the raffia and net will match the straw of the hat, with the flowers in another shade or in black or white. The variations are endless, and all are pretty.

DAINTY TULLE WAIST

This dainty waist is of white tulle with embroidered dots. It made with tucks and trimmed with bands of soutache embroidery.

The yoke and cuffs are of plain tulle, made with fine tucks.

For Elderly Women.

Elderly women's costumes in dark or black ottoman or bengaline are among the latest to be shown with severe tailor finish. They are exceedingly rich when made up with narrow flat band trimming of satin, and finished with inch bottom of crocheted silk.—Harper's Bazar.

SAFEGUARD OF ALL FREEDOM

Without Liberty of the Press the World Would Return to Its Old Barbarism.

The liberty of the press is the highest safeguard of all free government. Ours could not exist without it. It is like a great exulting and abounding river. It is fed by the dews of heaven which distill their sweetest drops to form it. It gushes from the rill as it breaks from the deep caverns of the earth. It is augmented by a thousand affluents that flash from the mountain top to separate again into a thousand bounteous and irrigating streams around.

On its broad bosom it bears a thousand barks. There genius spreads its purpling sail. There poetry dips its silver oar. There art, invention, discovery, science, morality, religion may safely and securely float. It wanders through every land. It has a genial, cordial source of thought and inspiration wherever it touches, whatever it surrounds. Upon its borders there grows every flower of grace and every fruit of truth.

Sometimes that river oversteps its bounds. Sometimes that stream becomes a dangerous torrent and destroys towns and cities upon its banks. But without it, civilization, humanity, government—all that makes society itself—would disappear and the world would return to its ancient barbarism. —Edward D. Baker.

OVER IN CHILTON.

Alabama Democrats will watch with considerable interest the contest for supremacy in Chilton county this year. For many years a Republican majority of between 300 and 500 votes has been as cold water on the backs of the Democrats. But this year the Democrats are thoroughly organized, very enthusiastic and in perfect harmony. They are finding plenty to complain of in the administration of the present county officials and they are losing no time in the fight against what they call "Judge Reynold's ring." Many of the old line Republicans are insurtag against present administration and with the aid of this element the Democrats hope to reverse the long-standing Republican majority.

The people of that county love the politicial game and whenever a public speakings is announced they leave their work and turn out as they did Saturday when eight Democratic leaders spoke in Clanton. The two factions are not so partisan and narrow that they will not give the "other fellow" a respectful hearing either, as it was noticeable Saturday that between 300 and 500 Republicans were in the audience to hear the Democratic orators, although, earnest efforts had been made by some of the Republican leaders of that county to induce "their friends" to remain at home and judging from the reported attention and enthusiasm manifested by the Republicans on the occasion it would seem that a new day has dawned for Chilton county Democracy.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Alabama State Fair.

Dairy flights, two in number, by a wright aeroplane is an attraction offered by the Alabama State Fair. The contract was signed last Friday and it means an additional expenditure of $10,000 by the men who make the Fair.

Before the aeroplane was added to the list of attractions for the total cost of such amusements that had already been contracted for totalled $25,000 so that the aeroplane will bring the total amount to be expended for free amusements for fair visitors up to $35,000. This sum is believed to be the largest paid out by any American Fair for free attractions.

The aeroplane will be driven by an aviator of international reputation. We will make at least two ascents each day and the contract specifies that a flight must be at least of ten minutes duration and to altitude of 25 feet must be attained and the aviator must not be required to ascend higher than 500 feet above the earth though he may if his own volition fly as high as he chooses. It is seldom that a wright aviator does something during and a world's record may be set at Birmingham during Fair time.

ATTEND THE FAIRS.

Now is the time to begin planning to attend the fairs this fall. A trip to the State Fair, or to some other large fair nearer home, is usually well worth the expense of time and money. If the farmer goes for education or to learn he will never fail to feel repaid but if he goes merely for entertainment or amusement the time and money will be largely wasted. Better amusements can be found nearer home at less expense. But the fair properly stocked should be a source of instruction. Too frequently the managers of our Southern fairs loose sight of the educational features and go to extremes in supplying, in many cases, means to clean amusements. More of an educational feature should be made of the judging of agricultural exhibits and the live stock. A judge may make his work highly instructive by stating his reasons for awards. By all means arrange to go to some good fair this fall and use it as a means of obtaining more information.—Starkville (Miss) Progressiv Farmer and Gazette.

Violets or Roses

By Clarissa Mackie

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.)

When Noel Osmond asked her if he might send flowers the night of the Hasken ball Mildred Vard smiled enigmatically.

"You are very kind, indeed; and I am especially fond of white violets." Her quick glance caught his little start of surprise at the hint. White violets at the season were quite beyond the slim purse of young Mr. Osmond.

Noel's lips hardened into a straight line. All the pleasure he might feel in knowing that Mildred would wear his flowers was lost in the thought that the flowers would hold no meaning for her beyond their novelty and extravagance.

He did not remain long after that. Rather grave and preoccupied, he held Mildred's hand in his own for a brief instant and then went away. When he reached the florist's he turned in and asked for white violets. The clerk brought out a jar of the white blossoms, velvety, exquisite in texture, but quite odorless. The price was away beyond Noel's pocketbook, and he hesitated. Of course they might be charged—although he was poor himself, was he not the nephew of the rich Mr. Osmond and very likely his heir—and he need not be mortified in the sight of the girl he loved. Still Noel Osmond had come to the city with very high ideals of paving his way in the world and going without what he could not pay for.

The Vards were rich and fashionable people. But Mildred herself, the youngest daughter, was quite unspoiled by it all. Noel had found himself telling her of his fight for a place in the world and the ambition that kept him bright and keen eyed and fresh and clean hearted in the midst of a world of temptations.

Mildred had seemed to understand and their relations had been growing a little closer and Noel was hoping—hoping—some miracle might happen whereby he might become rich in a day and so be in position to declare his love.

And, knowing his poverty, she had expressed a wish for white violets!

A telephone bell rang sharply and the clerk turned to the instrument. Noel looked wistfully at the jar of violets. How he would have enjoyed sending that great mass of white blossoms up to Mildred! What was the man saying at the telephone?

"Yes, Mr. Kenyon, we have a few white violets—well, a good-sized bunch—send them up to Miss Vard? Yes, sir, thank you, sir!" He turned briskly to Noel.

"If you do not want these, sir, I have an order for them all."

"I won't take them," said Noel, turning away with a sick jealousy tearing at his heart. He knew Tom Kenyon well—Tom was as rich as Noel was poor.

He ordered pink rosebuds with grim, unpleasant mouth, and paid for them. As he strode homeward he felt for the first time the gall of poverty; he despised himself because he was too poor to be able to indulge the girl he loved. He could never hope to win her for his wife—what had he to offer her save youth and a perpetual struggle to keep up appearances?

Once more he would see her, would dance with her, talk to her; then he would go as far away as he could from this cold, unfeeling New York, where money was the standard in every walk of life. He would go into the west, where fortunes are made quickly, and perhaps some day, if Tom Kenyon did not step in between with his ready-made fortune—but it was very likely Tom would step in!

The hours intervening he spent in bitter calculations that only strengthened his resolve to cut it all and go away, and start his career over again in some city where Mildred Vard's lovely face and charming presence might never tempt him from work.

He carried these bitter reflections with him to the Hasken palace, where so many millions rubbed elbows that it seemed to Noel that the very air of the lighted rooms sparkled with gold dust.

He saw Mildred dancing with Tom Kenyon. He had never been jealous of Tom before, but the episode of the violets had proved to him how weak his own standing was. And she wore on the bosom of her rose-pink gown—not his roses, but Tom Kenyon's white violets!

Noel made himself very wretched that evening. He did not dance often, but he glowered in distant corners where he might watch Mildred's dark head.

To approach her might be to invite a snub. When he did meet her it all happened so suddenly that he could not avoid the situation. He had wandered into the conservatory and was moodily watching the goldfish darting to and fro in the huge basin when there was the sound of quick steps on the marble floor and Tom Kenyon's deep voice saying:

"Sit down here, Millie; I'll bring you an ice." Then he was gone and Mildred herself, flushed and sparkling, came around the big palm and came upon Noel at the goldfish basin.

"Why, Mr. Osmond, I did not know you were here," she said as he bent above her hand. She drew away and looked at him oddly.

"I'm in a black mood, Miss Vard," said Noel. "In fact I'm so grouchy that I think I'll clear out!" His eyes lingered on her upturned face with its wistful look that he had surprised once or twice before. "I hope you are having a delightful time," he went on lamely.

Her head drooped a little. "Yes, it is a lovely ball. Thank you for the beautiful rosebuds, Mr. Osmond—they are just the color of my gown."

Noel flushed darkly and his eyes rested on the white violets. With a sudden impulse of angry despair he touched the blossoms with a tentative forefinger.

"I could not send you these," he said harshly. "I am too poor, Miss Vard—I sent what I could afford to pay for. You are very gracious to accept the roses when you asked for violets. You see, I've made a big mistake—I'm not in it with the other chaps—I can't play the game!"

Somehow her hand found its way to his arm and was timidly laid on his black sleeve. "I asked you to send violets, Mr. Osmond, because I knew they were extravagant," she said quietly.

Osmond stared, puzzled, yet strangely thrilled by her tone. "What do you mean, Miss Vard?" he asked.

"I wondered if you were like all the rest of them, living beyond your means, spending more than you could afford to pay for—or whether you were what you appeared to be, working your way upward with the courage of your convictions apparent in your actions! I am not disappointed, Mr. Osmond. If you had sent me white violets I am afraid I would have been quite disgusted with you."

Noel's heart was beating hard. "But I would have liked to have you wear my roses," he was beginning, when she touched the frill of pink chiffon that edged the low neck of her gown.

"Your buds are here," she said softly, and Noel saw that his pink roses formed a garland across her bosom above the violets. After that, events moved rapidly, and with Mildred's hands in his own and her head on his breast he was explaining all his doubts and fears since he had left her that afternoon. And Mildred explained that Tom Kenyon was engaged to her sister Ethel, and Ethel had pinned the white violets upon Mildred's gown, for generous Tom had sent her too many for one person.

The miracle did not occur till the next day when Noel's Uncle Francis Osmond offered him a place in his banking house. "In order to learn the business which you must one day inherit, young man!" he said sharply. "I've been watching you, Noel, and expecting you to fall into the fast pace every day, but I'm disappointed, agreeably, my boy! I happened to be in that florist shop yesterday (looking at orchids behind a screen) and saw you turn down the violets and pay for the roses like a man—you're the right stuff!"

New It's Repeated.

"With my customary slowness it has taken me all this time to learn the fashionable medical terms for 1910," said the man who takes medicine. "There is the word that is properly applied to a refilled prescription, for instance. When I first began to use drugs in large quantities, refilled was the word used when we got a bottle of medicine put up a second time. Later somebody concluded that renewed would sound better, so for two or three years we had our prescriptions renewed. But this year when we get our old bottles filled the prescription is repeated. I don't intend to be behindhand next year, and already I have commenced to study the dictionary to find out what word will most likely be favored next."

One of Sheehan's Ways.

R. F. Sheehan, connected with the Tod-Stambaugh company, is said to have the most unusual characteristic that there is any record of. It is this: He never laces up his shoes until after breakfast. It matters not whether he's at home or abroad he dresses himself carefully to the minutest detail, pulls on his shoes and lets them go unlaced until he has been to the dining room. He says he doesn't know why he waits until after breakfast to tie his shoes, except that it's a habit. He's followed the practice so long that he cannot remember when he first took on that system. [illegible] Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Origin of the Navel Orange.

After a series of experiments, some of them costly failures, the southern California colonists finally evolved the "fittest" product for their soil and market and that was the Bahia orange or, as it is now called, the Washington navel orange. In December, 1873, L. C. Tibbetts a Riverside colonist, received by mail from a friend at Washington, D. C., two small orange trees that had been imported by the United States Agricultural Department from San Salvador de Bahia, Brazil. This variety is seedless and of fine flavor. The tree does not grow tall like the seedling and its branching form earlier ground reduces greatly the cost of picking the fruit. The Bahia orange became immensely popular. Buds were taken from the parent trees as fast as they could be obtained and inserted into the seedling trees. The descendants from these two trees number up into millions.

Tibbetts died a few years since in very straightened circumstances, for he was a public benefactor. The trees he introduced have been a source of untold benefit to the people of California. Men have been immortalized as heroes and canonized as saints for far less good to humanity than he did. One of the original trees, now grown old and somewhat decrepit, has recently been presented to the city of Riverside. It is a living monument to the memory of Tibbetts.—J. M. Quinn, in the October Pacific Monthly.

It is easy to arrange one's [illegible] so that there will always be a winter crop on the land. No farmer in the South should ever have a bare stalk field of either corn or cotton. More fertility is lost in our climate by washing and leaching than is removed by the crops we grow. Get ready now to plant a cover crop of some sort on every acre this fall.

When the medicine you take cures your disease, tones up your system and makes you feel better, stronger and more vigorous than before. That is what Foley Kidney Pills do for you, in all cases of backache, headache, nervousness, loss of appetite, sleeplessness and general weakness that is caused by any disorder of the kidneys or bladder. Sehrbrok Drug Co.

Denied Himself the Privilege.

"Waal, some ways I'd like to an' some ways I guess I wouldn't," said honest Former Bentover, when the suave dispenser of encyclopaedias had paused in his siren song. "Ye see, if I was to sign for that 'ere cyclopedee in forty-seven parts, including the index an' appendicitis, I'm sorter afraid I'd hev to work so hard to pay for it thet I'd be too tired to enjoy readin' it; while if I read it at my leesure, as I'd ort to, in order to git the good of it, I wouldn't hev time to earn the price. So, all things considered, I guess I'll hev to deny myself the privilege, as it were. Looks sorter like rain off to the northwest, don't it?"

Cherry and Currant Marmalade.

Stone six pounds large ripe cherries and put into a preserving kettle. Simmer gently until reduced one-half, stirring often to prevent sticking. Put half the pits in a wooden bowl and mash with a pestle or stone. Add two pounds currants and mash also, then strain. Add the liquid to the cherries, cook fifteen minutes, add six pounds sugar and stir and boil until the marmalade thickens like jelly. Skim and fill small pots or glasses. A tablespoonful of kirsch or brandy may be added to this marmalade if desired.

Mild Laxative for Baby Free

The child of today is the parent of the future, and whether it grows up healthy and strong, or puny and weak, depends upon the intelligence of its parents, for most children are born into the world healthy, but thousands become future weaklings between birth and the age of ten, when the parents are still in greatest control.

The prime cause of trouble is in the stomach. A baby that is digesting its food coos and cries and always looks cheerful; the little child whose stomach is good romps and plays and never whines; the growing child learns well at school and is eager for fun if its head is clear and its stomach right, and that means if it has no constipation.

The best and safest way to cure any irregularity of the stomach and bowels in children is by the use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This is a liquid laxative in its effect as Mrs. John W. Denham, Apple Creek, O., Mrs. E. L. Cullum, Plainville, Ind., and numerous others can testify who give it to their children with extraordinary results.

A bottle only costs 50 cents or it according to the size you want, and even one 50-cent bottle will do a wonderful amount of good in a family. It can be given to any member of the family in constipation, sour stomach, indigestion, torpid liver, dyspepsia, heartburn, sick headache and similar digestive troubles. It never gripes or strangles like pills, tablets, salts and powders, which should not be given to children, women or old folks.

If you have a child or other member of the family who needs, but has never used this grand laxative tonic, send your name and address to the doctor and a free trial bottle will be sent to your home. In this way you can find out what it will do without personal expense.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Nice's Pumpkin Festival.

The pumpkin festival at Nice is one of those old world customs rescued by popular sentiment from a gradual decay that was hastening towards oblivion. It is a celebration singularly unique, in that the wildest exuberance of spirit alternates with serious ceremonies, representations of art and prosaic business dealings—a celebration so quaint and so little like the usual productions of modern mankind that it leaves one with the impression of having witnessed a scene idealized upon the stage rather than an actual festival of the present practical age. Yet the pumpkin custom undoubtedly reflects the character and individuality of its resuscitators, the inhabitants of Nice, whose deep religious instincts, innate refinement of feeling and intense love of the beautiful were the underlying forces which prompted them to revive a time-honored custom without the least trace of vulgar advertisement or sordid materialism to mar its perfect harmony.—Wide World Magazine.

Blackberry Wine.

Wash the berries and to every gallon allow three quarters of water. Cook and strain. Allow to each gallon of the mixture 2½ pounds white sugar. Let stand 48 hours in a large tub, stirring once a day and skimming off all the impurities that rise to the surface. Put into a cask not quite full and close. Bung and seal.

A Tested Womans' Remedy.

If you are despondent and have lost all nervousness; if your sweet little children annoy you; if you feel that your friends are neglecting you; dark rings under the eyes, hysterical, headache, constipation, pains above the pelvic bone across the [illegible] and about the kidneys—it indicates that you need a female remedy such as VIN-O-VITÆ. It builds up diseased tissue, strengthens the womb and appendages, and by it's fine tonic properties gives women perfect health. Try it and be convinced. Druggists sell it at $1 per bottle. THINK OF

Mexican Mustang Liniment

AND WHAT IT MEANS TO YOU.

Relief from pain that might otherwise cause you hours of agony.

Tired out muscles eased up and made ready for another day's work.

Lameness in the back and shoulders promptly cured and stiff joints limbered up.

Burns, Scalds, Cuts and Mashes rendered painless and quickly healed.

Rheumatism, Lumbago and Sciatica robbed of their anguish and banished forever.

Ulcers, Old Sores and Open Wounds healed promptly and permanently.

The first application of Mexican Mustang Liniment subdues the pain but it continues its work until every quivering nerve is soothed and quieted.

The great penetrating power of this famous remedy enables it to do this quickly and positively.

In all cases of Sprains, Bruises or Lameness, Mexican Mustang Liniment should be rubbed in persistently.

The antiseptic qualities of this old reliable household remedy make it safe and sure.

Prices 25c., 50c., $1.00 per bottle. For sale by all Druggists. LYON MFG. CO. 41 to 45 So. 5th St., BROOKLYN, N.Y.

He said never buy a horse that shows too much daylight between his hind legs—that is if he happens to be split up too high you may be sure that he lacks power. A horse's main pulling strength comes from his hind legs and back and he should be low on the ground. He also told me never to buy a horse which showed the tendency to stand on the toes of his hind feet because such horses will invariably go stiff and sore in time. A good draft horse must stand flat on the ground. His feet should be large and his legs flat and his joints supple.

GERMAN FARMERS IN UNION

United States Agriculturists Might Profit by Following Example, Says Consul Thackara.

United States Consul General A. W. Thackara of Berlin thinks the farmers of the United States could study with profit the agricultural conditions in Germany. He points out that the German league is effective in aiding the membership financially, the loans aggregating over $300,000,000, in improved culture through traveling experts, in selling farm products and in purchasing supplies which amount to many million dollars annually.

The largest of the German organizations has been known since the year 1903 as the Imperial Union of Agricultural Societies. The second organization, known as the General Union of Agricultural Societies, was founded in 1871. These two agricultural organizations were united in 1905 for all administration purposes.

The local societies making up the organizations were founded for various purposes. Many of them may have a single activity, others have their functions so intermingled that it is not always possible to distinguish them. In general, however, one may make the following classification of groups, namely, savings and loan societies, societies for consumers and societies for the sale of farm products. This latter group is often subdivided according to the character of the products sold.

At the close of last year, the Imperial agriculture organization embraced 67 unions, made up of 19,333 local societies. The total membership of these societies was then 1,575,000. The local societies were divided into groups, in accordance with their principal purpose of union. There were 12,584 saving and loan societies, 2,128 co-operative purchasing societies, 1,960 dairy societies, and approximately 1,591 societies devoted to various other objects.

The general agricultural organization has a membership of 5,172 local societies. Of this total number 4,298 are saving and loan societies. These locals have a total membership of 405,819 persons. The fee for admission as a member of either of these groups is a nominal one. The co-operative purchasing society is the second in number and in importance of any of the group of the Imperial organization. It has a membership of 216,000 persons. The value of goods purchased through it last year exceeded by approximately $4,284,000 the purchases of the previous year. The principal articles purchased by the farmers through their organization are fertilizers, food stuffs, seed, coal and agricultural machinery. The working capital of the co-operative working societies is a little over $10,000,000.

The consul general at Berlin points out that the function of these great farmer organizations is much broader than merely for the purpose of collective bargaining in the sale of farm products, etc., for in each division there are scientific experts, who, on application, and payment of the fee, visit the farms of the different members and advise with them concerning the cultivation of their growing crop and the care of their live stock.

Aside from the saving and loan group, which is by far the most numerous of any of the groups of the general organizations, there are 778 local societies co-operating in purchasing and selling agricultural implements. Among a number of the local societies in certain communities agricultural machinery is owned by the society, for the general use of the different members. The common use of such machinery has proved of great assistance to the members, particularly of such machinery as grain cleaners, thrashers, etc., which are too expensive for one man to buy and which are used only during a short season of each year.

Consul General Thackara quotes an eminent German economist as saying that the significance of the agricultural unions in Germany lies in their honest business dealings, in their insistence on cash payment and on economy in operating expenses, in their struggle against usury and deception, in the business and moral training which they give to the lower and middle classes, and in the happy combination of progressive principles and brotherly feeling which they stimulate.

Blueberry Rice Molds.

Boil a cup of rice in slightly salted water for 20 minutes, then add a scant pint of ripe blueberries, a cup of sugar and a little grated nutmeg; continue the cooking until the rice is tender. Remove from the fire and when nearly cold stir in a cup of whipped cream beaten with the yolk of one egg and two tablespoonfuls of chopped nut meats. Pour into cups and place on ice to harden. To serve, turn out on glass dishes and use any sauce liked.

TEMPERANCE LESSON

Sunday School Lesson for Sept. 25, 1910
Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Galatians 5:15-26. Memory verses, 22, 23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"If we live in the Spirit let us also walk in the Spirit."—Gal. 5:25.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

The adventure with Apollyon "the great dragon that fought against Bunyan's Pilgrim, in order to prevent him from reaching the Holy City symbolized a heavenly character, a heaven of eternal life, an earth transformed into heaven.

In the lesson appointed we have a characterization of Apollyon, "the foul fiend," "a monster hideous to behold, clothed with scales, with wings like a dragon, feet like a bear, and a mouth like a lion," amid fire and smoke, throwing "flaming darts as thick as hail."

Some years ago, in an article in the New York Journal, John L. Sullivan said: "Remember, young man, that if you couldn't lick John L. Sullivan, you can't lick the thing that is stronger than he is. Leave whisky alone." Sullivan was not the kind of man from whom one expects moral teaching, but when the great fighter admits that whisky defeated him and took him into captivity, he becomes an object-lesson for every young man.

With the newspapers and reporters. The Golden Rule—that is the spirit which wants to do to others as we would have them do to us, the spirit that will make sacrifices in order to know how to help others—enlisted the newspapers and the reporters on its side.

There can be no inspiration without information. Hence the teacher and class should be constantly collecting temperance material. A month before the temperance lesson she should be directed to say to her class, "I want you all to clip from the papers every article of news concerning the effect of the saloon or drink. Paste these on a strip of cloth, and we will see who has the longest strip on Temperance Sunday."

Once in the New Century Teacher there was an article entitled, "Their Exhibits." It told how a teacher asked her scholars to look about during the week for proofs of the evils wrought by the liquor habit. There were some rather unique "exhibits;" one boy brought his bicycle tire that had been cut by a drunken man; others told stories of what they had seen.

This same plan could be utilized for a general exercise on Temperance Sunday. For a first attempt, special arrangements would probably have to be made with individuals or with teachers in order to insure definite reports or "exhibits."

"It is reported in the public press that President Taft had turned his back on moderate drinking. At a little dinner at Hot Springs, Va., he not only turned his wine-glass down, but said in response to a query, 'Yes, and it is going to stay turned down; I am not going to drink anything again, ever.'"

In his early life Lincoln was abstemious but not a total abstainer, but he was a keen observer of the effects of intoxicating beverages among his early companions. Very shortly after his removal to Springfield in 1837, he joined a Total Abstinence society.

Seventeen of the presidents of the United States signed the following declaration:

"Being satisfied from observation and experience, as well as from medical testimony, that ardent spirit, as a drink, is not only needless, but hurtful, and that the entire disuse of it would tend to promote the health, the virtue, and happiness of the community, we hereby express our conviction that should the citizens of the United States, and especially the young men, discontinue entirely the use of it they would not only promote their own personal benefit, but the good of our country and the world."

"A Pennsylvania lady tells that when General Harrison was running for the presidency he stopped at the old Washington house in Chester for dinner. After dinner was served, it was noticed that the general pledged his toast in water, and one of the gentlemen from New York, in offering another, said, 'General, will you not favor me by drinking a glass of wine?' The general refused in a very gentlemanly manner. Again he was urged to join in a glass of wine. This was too much. He rose from the table, his tall form erect and in the most dignified manner replied: 'Gentlemen, I have refused twice to partake of the wine-cup. That should have been sufficient. I made a resolve when I started in life that I would avoid strong drink, and I have never broken it.'"

The boys and girls can join the Golden Rule in a series of very interesting adventures with the doctors, medical societies and laboratories, where from these friends they may obtain ammunition for their warfare against intemperance.

Twenty-three hundred years ago, the question arose whether the Athenians should grant Demosthenes the honor of a crown. He "had fled from battle, and his counsels, though heroic, brought the city to ruin. Demosthenes' speech is the masterpiece of all eloquence. Of the accusation by Aeschines it is praise enough to say that it stands second only to that. In it Aeschines warns the Athenians that in granting crowns they judged themselves and were forming the characters of their children.

Self-knowledge cures self-love.

This is an exact representation of the carton containing a bottle of St. Joseph's Liquid Liver Regulator, but it is much larger than this illustration, and printed in black ink on a yellow carton. Druggists and general merchants sell it at 50 cents a bottle, or you can get it direct from us at the same price. This is a delightful liver medicine—prompt, effective, and exceedingly pleasant to the taste. Try just one bottle to satisfy yourself—and you'll buy more.

Practical Application Needed.

It is not talk so much that the farmers need now but some practical application of what they already know. It is well enough for the fraternal end of the union to be kept going, but it is on the cards that the business end is going to progress as well. The stockholders through their boards of directors and managers of warehouses should look out for their own business interests while the officials work the membership up to keeping in line and help the business by their patronage.

Just About Horses.

Individual excellence is better than a lengthy pedigree.

Viciousness in a horse is usually due to training or association.

Punishing a horse for things he cannot help is one way of ruining him.

The horse weighing about 1,400 pounds is spoken of as the "handy weight."

Mow out the corners of the fences next to the fields of grain. Save the hay you get, too. It is worth $10 a ton, every bit of it.

Intemperance in France.

The Minister of Justice in France has just recently issued some significant statistics: Out of 100 persons convicted of murder, 53 were confirmed drunkards; out of 100 persons convicted of arson, 57 were confirmed drunkards; out of 100 persons convicted of begging and vagabondage, 70 were confirmed drunkards; of 100 persons convicted of assault, 90 were confirmed drunkards; of 500 persons convicted of all offenses, 323 were drunkards, or two-thirds of these convicted for various assaults were drunkards. France is the country whose light wines have been held up as 'promotive of temperance,' yet figures such as these furnished by the minister of justice show markedly the dire evils of existing intemperance.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE FARMERS.

The much talked of season of hard times and business depression has failed to arrive; the prophecies of the chronic knocker are waning in the fulfillment and the dire misfortunes predicted by the ever present calamity howler have died in the borning. Alabama, Chilton county and Clanton, instead of going to the bow wows, as forecasted by would-be-wise sires, has gone steadily onward upon the road of material development that leads to certain success and abundant prosperity.

We are enjoying the fruits of our labors as never before; the cry of poverty is hushed throughout this heaven-blessed section; on every side is heard the tuneful tones of thrift and prosperity. The frugal farmer will not have to draw upon the store house of the West for his corn supply, for the harvest will in our own fields is abundant in the extreme.

The cotton producer is satisfied with the results of his labors and the shining coin which high prices for his staple enables him to secure and jingle in his jeans, not only makes a glad some sound to his ears, but fills his heart with joyful anticipations of a happy Christmas-tide. All things conspire to make his lot a pleasant one indeed.

The Chilton County Farmer is fast assuming that place in the economic relations of life which his avocation predestined him to occupy the front rank—a leader among the advance guard. Long faces have been succeeded by smiling countenances and mortgaged homes and farms are soon to become happy firesides and productive fields of pleasure. Hard times have been vanquished and prosperity is victorious.

Contentment, peace and plenty are knocking at every door.

We are now entering upon an era of commercial development never heretofore anticipated; a season of rich rewards for honest toil is now dawning and will soon burst with noonday splendor upon our people.

The farmers are happy as they should be, for mother earth has yielded them rich trophies for their plucking; prices are soaring amid the radiant beauty of the stars; his products are in demand as never before.

Cotton is again King and corn is the Prince Imperial. What more could the planter desire to make his cup of gladness overflow?

Farmers of Chilton County, we greet you as the two fold kings and producers of our prosperity. You are they who have produced the wealth of our Country and upon your heads we pour our praises in unstinted measure. You have earned your reward and should enjoy the fruits of your labors.

The Merchant who has bought wisely and well rejoices at your success,

The cotton buyer whose heart beats in unison with your own, is light in the oportunity afforded him to give you good prices for your staple; he who would with hold from you the best and highest that the market affords is neither a friend to the farmer nor a wise man of business.

We want you to succeed, because in your success we also shall share.

We have bought not stingily but well; we have purchased in keeping with your position and your desire; you want the best, therefore we supplied ourselves with the best that we might accommodate to your taste and your demands.

Desiring to have you make our place headquarters, we have arranged to pay the very top notch for every pound of the fleecy staple brought to our store.

We want to have a hand in your prosperity; we wish to be remembered in your rejoicing.

Come to us with your sample, we will top the market on every occasion; call upon us for your wants, our large and varied stock enables us to meet your every requirement and at prices that will make glad for the visit.

We hate the chronic croker, we despise the knocker and the pessimist. The old world is bright with hope, buoyant with success, happy in plenteous abundance. We want you to know that we rejoice at your season of success, you desire it and we hope you will enjoy it to the fullest extent.

Come to see us, your happy faces make us glad indeed.

Come whether you want to buy or sell, both or either or neither. We will be glad to greet you.

We are going to set the gait this year and those who would keep up with us must clip it off at a merry chase.

Cordially yours,

W. KANTER & BRO.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Rights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

Next week comes the County Fair and it should be a notable week for Chilton county. The management and conducting of the Fair has entailed a vast amount of work and very considerable expense upon the patriotic managers of the association, and it is only a fair return for their arduous labors for every man, woman and child to turn out and visit the Fair, see what is being done for the betterment of our people and the encouragement of our agricultural interests.

If you are not an exhibitor come and see what your neighbors are doing—it will be a pleasure to meet with one another and compare notes. It will be profitable to all to get a thorough understanding of the condition of our county, and it will be a delight to meet old friends.

The ladies of the Methodist Ladies Aid Society have arranged to furnish meals at reasonable prices to visitors and will be highly delighted to wait upon you.

We hope to see a record breaking attendance and urge everyone to come to the Fair.

Mountain Creek Mystery.

As told exclusively in the last issue of The Banner the dead body of a white man was found near the Soldiers Home at Mountain Creek a week ago last Tuesday.

The body was found in a sitting position against a tree, a bullet hole in the head being the cause of death, but who fired the fatal shot the investigation fails to show. No pistol could be found near the body, the man's coat was missing, while a cheap watch was on the person, no money was found in the clothes.

Coroner D. N. Riggins, with a jury composed of Ed Smitherman, W. G. Kicker, Brown and Cox, conducted the investigation which lasted three days, Wednesday and Thursday of last week and adjourned to Monday.

It appears the deceased was A. McEwen, a traveling salesman of Birmingham, who several years resided at Mountain Creek and had friends in the neighborhood. He came down from Birmingham and visited the family of Mr. G. W. Owens and after a visit to the Soldiers Home was the last time he was seen alive.

The first suspicion fell upon Frank Ryder, a nephew of the dead man, and he was arrested and placed in jail at Clanton, but it was soon ascertained he could have had no part in the death of his uncle and was discharged. A negro Jim Massey, was also arrested but there was no evidence to connect him with the death and he was soon released.

The jury on Monday returned a verdict that deceased came to his death by a gunshot wound in the head in the hands of a party or parties unknown to the jury, and the mystery remains a mystery.

The revolver which caused the death of McEwen has not been found, neither has the coat of the deceased been found, despite the fact that the woods where the body was found has been thoroughly searched.

Frank Massey, the negro at first arrested in connection with the death of McEwin, the charge later being changed to that of selling whiskey without a license, was Monday bound over by Justice of peace J. Jones in the sum of $500 to await the action of the County Court.

All Day Singing.

There will be an all-day singing at the court house, Clanton, on the first Sunday in October. Harmony and song books will be used. Everybody is invited to come and bring your books and baskets well filled with something to eat. The people of Clanton are especially invited. Everybody come and let us sing praises to God.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guard unless you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who hand us our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

CHILTON COUNTY FAIR ASS'N

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Banner—As I have heard considerable talk and misrepresentation of the facts concerning the escape of one Ransom, whom Judge Reynolds was taking to the mines, I feel that fairness and Justness demand that I give to the public the facts in the case. I was on the train with Judge Reynolds on the day he was taking Ransom to the mines. The Judge and I were sitting on the same seat, and the prisoner just behind us. Just before reaching one of the stations, the prisoner asked permission to go into the toilet. While he was in the toilet, the train stopped,—at this station the prisoner was still in the toilet, and Judge Reynolds went and stood in the toilet with the prisoner until the train pulled, and was running at least 25 miles an hour, when the Judge came out of the toilet and stood at the door. The prisoner then closed the door and locked it on the inside. The Judge then got the flagman to unlock the door, but by the time it was opened Ransom had jumped out of the window. There was absolutely no carelessness or negligence on the part or Judge Reynolds, as the prisoner was handcuffed all the while, and there is no reason for any one to presume that a man would jump out of the win-

Hunting for a Spectacle Peddler or Fakir

Last Wednesday morning one of Preacher Browns' sons from west Chilton came into Dr. Higgins office at Clanton enquiring if he had seen or knew anything of a spectacle pedler whose supposed name was Summerland. Dr. Higgins was unable to give any information as to whereabouts of the "Eye glass fakir." It stated by Mr. Brown that the supposed Optican had fitted several pairs of glasses in his section of the county and that the pedler is ordered to fake the people, stated that he would make Clanton his headquarters and that if any of the glasses which he had fitted failed to give entire satisfaction, he would be in his office at Clanton and would make good all troubles that the glasses might give etc. Dr. Higgins was unable to give information, but stated to Mr. Brown that he had spent several hundred dollars in preparing himself at a reputable college for the work of fitting eye glasses and other optical work, and had also gone to an expense of several hundred dollars in fitting up a neat optical office in Clanton, and charged only a reasonable amount for the work done by him; the usual charges ranging from five to fifteen dollars, but in some instance satisfaction is guaranteed. And he wishes to say further that if the people of Chilton and adjoining Counties desire to spend their money with spectacle fakirs, besides running the risk of ruining their eye sight, when they have a graduated optican within close call of them, he desires to be excused from all blame in the matter. He further asks that the people of Chilton county be more careful in matters concerning such a delecate organ as the human eye, and when requiring the service of any one, that they will consult with those who have made a special study of that particular branch of science.

Dr. Higgins has had two parties to call recently, one of them paid $5.00 and the other $8.00 for a pair of pedler's glasses which were absolutely worthless to the purchaser and tended to do great harm.

We extend our hearty congratulations to Dr. Higgins for his efforts in behalf of those who suffer with their eyes and suggest to those in Chilton and adjoining counties that when in need of an eye specialist they consult with him.

A GRAND DISPLAY.

Everybody and especially the ladies are invited to come and take a look through our store on Thursday and Friday, October 6th and 7th. On those days we are going to put on sale one of the largest and most complete stocks of House Furnishings ever carried in a small town, which will be sold at reduced prices (ON THESE DATES ONLY.) These goods consist of a large and well selected stock of Matting from 15 cents up. Also a large and beautiful lot of Rugs and Art Squares—Rugs ranging in price from 35c to $4.00; Art Squares from $4.50 to $30.00. Hall Curtains, Window Shades, Window Curtains, Curtain Poles, Counterpains, ready made Pillowcases, Pictures, etc., will be included in this sale. Remember the date and place Thursday and Friday, October 6th-7th. Spigener's Cash Store, next door to post office.

Thorsby

The town election of officers held last week gave Jonathan Bice a majority of one vote for the office of mayor (which he now holds) over J. R. Parnell, his opponent. Amos Altman, Charles Howard, E. F. Mead, L. Bromburg and G. R. Heaton were elected Aldermen, and J. R. Parnell, C. A. Paterson, M. J. Soburg and Ben Franklin were the choice of the voters for school commissioners.

At the last meeting of the town council an ordiance was passed that will probably aid in making stock law effective in Thorsby.

A very substancial improvement is contemplated by the Northrop Manufacturing and supply Co., which expects soon to erect a factory building of brick 30x60 feet to manufacture fine tools and machines chiefly for dentists' use and as an annex, an electric light plant for the town and ice plant will be installed.

The cotton crop of Chilton county, owing to unfavorable weather conditions, will not arrange over 50 per cent of an ordinary yield, but the corn crop will exceed any ever grown in this section, many fields yielding upwards of 100 bushels per acre. M. J. Barrett of Thorsby, cut 69 tons of green corn fodder from eight acres of ground with which to fill his two large silos.

Gust Burlin was one of the unfortunates whose crops were totally distroyed by a severe hail storm in June, too late to renew. He therefore has sold his fine herd of dairy cows to the Montevallo Industerial school, where a model dairy is being established.

The Twin Oaks poultry plant now has upward of 1,000 thoroughbreds Houdons and Indian games and are rapidly augmenting the flocks by hatching with a view to reaching 10,000 fowls within a year.

Thorsby Institute opened last week with the largest enrollment of students at the begining of any since the school started five years ago. Many more are intending to come in as soon as the crods are gathered.

Notice.

The members of the Clanton Baptist church will hold an adjourned conference at the church on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, October 2 for the purpose of calling a pastor for the ensuing year.

39 MEET DEATH IN WRECK OF CARS

Going at High Speed When Trains Collided.

CRASH CAME ON A CURVE

People Were En Route to a Fair at Fort Wayne, Ind.—Misunderstanding of Orders Is Said to Have Caused Collision.

Thirty-nine persons were killed and seven seriously injured in a head-on collision between two traction cars on the Fort Wayne, (Ind.) and Wabash Valley line.

The wreck occurred 1 1-2 miles north of Kingsland, 7 miles north of Bluffton, at a sharp curve. The cars in collision were a northbound local car, crowded to the steps, and a southbound "extra" car from Fort Wayne. They met while both were running at high speed.

There were two physicians on the cars at the time of the wreck. One of them escaped serious injury, and the other, who had himself been painfully hurt, rendered assitance to those who survived the shock of the collision.

Relief cars were hurried from Fort Wayne, and physicians went from Bluffton in automobiles. Many of the dead already had been removed from the debris of the splintered cars, and the gruesome work of taking out the mangled remains of those in the further recesses of the wreckage was taken up by the more skillful hands of the company's wrecking crew.

Most of the people on the northbound car were en route to the fair at Fort Wayne, where they intended to make merry.

ACCIDENT ON BATTLESHIP.

Crew of the Georgia Have Miraculous Escape When Gun Burst.

During target practice of the Atlantic fleet off the Virginia capes, one of the big 12-inch 50-ton guns of the battleship Georgia burst on the first range shot. The muzzle as far back as the forward end of the jacket was blown off. The crew miraculously escaped injury.

The accident was to the left gun in the forward turret of the Georgia and the big rifle probably was ruined. The report of the accident reached the navy department at Washington in a wireless dispatch from the commander in chief, Rear Admiral Schroeder.

The Georgia is commanded by Capt. William L. Rodgers, and is the flagship of Rear Admiral Samuel P. Comly, commander of the third division of the Atlantic fleet.

The accident, of course, put a material part of the Georgia's battery out of business, but the battleship still has thee 12-inch guns to work with and will continue the target practice with them. It will not interfere with the Georgia's participation in the coming European cruise of the Atlantic fleet, for another gun, which is built at the Washington navy yard, will be in readiness to replace the ruined one on November 1.

ARBITRATION PLANNED.

There Will Be No Lockout On England on the First of October.

The dispute between the cotton manufacturers and their employees is now in a fair way of settlement. At a meeting of the card room amalgamation it was decided to submit for arbitration the question at issue, which threatened a lockout in the entire cotton trade by October 1.

For a long time there has been a dispute between the owners of the Fern mill at Oldham and their employees because of a new arrangement of working conditions. A few days ago the Federation of Master Cotton Spinners decided to enforce a general lockout, affecting directly 150,000 operatives unless the Fern mill question was settled. The decision followed the refusal of the employees to submit the matter to an arbitration commission. It is now believed an amicable settlement is assured.

NICARAGUAN REVOLT ENDS.

Americans Are Said to be Well Satisfied With Outcome of War.

W. A. Connelly, general manager of a large mining concern in the Pispis district of Nicaragua, who arrived at New Orleans, reports internal affairs quieter than ever before in the history of the country.

Regarding stories of political unrest and anti-Estrada sentiment, Mr. Connelly said:

"The revolution is over, and you might state that there is not a foreigner, especially an American, in the country of Nicaragua who is not satisfied with the outcome. President Estrada is very popular there, and he will apparently make one of the best executives that could have been selected for the place."

"Lately," he continued, "several new governors have been appointed Ernesto Fraanandes is the recently appointed governor at Bluefields, while Maireno is the new governor at Cape Craclas."

JUDGE SCOTT SLAIN.

Cordele Planter Is Victim of a Tenant's Gun. . . .

As the result of an altercation between Judge J. B.Scott and J. Hillary Day, on the former's plantation, on which the latter is a tenant about 10 miles east of Cordele, Ga., Judge Scott is dead and Day is incarcerated in the county jail with a slight knife wound about his body, inflicted by a knife in the hands of Judge Scott.

The men had become involved in a dispute over the possession of some cotton grown on the place by Day, when Judge Scott, who lives with his family in Cordele, went out to his farm armed with a possessory warrant for the cotton. A difficulty ensued.

It is understood Judge Scott advanced on Day, slashing him with a knife. Day drew his pistol and fired, killing Scott instantly.

Day immediately hurried to town and surrendered to the officers. Both were men of families, Judge Scott being 65 years of age, while Day is about 40.

JOY RIDERS ARE TRAILED BY DEATH

Fast Speeding Auto Dashed Into Canal.

4 PERSONS ARE DROWNED

Accident Came as a Climax to An All Night Frolic at a Popular Resort as Party Was Returning to New Orleans.

All four occupants of a large touring car returning from a lake resort to New Orleans were drowned when the car, rounding a curve in the West End shell road at a high rate of speed shot straight ahead and plunged into the new basin canal.

The accident came as a climax to a night's frolic, the party having spent the greater part of the night at West End, a famous summer resort near New Orleans.

The Dead.

W. R. Freeman, 35 years old, of 235 William street, New York City.

Thomas Boettler, 43 years old, of New Orleans.

Dorothy Hall, 21 years old, of New Orleans.

Marian Giblen, 25 years old, of New Orleans.

A laborer on his way to work was the only witness to the accident. He said the car passed him at such a clip that he was unable to note how many persons it contained. It was at first reported that the car had seven occupants when it left West End, and the canal was dragged for three hours.

Later it was difinitely established that Boettler, Freeman and the two women were the only persons in the car when it went into the canal.

Although the bodies remained at the bottom of the canal but a few hours, shrimp, crabs and garfish disfigured them to such an extent that they were barely recognizable. Several of them had ears and noses eaten completely off. The identity of the women was established largely through their wearing apparel and their hair.

FIVE PERSONS SHOT.

Ambushed by Unknown Party Near Little Rock, Ark.

Five persons, three whites and two negroes were shot from ambush by an unknown person while driving on the Sweethome pike, 4 miles of Little Rock. One of the number, an unidentified negro, was instantly killed.

Mrs. Charles Diehl, of Little Rock, was the first victim. She was brought to a local hospital and is believed to be seriously wounded.

Fred Gossell and Miss Nellie Meyers, driving past the same place a short time later, were also shot. A charge of shot struck Gossell in the head, but he will recover. Miss Meyers was only slightly injured.

DOUBLE LYNCHING BY MOB AT TAMPA

Two Italians Taken From Officers by Armed Men.

HANGED TO THE SAME LIMB

It Is Charged That the Two Italians Had Attempted the Assassination of the Bookkeeper of the Diaz Cigar Factory.

A double lynching, growing out of the strike situation, occurred just outside the city limits of Tampa. An armed mob of about 60 men took Angelo Albano and Gustenge Pizarro ti from Deputy Sheriffs W. E. Evans and Joseph Bryant and conveyed them to a point about a mile distant, hanging them to the same limb of a cypress tree in a swamp on the edge of Grand Central avenue, one of the main arteries of travel, leading westward from the city.

Taken From Officers.

The two men, Italians, were arrested on warrants charging them with the attempted assassination of J. F. Easterling, bookkeeper of the Bustillo Brothers & Diaz factory. The men were arrested and taken to the West Tampa city jail.

Fearing violence, Sheriff Jackson sent Deputies Evans and Bryant to the West Tampa jail with orders to bring the two men to the county jail for safe keeping. They secured the prisoners from Marshal Logan, placed them in a hack and started towards the county jail in Tampa. They were accompanied by Deputy Sheriffs Evans and Bryant. When the hack in which the four men were riding reached Howard and Grand Central avenues a squad of armed men estimated in numbers from 50 to 75, halted the party.

The determined mob quietly took the prisoners from the officers and carried them to a grove of trees where they were hanged upon the same limb.

The mob then dispersed without any further demonstration.

6 DEAD, 20 INJURED.

Disobedience of Orders Caused Disastrous Accident.

Disobedience of orders by the crew of a freight car is said to have been the cause of the second interurban traction wreck within a week in Indiana. The later disaster cost the lives of six persons, the serious injury of six more persons and severe hurts to a score.

A southbound freight car crashed head-on into a northbound passenger car on the Indianapolis and Peru division of the Indiana Union Traction Company two miles north of Tipton, Ind. The freight car was in charge of Motorman Lacey and Conductor Sebonte.

The freight car, it is said, had orders to stop at the first switch north of Ressler's crossing, but tried to make the first switch south. A clump of tree hid the limited and the crew of the freight barely had time to jump to save their lives. The front end of the limited was shattered and all passengers in the smoking compartment were killed.

THROUGH THE RAPIDS.

Man in Barrel Braves the Whirlpool of Niagara.

Bobby Leech, of Ningara Falls, Ont., made a trip through the Whirlpool rapids in a barrel, starting from the Maid of the Mist, landing near the Cantilever bridge. Except for a few scratches and bruises, Leach, who claims to have made the trip several times before, was uninjured.

Leach entered the rapids at 3:37, and went through them in three minutes, riding the tremendous waves smoothly. The great wave caught the barrel and hurled it clear of the water, but it righted itself nicely and went on to the Whirlpool without mishap. Five times the barrel circled the Whirlpool, keeping to the outer edge. At the south end of the pool it was caught in an inshore eddy and floated in close enough to be caught with a pole at 5:05.

The only one of the barrel navigators to be killed in the trip to the Whirlpool was Maud Willard, who suffocated in her barrel in September, 1901. She was in the whirlpool for five hours.

CUT BY COTTON MILLS.

Curtailment Will Be Equally as Severe as in Summer Months.

From present indications, October will witness curtailment among southern cotton mills equally as severe as that which has been carried on since July 1.

T. W. Crews, of Charlotte, secretary of the Southern Hard Yarn Spinners' association, stated that in his opinion curtailment of at least 50 per cent would be carried on into October, and later, unless conditions improve materially. He estimates that hard yarn mills of the south have curtailed at least 50 per cent since July 1.

He said further that the situation in the yarn markets this week and last week was not as good as that obtaining before. There must be decided improvement, he thinks, before mills can afford to run anything like full time.

LOW DEATH RATE.

Lowest in History, According to Census Bureau.

The death rate in the United States in 1909 was 15 in each 1,000, according to a bulletin about to be issued by the census bureau. This is the lowest average ever recorded for this country. The figures cover only the cities and states having laws requiring the registration of deaths. These represent 55.3 per cent of the estimated total of population.

In addition returns were received from 54 cities having local registration laws.

The total number of deaths recorded was 732,538, of which 398,587, or over 54 per cent were of males. The greatest mortality occurred in March and the lowest in June.

SLAIN BY ASSASSINS.

Ed Sherrod and J. F. Hewitt Shot from Ambush and Killed.

Ed Sherrod and J. F. Hewitt were shot from ambush at Cook's camp, 20 miles north of Huntsville, Ala., and killed. Six suspects are now in the Scott county jail. Those arrested are John Bunch and son, Joe Low, Nelson Low, Jack Low and Jack Bradley. The killing is supposed to have been a sequel to the killing of Riley Low three months ago by Hewitt, it is alleged.

Sunday morning Ed Sherrod and J. F. Hewitt were standing in front of the Cook commissary on the Tennessee railroad, when they were fired upon from ambush and killed. Bloodhounds were secured from Somerset, Ky, and resulted in the arrest of six suspects, who were placed in the Scott county jail at Huntsville.

Sherrod and Hewitt were prominent citizens of Scott county.

CONFESSES TO KILLING.

Feeble-Minded Girl Says She Slew Men When They Whipped Her.

Ebby Sheppard, the 15-year old daughter of J. W. Sheppard, who, with his brother, Taylor Sheppard, was murdered at their home in Newkirk, Okla., Friday morning has, it is said, confessed to the county attorney and sheriff that she killed the two men.

In her confession she declared the cause of the crime was that the men whipped her. She also went to the woodshed, secured the ax with which the crime was committed, and gave it to the officers. The girl has always been considered feeble-minded.

FATAL FAMILY FEUD.

Results In Death of Two Prominent Young Farmers.

John L. Marchant, of Coffitt county, and Charles H. Tate, of Mitchell county, prominent young farmers and brothers-in-law, are dead as a result of a pistol battle at close range. The double tragedy took place in the public road, eight miles southeast of Pelham, Ga. Mrs. Tate and Mrs. John Wilkes, a sister of Marchant, witnessed the fatal shooting affray.

The tragedy, according to report, was the result of a family feud of long standing.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES.

A New York dispatch says: With a fortune estimated as high as $50,000,000, John S. Lyle, who will be 93 years old next month, has just taken a wife whom he has established in his beautiful country home. The bride, who was Miss Julia Hannon, a trained nurse, is 63 years younger than her husband, whom she met when she was sent from a hospital to care for his sister-in-law two years ago. The wife will inherit the entire fortune, as there were no children from his first marriage.

A survey of Auburn, Ala., streets, preliminary to the construction of a sewerage system for the town, is being conducted by the students of the civil engineering course, under the direction of Professor Mitcham and his assistants. A portion of the system was installed during the last college session by the students.

The dedication of the statue of Baron Von Steuben, of American revolutionary fame, in Washington, will take place December 21 next. Congress appropriated $50,000 for the statue and provided that a duplicate be presented to the emperor of Germany. The dedication will be marked by elaborate military ceremonies. President Taft will preside and make an address. The kaiser probably will despatch Major General Tuebon, on the German general staff, to represent him at the unveiling.

Joseph and L. Vacarro, brothers, have, it is said, turned over to the New Orleans police letters which they had received demanding $5,000 upon threats of death. The letters were written in Italian, and were signed "Black Hand." Both brothers are members of the firm which controls the Vacarro steamship line, with fruit steamers plying between New Orleans and Mobile and Central American ports.

The Utah Democratic state platform adopted at the state convention at Provo, Utah, demands a prohibition law, direct primary elections, the election of United States senators by popular vote, the initiative and referendum and recall and a tariff commission. The conservation plank advocates co-operation by the state and national governments and the widest use of public lands for settlement and mining.

The right of Columbia college to property worth approximately $1,000,000 bequeathed to its cancer research fund by George Crocker, the California millionaire, who died in New York on December 4, 1909, was attacked when Crocker's step-children applied to the supreme court for an injunction to prevent the executors of the millionaire's will from selling the property or leasing it, pending the determination of an action brought to establish their right to the property.

The congressional convention for eighth Georgia district, called by the committee on September 10, met at Athens and resulted in the nomination of W. M. Howard by the regularly organized convention, and of S. J. Tribble by a preliminary meeting which had gathered in Athens from the surrounding counties. Both candidates claim the regular nomination.

Theodore Roosevelt has accepted invitation of the Merchants and Manufacturers' association, of Rome, Ga., to deliver an informal address in that city when he visits the Berry school on Saturday, October 8. Colonel Roosevelt will speak at the monument to the memory of the women of the south, on Broad street, this being the only memorial of its kind in the country.

NEWS NOTES FROM FOREIGN LANDS.

Two bombs, one of 2,000-horse power, the other of 1,500, were seized at Moscow in connection with the arrest of twelve anarchist-communists. Ramifications of the terrorist body were traced to several neighboring cities, where thirty other suspects have been arrested. Their bomb manufactory at Helsingfors was discovered and confiscated.

A sensation was created by the publication at Tokio, Japan, of the alleged details of a plot among his own subjects to assassinate Emperor Mutsuhito. The startling story appeared in The Hochi Shinbun, which states that the plotters, who are under arrest, certainly will be sentenced to death after trials before a special secret court. This is the first time in the history of the country that the life of the sovereign has been plotted against by his own people, and the fact known.

It is possible that the American state department will be asked to intervene in the controversy that has grown out of the extension of the Mexican National railroad line into Gautamalan territory.

The feat was scomplished in an attempt to win the prize of $20,000 offered by the Italian Aviation society, of Milan, for a flight from Brig, Switzerland, to Milan. Chavez, however, was unable to complete the trip, having sustained painful injuries when he alighted at Domodossola, Italy. His machine was overturned and he was buried in the wreckage. It is not believed, however, that his injuries are serious.

A London dispatch says: A bust with Charles Dickens has been ordered by the death of Mrs. G. H. Hogman, one of the novelist's close personal friends. She was asserted by her family to have been the original Little Dorrit. She would have reached her 81st birthday next month. Mrs. Heyman's father was a solicitor living in London, and was for years an intimate friend of Dickens. The novelist was a visitor at his house and took keen interest in all the members of the family.

The figures at the sanitary bureau at St. Petersburg show that during the present cholera epidemic in Russia there have been 191,026 cases with 4,716 deaths throughout the empire. In the week ending September 17 there was a total of 4,412 cases with 2,071 deaths. In the last six days there have been 301 new cases with 63 deaths in St. Petersburg.

WATER AN AID TO DIGESTION

Medical Investigators Have Concluded That Plentiful Drinking at Meals Is Distinctly Beneficial.

Medical investigators have reached the conclusion that instead of being harmful to drink quantities of water with meals it is distinctly beneficial. Recent experiments along this line are described in The New York Medical Journal. The writer says:

"Not long ago it was almost the rule for physicians to discourage the habit of drinking water except in minimum amounts with meals, on the ground that the gastric juice was thereby diluted and that digestion was impaired and delayed. This opinion is still held by many physicians, and to the pet hobby of a great many diet cranks and cranks—professional and amateur.

"On the other hand, there have been many who believed that an appetite so widely distributed as the desire to drink at the time of eating, an appetite seen in so many animals as well as in man, was a perfectly safe guide to trust, and that it was obviously a provision of Nature to supply water which was needed at this time.

"Recent experimental evidence seems to confirm the latter view. The work of Foster and Lambert has shown that water is a distinct stimulant to the gastric mucosa, and that instead of the presence of water in the stomach resulting in a dilute gastric juice, it, on the other hand, occasions the secretion of a juice of higher concentration than under ordinary circumstances.

"More recently Fowler and Hawk have made a study of the metabolic influences of copious water drinking with meals. A normal man, 22 years of age, was studied for a preliminary period and then for a period of five days, during which he drank three quarts of water a day with his meals. The result showed an increase in weight of two pounds.

BEWARE OF THE GASOLINE

At All Times Extreme Watchfulness Is Necessary With This Necessary Fluid.

"Take warning!" is a motto that should be pasted in large letters on every bottle and can of gasoline that is kept in the house.

This cleansing fluid is as useful as it is dangerous under careless handling. Here are a few precautions which observed will reduce danger to a minimum:

Keep it outdoors when not in use, as in many cases fire insurance is lost if it can be proved that gasoline was on the premises.

Be careful how you clean gloves on the arm. Dreadful accidents have happened in this way.

Never keep the gasoline can near the coal oil can. They look too much alike.

A woman went to light a lamp and discovered that it flamed in a curious way; indeed, shot up almost to the ceiling. It was discovered later that the maid had filled the lamp with oil until one can was exhausted, then had taken the gasoline can, which looked exactly like it. A slightly smaller proportion of the oil and great would have been the tragedy.

Do not close a house for the summer with gasoline or coal oil in it, though you may think it is secure put away.

A hot iron and blotting paper will remove grease from wall paper.

Use strong coffee and a few drops of ammonia to clean black coats.

One tablespoonful of water or milk should be allowed for each egg in an omelet.

Rice will absorb three times its measure of water and a larger quantity of milk or stock.

Allow from four to six eggs to each quart of milk in making custard to be turned from the mold.

When making hot starch add a tablespoonful of sugar. This will retain the stiffness longer than usual.

The ordinary French dressing (three tablespoons oil, one and one-half tablespoons vinegar, one-quarter level teaspoon salt, one-eighth level teaspoon pepper) will moisten one pint of salad.

The creaking of a door can be stopped by rubbing the hinge with a little soap or lard. If the door sticks, soap rubbed on the place where it binds will allow it to shut easily.

Chamois gloves should be washed on the hands with mild soap and water. Then take off and rinse in water that is lukewarm and has a tablespoonful of olive oil well mixed before putting in the gloves. Dry in the shade.

For Young Housekeepers.

An acceptable engagement present for the girl who expects to go to housekeeping in a small apartment is a set of cook books in a small rack the size to stand in the pantry. Stand, books and all are not more than six inches square, yet contain a number of valuable recipes.

The little books are attractively bound in red or green leather, with gilt edges, and the titles lettered on the back. There is a book on cocktails, a book on odd dishes, on sandwiches and on the chafing dish.

Leftover Fruit.

When there is a dish of or a few berries left over from a meal, do not leave them sitting around waiting for some one to eat them up, but put them in a sauce pan with a little sugar and cook down. Then pour into a jelly glass and let cool. You will will have a good jam made from fresh fruit, whereas before your berries would have been wasted. Both kinds of raspberries, dewberries and blackberries may be used this way at little labor and expense.

Potato Puffs.

To two cupfuls of mashed potatoes add three tablespoonfuls of cream, salt and pepper to taste, add the beaten yolks of two eggs and stir over the fire until hot and well mixed. Take from the fire, add the whites of the eggs whipped to a dry froth, drop in heaps in a greased baking pan and brown in a hot oven.

Cream of Pea Soup.

Blend one tablespoonful of butter and one of flour, and add slowly two cups of cold milk. Have a can of peas pressed through a sieve and add enough water to make two cups, season well and add to the cream. Serve with a tablespoonful of whipped cream on each plate.

Lemon Souffle.

Put in a double boiler the juice and rind of two lemons, one tablespoon butter, and two tablespoons sugar, the yolks of four eggs. Stir till thick, then fold in lightly the stiffly beaten whites. Pour in a well-buttered souffle dish and bake 15 minutes in a moderate oven, sprinkle with sugar and serve.

Ice Help.

To keep a plate or bowl from slipping off of the ice in the ice chest first put one thickness of newspaper on the ice and any vessel can then be placed on it with perfect safety, as it will not slip.

TURN THE KERCHIEF

MAY OFTEN BE MADE TO DO OTHER SERVICE.

Clever Woman Can Make the Little Linen Squares Play Many Parts—Jabots, Aprons, Laundry Bags, Etc., May Be Made.

A little handkerchief is a practical thing if you regard it through the eyes of the clever woman who makes one thing in its day play many parts. It is no unusual thing for women to possess more kerchiefs than they can use. The experiment of turning the pretty squares to other uses should be met favorably by the fair sex.

For a handkerchief holder, or really a little laundry bag, the idea is suggested that will occupy very little time and a decorative place of importance in the bedroom. Two handkerchiefs with scalloped edges are effective when placed together and sewed about one inch from the edge. A beading on the outside, two inches from the top, furnishes a serviceable place for the drawing string of ribbon—the color determined by the other furnishings of the room.

Aprons made of handkerchiefs are attractive gift for the needlewoman. If the large sizes be bought, then decorated borders can be made to play an important part in the construction. Two edges of one square are used for the pointed lower portion, the sides obtained by slanting and hemming the material. From another handkerchief the ruffles can be made, and a ribbon belt and strings made to match the colored border.

A pillow for baby is easily made of four handkerchiefs and strips of insertion to form the diagonals of the square. Dainty and easy of construction, with perhaps a touch of pink or blue if you wish, four handkerchiefs cannot be put to a better use.

From one kerchief a baby cap for a tiny head can be made in about twenty minutes. One edge should be turned back, and fullness allowed for the head by gathering the rest of the square at the back; cut off the pointed flaps and sew into a narrow band of mull or ribbon.

Handkerchief jabots are legion, but one has been sketched to refresh your mind, lest you forget.

Lay the kerchief in pleats to see just how much to allow for the little tabs at the top. Cut off and sew together. Ironing will give the tailored effect of a ready-made. A touch of color, if you wish, can be added by embroidering over the raised flowers or dots.

Don't let the handkerchiefs go to waste. They can be fashioned into pretty gifts for your friends, and no one will appreciate the cleverness of the idea more than recipients.

Gems on Lace Restore Gown.

For the restoration of an evening gown, so that it may do duty during the summer dancing season, sew gems upon the lace.

Laces when cleaned frequently suffer most in the elaborate gown. They are fragile and reach the repair point while the gown is still good.

Then it is that glass gems or large beads come into requisition as beautifiers as well as patches.

Used discreetly they will cover most successfully any small darn or rent and will at the same time enrich and often recolor the garment.

This adding of a new touch to the half-worn article of apparel is frequently truer economy than the rebuilding of a garment, with new materials which usually attain almost the price of a new gown.

Instead of Handwork.

The woman who wants embroidered effects, but does not like arduous work, will welcome a new silk braid that looks like chain stitching.

A design is stamped as for ordinary embroidery and the braid is sewed on the outlines by hand. A few stitching stitches or French knot centers increase the effect of hand embroidery.

These braids come in colors to match most of the new shades of dress material. They are especially effective on pongees and shantung dress in self-tones.

DAINTY LITTLE FLY-ABOUTS

Three Tiny Monoplanes Ordered for Use of New York Society Women—Weighs 180 Pounds.

New York.—Three of the tiniest, prettiest and speediest Vendome monoplanes are now on the way across the ocean and are expected shortly. These dainty little air craft promise to be just the thing to satisfy the growing fad for aviation among American women. Ever since Clifford B. Harmon took up in his Farman biplane Mrs. Harmon, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt and other women have declared their desire for aeroplaning.

It is announced that three pretty French women aviators are to follow to this country shortly after the arrival of these small airships. They will be costumed as the women aviator should be and will be prepared to demonstrate and instruct American women in the art of flying.

Yves De Villers, the representative for the Vendome aeroplane, was at Mineola, L. I., the other day, and said that the little monoplanes are being brought to this country as quickly as possible. At least one of the three machines will be shipped to the aviation grounds in Mineola, where it will make daily flights. It is the smallest one-person fly-about in the world, and weighs 60 pounds less than the famous Santos-Dumont Demoiselle.

The Vendome monoplane is the work of Raoul Vendome, a French builder of aeroplanes. It is equipped with a 12-horsepower Anzani motor, and complete, ready for flying, weighs 180 pounds.

A Concise Description.

An Englishman who was traveling on the C. P. R. had been regarding the somewhat desolate scenery north of Lake Superior, between Chapleau and White River. After gazing out of the window for about half an hour, he turned to his companion and remarked that he could describe Canada in six words. His friend asked for the definition, whereupon he replied: "Lakes, rocks and blooming Christmas trees."

Electricity From Jordan River.

It may seem sacrilegious but nevertheless a company is being formed to build a light and power plant at the falls of the Jordan between Meron and Lake Galilee. The river at this point makes a descent of 700 feet and it is planned to build the plant large enough to supply all of the large towns of Palestine.

A fine Family Medicine.

Every family needs a good pleasant to take liver medicine. There is no remedy known that is better than St. Joseph's Liver Regulator for this purpose. It has been in use for thirty years, and is endorsed by thousands of families as the greatest of all family medicines. It relieves biliousness, constipation, sick headache, etc., and thus preserves good health. It is made in both liquid and powder form. Druggists and general dealers sell it, liquid, 50 cents a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25 cents a box, five boxes for a dollar.

The Secret of Youth

Do you ever wonder how you can remain young, or why other women older than you, look younger than you do?

The secret can be put in a few words: "Preserve your health, and you will preserve your youth."

By "health" we mean not alone physical health, but nerve health, as, sometimes, magnificently strong-looking women are nervous wrecks.

But whether you are weak physically or nervously, you need a tonic, and the best tonic for you is Cardui.

It builds strength for the physical and nervous systems. It helps put flesh on your bones and vitality into your nerves.

Take CARDUI

J 46

The Woman's Tonic

"My mother," writes Mrs. Z. L. Adcock, of Smithville, Tenn., "is 44 years old and is passing through the change of life.

"She was irregular and bloated and suffered terribly. My father stepped over to the store and got her a bottle of Cardui, which she took according to directions and now she is up, able to do her housework and says she feels like a new woman." Try Cardui in your own case.

We cannot help ourselves, the rules of the post office are not to be trifled with.

Commissioner of Agriculture Wilkinson estimates this season's cotton crop of Alabama at 1,100,000 bales, and advises farmers to hold for 15 cents.

William Jennings Bryan announced to a Kansas audience that he would refuse to be bound by party lines when matters of principle are at stake. "I would support an insurgent or progressive Republican in preference to giving my support to a standpat Democrat who does not stand for the principles I do," he said. "I believe a half loaf is better than no loaf at all." Right you are, Mr. Bryan!

THE RIGHT IMPLEMENTS.

I have seen farmers in the South sowing wheat broadcast and plowing it in with a one horse plow. No such work can make a good wheat crop, or oat crop either. Others plow the land and sow the seed broadcast and then harrow it in with an old spike harrow. This is almost as bad for the seed is covered at all sorts of debths, and some hardly covered at all, and a poor growth is the result. The making of a wheat or oat crop depends more on the previous preparation of the soil than anything else. Sowing small grain after corn or on a pea stubble, I will never re-plow the land deeply, but would run the disk harrow lightly over it time and again till the surface is perfectly fine, for winter grain needs to have the lower soil well compacted and tramped over. Then always used a drill for sowing the seed so that it will be put in at a uniform debth and will grow uniformly. The harrow is one of the most important implements on the farm.—W. H. Massey, in Starkville (Miss) Progressive Farmer and Gazette.

The Case in a Nutshell.

Nearly two-thirds of our cotton is shipped to Europe, and the European spinners allow 6 per cent tare—pay for cotton with the idea of including thirty pounds of tare with each five hundred pound bale. As Europe is the dominating factor in cotton buying, taking nearly two thirds of our crop, the world's cotton prices are fixed with a view to 6 per cent tare, and the farmer is cheated when he does not use it. That is all there is to it. So long as cotton was five or six cents a pound, not much more valuable than the bagging or ties, it dont make much difference, but with it at 15 cents a pound. It is up to the farmers to insist on his rights.—Starkville (Miss) Progressive Farmer and Gazette.

Mouse in Hat in Church.

Berlin.—Commotion was caused in a church at Dorsbirn, Bavaria, by a lady who felt something moving in her hat, and found a mouse hidden beneath her artificial flowers.

Cleaning and Bleaching Hats.

The following mixture is recommended for cleaning and bleaching straw hats. It can be used on expensive Panama straws without injuring the material: Sodium bisulphate, five drams; tartaric acid, one dram; borax, five drams. Moisten a small quantity of the powder and apply it with a tooth brush to the hat. First remove the band.

Odors in Refrigerator.

Burn a paper in the refrigerator and it will remove all odors.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

is now a summer as well as a winter remedy. It has the same invigorating and strength-producing effect in summer as in winter.

Try it in a little cold milk or water.

Alabama State Fair.

"Nothing is too good for Alabama or for Birmingham," that is the motto of the Alabama State Fair and of its secretary, Mr. Chaffee. The coup of securing an act that has been featured in London and New York during two years and having it as one of the many free attractions at the Fair' is a worthy one. The Curzon Sisters, the Human Butterfly" is such an act and the securing of it is the feat that has been performed by the Fair management.

The act is expensive, but it was considered none too good to offer the visitors to the State Fair. The Curzon Sisters are marvelous aerial performs first, and then they are wonderfully pretty women and are youthful.

The Rube Acrobat, the modern day vaudeville artist evolved from the circus clown of other times, is a necessity to complete any array of shows and exhibitions. Secretary Frank P. Chaffee of the State Fair realizes this and has secured a star attraction in that line in the act of Frank and True Rice, the best in their line in America, as one of the free attractions for the Fair this fall.

dow of a fast moving train while he was handcuffed.

While I am a Democrat, I believe in just and fair play, and I regret the efforts upon the part of certain individuals to wrongfully misrepresent this matter in an effort to injure Judge Reynolds. I know that there was nothing wrong about his conduct in the matter. Furthermore, Chilton county has not lost one cent by the escape of this prisoner, and to attempt to criticise Judge Reynolds for accomodating the Pratt Consolidated Coal Company in taking this prisoner to them, as they requested, seems to me absolutely absurd and ridiculous.

I want to say, furthermore, that Judge Reynolds has made this county a most excellent officer and no act of his can be justly criticised.

With justness toward all, I am,

Virginia's Vegetable Garden

By Temple Bailey

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.)

Virginia came in, all grubby from digging in her vegetable garden.

"I don't see," her aunt said, "why you like to dig in the dirt."

Virginia flushed. "If you would let me have flowers—" she began.

"I never could fuss with flowers," Miss Cornelia grumbled. "They ain't useful, and I believe in people being useful and things being useful."

Virginia did not argue the question. In fact Virginia did not argue anything. She was still a fair, shrinking child, in spite of her twenty-one years. She had come to live with her aunt when she was a little girl, and it had not taken her long to find out that argument with that strong, stern personality was like beating her head against a stone wall.

The one compensation for the lack of sympathy which she found in her home was the beauty of the country surrounding it. Virginia's childhood had been spent in the city and her aunt's rambling white house, with the orchard to the right of it, and with the garden to the left of it, and the stretch of wooded land behind it, filled her soul with delight. It was in the spring that she liked it best.

Miss Cornelia's ideas as to the duties of young women were old-fashioned. She liked to see Virginia performing domestic tasks in the kitchen or in the living-room, where they sewed together.

But Virginia loved the out of doors. She had begged the privilege of taking care of the vegetable garden when she found that she could not have flowers. Of late, too, there had been a deeper reason for Virginia's joy in her out-of-door work. Across the fence was another garden, and in this garden some one worked whose whistle was as clear as the call of the blackbird on the fence. Now and then the whistle would stop and a voice would give a cheery greeting to Virginia.

"I Am Not, Mark," She Said.

Virginia always sent back timid answers. Miss Cornelia had no use for the neighbors on the other side of the fence. She called them shiftless and refused to recognize that the son of the family was different from the others. She would not admit that his industry was redeeming the scrubby farm that his father had let run to waste. Indeed, Mark Graham's garden promised to be superior to Virginia's. Virginia had spoken of it that morning in a shy conversation over the fence.

"I don't see how you make your lettuce and radishes grow so fast," she had murmured. "Mine are just beginning to show above the ground, and yours will be ready to eat before many days."

"Well, a man knows more about such things," Mark had said, with a glance at the slender hands on the fence rail. "It doesn't seem as if a woman ought to dig."

"Oh, I'd die if I didn't. Aunt Cornelia would keep me sewing in the house, and I love to be out of doors."

"It's a shame," Mark muttered, "that you cannot do as you please. If I—" He stopped suddenly.

Virginia knew what he wanted to say to her. She knew that he loved her, and she knew, too, that he would never tell her as long as he was a poor and struggling farmer. She knew that even if he did ask her Miss Cornelia would never consent to their marriage.

She sighed and he saw her shadowed eyes.

"I wish I could tell you all that is in my heart, Virginia," Mark said.

Virginia smiled bravely and said, "But you mustn't, Mark," and then she had run away from him into the house.

Miss Cornelia had seen the two by the fence and had resolved to keep Virginia, if possible, out of the garden. Miss Cornelia had her own ideas about matrimony for her niece. The young doctor in town who called now and then, and whose admiration of Virginia was obvious, had money, position and a good practice. Therefore, Miss Cornelia argued, if Virginia married, why not marry the doctor?

Virginia liked the doctor, but when she rode with him or walked with him or talked with him on the wide front porch there came to her no such moments of ecstasy as she felt in those brief meetings with Mark at the division line of the two gardens. Somehow in her mind Mark seemed associated with the woods, the blue sky and the sunshine. She knew if she married the doctor she would have to live in town, shut up in the big house that had come to him from his grandfather. On the other hand, however, if she married the doctor he would give her the pretty things her soul craved, for even as Virginia loved the pink and white of the orchard and the blue of the sky, so she loved the daintiness of silken gowns and the sparkle of jewels.

Therefore that night when the doctor asked her to marry him, Virginia put him off with a timid half-promise.

"I must think about it," she said, and went to bed to lie awake and wonder if she could live the rest of her life in the dim old house in town, with a man she did not love.

In the morning she went out early to work in the garden. She could hear Mark's whistle, but even when he called "Good morning" she did not go to the fence. Her broad hat hid her burning cheeks and her hands trembled as she dug around her radishes. Presently Mark came closer and called, "Come here, Virginia."

There was a masterful note in the voice which she had never heard before. She rose and went to him.

"Virginia," he said, abruptly, "they say in the village that you are going to marry the doctor."

Virginia's face flamed. "But I am not," she cried, and in a moment she was transformed. Like a flash it had come to her what it would mean to put Mark out of her life; what it would mean to have the spring go and summer come without these moments of happy meeting.

"I am not, Mark," she said again. "Why, you—" Then her voice died away. She could not tell him what she thought of him. That was the man's part. Mark looked down at her. "I know what you want to say, Virginia," he told her, gently, "and I wish you would say it. It seems as if I had no right to ask you to love me and to marry me. But you won't be happy with the doctor—you won't be happy with anybody but me, Virginia."

It was the serene assertion of the man who knew that he had met his mate. Virginia knew, too, that there was nothing of conceit, nothing to offend, in his sense of security. She was his, as he was hers, and no one should separate them.

Miss Cornelia, unconscious of the awakening of the young people, came down the path and across the garden to play the part of cruel fate. She had ruled Virginia in everything for years and she meant to rule her still.

"Virginia, go back to the house. I won't have you idling in the vegetable garden," she said.

"Aunt Cornelia, I am going to marry Mark," Virginia returned, calmly.

It was useless after that for Miss Cornelia to protest, to bluster, to plead; Virginia had made up her mind. She loved the out of doors and she loved Mark. She said it over and over again. "And I am to have a flower garden, Aunt Cornelia," was all the answer she would make to the old lady's arguments when they had left Mark and were in the house once more.

"But you will never be happy," Aunt Cornelia's tone was tragic.

Virginia pondered for a moment, then she said, "Are you happy, Aunt Cornelia?"

Aunt Cornelia stared. She had not thought of it that way.

"When I am with Mark," Virginia said, "I see beauty in everything. It was he who first made me see the wonderful things in my vegetable garden. When you wouldn't let me grow flowers he found me crying in the orchard under the apple trees, and he showed me the beauty of useful things. Out of the little things of life he gets so much that is interesting and wonderful, and you never showed me any beauty, Aunt Cornelia."

The old woman knew that it was true. Things had been commonplace to her always. To Virginia life would never be commonplace if she married Mark. She rose and went to the window.

"Well, I suppose you will do as you like, Virginia," she said, drearily.

Virginia came and stood beside her. "Can't it be as you like, too?" Suddenly her arms went around the old lady's neck, her fair head lay on the spare old bosom, the young eyes looked into hers with love in them.

And at that look Miss Cornelia melted. But she was not one to show her feelings, and although her arm tightened about the slender form she said, grimly, "Well, I guess you will have to do as you like, Virginia, and when you and Mark come to live with me in this big old house we will plant flowers in the front garden."

Intemperance in France.

The Minister of Justice in France has just recently issued some significant statistics: Out of 100 persons convicted of murder, 53 were confirmed drunkards; out of 100 persons convicted of arson, 57 were confirmed drunkards; out of 100 persons convicted of begging and vagabondage, 70 were confirmed drunkards; of 100 persons convicted of assault, 93 were confirmed drunkards; of 500 persons convicted of all offenses, 323 were drunkards, or two-thirds of these convicted for various assaults were drunkards. France is the country whose light wines have been held up as 'promotive of temperance,' yet figures such as these furnished by the minister of justice show markedly the dire evils of enlisting intemperance.

TOO MUCH ECONOMY

GOOD HABIT CAN BE CARRIED TO EXTREMES.

Housewife Will Do Well to Guard Against Penuriousness, in Which There Can Be No Possible Saving.

The housewife who is so conscientiously and rigidly economical that she is always bounded and surrounded by reversible silk skirts that should be thrown in the rag bag, or frazzled centerpieces that could be cut up into doilies, or lawn scraps that might be turned into handkerchiefs, should take a whole day off and learn that "every excess is a defect" and "extremes weaken."

Sometimes such painful and tedious economies are necessary. Often they are not. Once in a while they are ridiculous. At times it happens that they even cause misery. Perhaps you remember with what pangs of wounded pride you went to school in the metamorphosed dress of your elder sister. Perhaps you read about the girl who came back from boarding school and straightway rejected her young country lover because his economical mother had put tucks in his trousers to provide against his rapid growth. Anyhow, there are two kinds of economies and the kind that will monopolize your time from sunrise to moonrise and keep you humping forward threading needles or flashing crochet hooks, and maybe make somebody sour at that, especially when that willing old second-hand man offers to relieve you of all the nonessential dry goods, woodware and ironware for cash, it is for you to watch out that the goblins of regret and disgust don't get you.

Foolish Habit to Acquire.

Unless it is a case of "have to" the tendency always to create something new out of something old is not so commendable in modern housekeeping as some might think, and for the following reasons:

In the first place most of us claim that modern dry goods has not the durability it was known to have 50 years ago. Therefore it doesn't always pay to make over something old, since much of the wear is gone. Then there is always some doubt as to the fit or presentability of a made-over thing, and the market for all kinds of discards, including furniture as well as clothes, being always open, it is generally easy to dispose of things that are in the way.

Besides, the housewife who wishes to be classed as "up to date" must grant herself sufficient leisure to neutralize the domestic strain with social or intellectual felicities, so a few of those laborious economies must be cut out.

Here are some samples of erring economies that increase the burden of daily housework: A mother with four children and an excellent income unraveled a knitted sweater that was a little tattered on one shoulder and sagged on one side and crocheted two pairs of house slippers of the ravelings.

This used up all of her afternoon leisure for two weeks. By darning carefully and stretching this sweater a little, which would have taken her only a few minutes, she could easily have disposed of it.

The Carving Knife.

There is a great deal in knowing how to sharpen the carving knife. The steel should be held in the left hand, which should be on a level with the elbow, pointing toward the right shoulder, and the knife held almost perpendicularly in the right hand.

The hilt of the knife's edge should be placed at the top of the steel and the blade drawn downward the whole length of both steel and knife, first on one side and then on the other, so that the point of the knife finishes at the hilt of the steel.

The blade should be almost flat on the steel, with the back slightly raised but with only the edge touching it.

Laxative for Women Free

There is a great difference in the purposes to which a laxative should be put. Tablets and pills; salts, etc., are usually violent purgatives or cathartics, and altogether too powerful for the average person.

A woman at all times needs only a mild laxative—in fact, none other is needed by anyone, weak or strong though they may be, for the object is simply to move the bowels, and if a gentle laxative will do it, what is the use of a violent one?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has earned a well-deserved vogue among women and children and old folks—people who must necessarily be careful of what they take.

It is a liquid laxative tonic and admittedly the greatest stomach, liver and bowel remedy before the American people. The price is only 50 cents or $1 a bottle, as it comes in both sizes, and all druggists sell it. Its pleasant taste and gentle action make it an ideal remedy for women in constipation, torpid liver, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn and such like digestive complaints. Its use for a short time will remove the trouble entirely so that future medication will be unnecessary. Its tonic properties build up the stomach and intestinal muscles so that they act naturally again. That this is so is the experience of many heads of families, like Mrs. Brannan, of Alvarado, Va., Mrs. E. L. Stout, of Louisville, Ky., and numerous others; in fact, way out in Williams, Cal., as Mrs. J. E. Blackmore, of that place, writes, the whole town seems to be using it.

If the remedy is new to you and you want to make a trial of it before buying, send your name to the doctor's address as below and a free test bottle will be sent you. Then, if results are satisfactory you can buy it of your druggist.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Fish Influenced by the Moon?

A recent report of the Scotch fishery board mentioned a curious habit which, according to fishermen, is associated with fish; the phases of the moon, it was asserted, have a very direct connection with the willingness of fish to be netted.

To test this theory statistics were obtained of the catch of herrings from 1860 to 1900, with the result that the biggest catches were found to have coincided with new moon and the smallest with full moon. The report suggested that a full moon enabled the nets to be seen much more easily than at the times of new moon or the crescent phase or that the tides, which vary with the lunar phases, were possible factors in the matter.—Westminster Gazette.

Strange Words.

Dean Swift protested against "specviations, operations, preliminaries, ambassadors, palisadoes, communication, circumvolution, battalions" as new-fangled expressions brought into common use by the war of his day. Today nearly all these are the most orthodox English. In his time "mob" seems commonly to have been written "mobb," and "phiz" also had the double consonant. Hence his complaint that "we cram one syllable and cut off the rest, as the owl fattened her mice after she had bit off their legs to prevent them from running away."

A Tested Woman's Remedy.

If you are despondent and have fits of the vapors; if your sweet little children annoy you; if you feel that your friends are neglecting you; dark rings under the eyes, hysterical, headache, constipation, pains above the pelvic bone across the lower bowels and about the kidneys—it indicates that you need a female remedy such as VINO-VITÆ. It builds up diseased tissue, strengthen the womb and appendages, and by its fine tonic properties gives women perfect health. Try it and be convinced. Druggists sell it at $1 per bottle. THINK OF

Mexican Mustang Liniment

AND WHAT IT MEANS TO YOU.

Relief from pain that might otherwise cause you hours of agony.

Tired out muscles eased up and made ready for another day's work.

Lameness in the back and shoulders promptly cured and stiff joints limbered up.

Burns, Scalds, Cuts and Mashes rendered painless and quickly healed.

Rheumatism, Lumbago and Sciatica robbed of their anguish and banished forever.

Ulcers, Old Sores and Open Wounds healed promptly and permanently.

The first application of Mexican Mustang Liniment subdues the pain but it continues its work until every quivering nerve is soothed and quieted.

The great penetrating power of this famous remedy enables it to do this quickly and positively.

In all cases of Sprains, Bruises or Lameness, Mexican Mustang Liniment should be rubbed in persistently.

The antiseptic qualities of this old reliable household remedy make it safe and sure.

PLANS FOR HANDLING GRAIN

Farmers' Union in Washington and Panhandle of Idaho to Sell Crop Through Agents.

One of the most important moves to be made by the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative union during the present year, according to State President L. C. Crow, is the districting of warehouses owned or leased by the union in the grand jurisdiction, which comprises Washington and the Panhandle of Idaho.

The idea is to form five or six districts, with a central selling agency in each district, the agency to be located in the commercial center of the district. The central agency in each district will be in close touch with the coast agency, and the manager of each warehouse in the district will in turn be kept advised of conditions of the grain market through the central agency.

The central agencies in the five or six districts will have control of the entire warehouse system of the union. Each agency will have control of the warehouse in its territory, while the boards of agencies will form a board of directors.

Where the locals do not, or cannot, afford to operate a warehouse the members will store their grain in the old warehouses and mark it, reporting to the local secretary as to the amount stored, who, in turn, reports to the central agency in the district.

The warehouse business, as handled by the union during the last year, has been successful beyond expectation and has saved the farmers no little money. Much of the grain held until prices advanced was held in union warehouses and under advice of leaders of the union, who were keeping in close touch with conditions through the agency on the coast.

Poor Pastures.

Poor pastures do not pay for the land that it is to the interest of every farmer that his cows secure an abundance of food at the least cost. Animals should not be compelled to work for their food on the pasture ground, keeping the ground in the search for grass. As soon as a pasture does not supply an abundance the cattle should be taken off and fed on green food at the barn, as they will fall off in milk, if the supply of food on the pasture fails.

Fatted Flesh.

The reason why fatted flesh is better than unfatted is that globules of fat are distributed throughout the muscles, displacing to a considerable extent the moisture found therein. Fatted flesh is not only therefore lighter, but also when the flesh is cooked the fat does not evaporate to the same extent as water, but, melting, fills the tissue, making it more tender and finer in flavor.

Poor Pastures.

Poor pastures do not pay for the land that it is to the interest of every farmer that his cows secure an abundance of food at the least cost. The animals should not be compelled to walk for their food on the pasture while tramping the ground in the search for grass. As soon as a pasture does not supply an abundance the cattle should be taken off and fed on green food at the barn, as they will fall off in milk if the supply of food on the pasture fails.

Fatted Flesh.

The reason why fatted flesh is better than unfatted is that globules of fat are distributed throughout the tissues, displacing to a considerable extent the moisture found therein. Fatted flesh is not only therefore increased, but also when the flesh is cooked the fat does not evaporate to the same extent as water, but, melting, moistens the tissue, making it more tender and finer in flavor.

Waste of Manure.

The Agricultural department figures that the annual waste of barnyard manure on American farms, aggregates $335,000,000.

POULTRY

CANADIAN GRADING OF EGGS

Poultry Producers' Association Making Efforts for Proper Classification.

The Poultry Producers' Association of Canada has been making an effort to provide a classification and grading for dressed poultry and eggs. Last year a number of grades were adopted for the use of poultrymen and at present the secretary wishes to get the views of producers and dealers in regard to any amendment of the grading rules that may seem desirable.

In the grading of eggs it is laid down as a first requirement that they must all be shipped new laid. A new laid egg is an egg that is not over five days old when shipped, an egg that has been gathered promptly and kept in a moderately dry, cool place (under 60 degrees), free from foul odors and other contaminating influences. On holding a new laid egg to the light it will be seen that the air space in the large end is very small and the yolk almost invisible. As the age continues the air space enlarges and the yolk becomes visible as shown in the illustration. Rough shelled and abnormal eggs should never be shipped. Through some markets may call for several grades of eggs as a general rule there is no necessity for many grades. What the best trade demands is freshness, grading, uniformity in packing and regularity in supply.

For ordinary purposes two grades of eggs will be found sufficient to satisfy the demands made on the producer, viz.: New laid selects and No. 1. Another grade of common stock may for a time be marketed, but they must not be sold under the brand of the association.

New Laid Selects.—These are to consist of strictly new laid eggs, not over five days old, weighing not less than twenty-four ounces to the dozen. Clean, of uniform size and color, packed in substantial neat cases having clean fillers.

No. 1.—To consist of new laid eggs, not over five days old, weighing not less than twenty-one ounces to the dozen. Clean, packed in substantial and neat new cases with clean fillers.

Note.—Common eggs, not covered by the foregoing grading, must not be marketed under the brand of the association.

THE WISE AND FOOLISH VIRGINS

Sunday School Lesson for Oct. 2, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 25: 1-13. Memory verses 10, 13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Be ye therefore ready also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not."—Luke 12:40.

TIME.—Tuesday afternoon, April 4, A. D. 30.

PLACE.—On the Mount of Olives, overlooking Jerusalem, on his way to Bethany.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

This is one of the most beautiful and touching of the parables. Poetry, painting and the drama have combined to give it an exceptional hold on the Christian imagination. The weird pathos of the story is unspeakable. The occasion is so happy, the agents so interesting, the issue so tragic. The story is a picture of an oriental wedding. Among those friends of the bride who waited to join the procession were ten virgins. While they were waiting, the time of the procession being ever unknown, they became drowsy and slept in peace, knowing that the shouts and cries of the coming crowd would awaken them in time. They had no anxiety; the wise, because they had faith and were prepared; the foolish, by false security and by ignoring the future.

The ten virgins had to wait till about midnight, when through the still air came shrill and clear "those peculiar shrill, quavering cries of joy, called Zugaret, which are heard throughout the east on occasions of special rejoicing. (See Rev. 19:6-9.)" And they heard the cry: Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.

The wise virgins trimmed and replenished their lamps with the oil which they had the forethought to bring with them.

The foolish found their lamps burned out, but they had been too careless to bring extra oil with them. They begged oil of the wise, but they had none left; and advised the foolish to go to the source of supply where they should have gone earlier. While they were gone, the procession reached its destination; those who were ready went in to the marriage festival. And the door was shut. Like Esau the foolish virgins came too late for the blessing. They had thrown away their opportunity.

The Lord was soon to depart by the way of the cross. But he promised to return. He came back in the resurrection. He came in the coming of the Spirit of the day of Pentecost. He came at the destruction of Jerusalem. He is coming in glory at the last day, when his kingdom shall come and his will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

Every crisis of our lives, every opening of opportunity, every crisis of the world or the church may be called in its degree a coming of the Lord whose providence is over all. (1) The coming is something of the greatest value and blessing. It is like the wedding festival, full of the best of life. Even in the subordinate comings and crises of our lives, there is always a door, an invitation, to something better than we have had. Even death is a gate to heaven. (2) The time of the coming is always unknown, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

In What Way Are We to Watch? The company of watchers was divided into two classes, the wise and the foolish. The equality of numbers has no bearing on the proportion of persons in real life who are wise or foolish.

The lamps signify the outward profession, and the possibilities. All had some light, they had religious feelings, they were moved by the influences of the Holy Spirit.

The oil is the spiritual life, the heart, which is the source of the flame, the visible manifestations of the Christian spirit. "But this significance was shown only by the burning lamp. Those who took vessels of oil, a permanent supply, were those who had the living reality of that which they professed, who put into practise, into character, that which shone forth from their lamps.

Those who took no supply of oil had a surface feeling, like the seed sown on rocky soil, which sprang up quickly and endured till persecution or trouble arose (Matt. 15:5, 6, 20, 21).

Watchfulness consists in being prepared for every emergency, and every duty, as the wise virgins watched by having their lamps continually burning, and a full supply of oil to keep them burning.

And the Door Was Shut.—The opportunity came, and the gift in its hand was gained or lost. There came a time when it was too late to change. This is a fact of nature, as well as a truth of the Word. There is a tendency to fix the character, so that one will not change. In the misuse of the body there comes a time when it is impossible to ward off disease. We shut the door against ourselves. No one but ourselves is to blame for our not entering. We shut the door by negligence to be prepared to enter.

Congressman Wise of Virginia, in his address on Lincoln, said: "Abraham Lincoln had neither the learning, the experience in public life, nor the social advantages of William H. Seward. Nor had he the political training, the polish, or the skilled weapons of debate possessed by his great antagonist, Stephen A. Douglas. What he had was a faith which knew no vacillations nor shadow of turning, and a purpose that he boldly announced at the outset and never abandoned under any discouragement. "It is a mistake to say he was an unlearned man."

LIFE OF PEACE AND CONTENTMENT.

No one can know the pure delight of simple living whose nervous system is kept in a state of tension by Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Biliousness and other diseases due to disorders of the liver.

The Simple Way to seek the Simple Life is to seek the remedy for these conditions. This remedy has been found in our great product—

ST. JOSEPH'S Liver Regulator

(In Both Liquid and Powder Form.)

It has made life brighter and happier and peace possible when all was dark and distressful. It reaches the centers of life and purifies them. It encourages the liver, stomach and bowels to a freer and more natural activity.

It is the Simple Way to a Simple Life of Health, Peace, Contentment.

Many persons attest this fact who have realized its truth by actual experience.

St. Joseph's Liquid Liver Regulator is prompt in action, exceedingly palatable and pleasant to the taste. It is sold by druggists and dealers at 50 cents a bottle.

St. Joseph's Liver Regulator in powder form is put up in tight tin boxes and retails at 25 cents a box, five boxes for a dollar. It may be taken dry or made into a tea or pellets. Full directions accompany every bottle and box.

HAS NEAT TRAP FOR INSECTS

Device Patented By An Oregonian For the Protection of His Apple Orchard.

In the country all sorts of homely devices are used to catch the bugs and kill them, and an Oregon man, who probably had his apple orchard overrun by some destructive species, patented a trap for the pests.

A barrel has pieces cut out of the upper portion and is half-filled with rotten or bruised apples or some other odoriferous fruit. On top of the barrel is placed a pan partially filled with water, oil or some poisonous liquid. From the apex of a tripod that keeps the basin from falling off the barrel hangs a lantern.

In the daytime the insects will be attracted by the odor of the fruit, and in flying up to feast many of them are likely to fly into the water. At night the lantern is lighted and bugs will come from afar to flutter against it and meet their death in the liquid below.

For Simple Living.

Fancy cake is not possible without butter and eggs in abundance, but it is not necessary to the health of a family or the table of a good housekeeper. There are substitutes, like fruit—plain or cooked—gingerbread and cookies. It is not fashionable to eat too much or too often, so those whose pride suffers in the lopping-off process may solve it with that knowledge. But women of fashion do go to market and select food, keeping in touch with the novelties as they appear, and taking advantage of an overstock whenever it is to be found. They eat as a matter of course, while plainer folk make feeding a prominent feature of life. Quality, rather than quantity, counts with them, for they have learned that food governs health in a great measure. They have also been taught that greediness of appetite is distinctly vulgar.

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE FARMERS.

The much talked of season of hard times and business depression has failed to arrive; the prophecies of the chronic knocker are waning in the fulfillment and the dire misfortunes predicted by the ever present calamity howler have died in the burning Alabama. Chilton county and Clanton, instead of going to the bow wows, as forecasted by would-be-wise seers, has gone steadily onward upon the road of material development that leads to certain success and abundant prosperity.

We are enjoying the fruits of our labors as never before; the cry of poverty is hushed throughout this heaven-blessed section; on every side is heard the tuneful tones of thrift and prosperity. The frugal farmer will not have to draw upon the store house of the West for his corn supply, for the harvest within our own fields is abundant in the extreme.

The cotton producer is satisfied with the results of his labors and the shining coin which high prices for his staple enables him to secure and jingle in his jeans, not only makes a glad some sound to his ears, but fills his heart with joyful anticipations of a happy Christmas-tide. All things conspire to make his lot a pleasant one indeed.

The Chilton County Farmer is fast assuming that place in the economic relations of life which his avocation predestined him to occupy the front rank—a leader among the advance guard. Long faces have been succeeded by smiling countenances and mortgaged homes and farms are soon to become happy firesides and productive fields of pleasure. Hard times have been vanquished and prosperity is victorious.

Contentment, peace and plenty are knocking at every door

We are now entering upon an era of commercial development never heretofore anticipated; a season of rich rewards for honest toil is now dawning and will soon burst with noonday splendor upon our people.

The farmers are happy as they should be, for mother earth has yielded them rich trophies for their plucking; prices are soaring amid the radiant beauty of the stars; his products are in demand as never before.

Cotton is again King and corn is the Prince Imperial. What more could the planter desire to make his cup of gladness overflow?

Desiring to have you make our place headquarters, we have arranged to pay the very top notch for every pound of the fleecy staple brought to our store.

We want to have a hand in your prosperity; we wish to be remembered in your rejoicing.

Come to us with your sample, we will top the market on every occasion; call upon us for your wants, our large and varied stock enables us to meet your every requirement and at prices that will make glad for the visit.

We hate the chronic croker, we despise the knocker and the pessimist. The old world is bright with hope, buoyant with success, happy in plenteous abundance. We want you to know that we rejoice at your season of success, you desire it and we hope you will enjoy it to the fullest extent.

Come to see us your happy faces make us glad indeed.

Come whether you want to buy or sell, both or either or neither. We will be glad to greet you.

We are going to set the gait this year and those who would keep up with us must clip it off at a merry chase.

Cordially yours,

Farmers of Chilton County, we greet you as the two fold keepers and producers of our prosperity. You are they who have produced the wealth of our Country and upon your heads we pour our praises in unstinted measure. You have earned your reward and should enjoy the fruits of your labors.

The Merchant who has bought wisely and well rejoices at your success,

The cotton buyer whose heart beats in unison with your own delight in the oportunity afforded him to give you good prices for your staple; he who would with hold from you the best and highest the market affords is neither a friend to the farmer nor a wise man of business.

We want you to succeed, because in your success we also shall share.

We have bought not stingily but well; we have purchased in keeping with your position and your desire; you want the best, therefore we supplied ourselves with the best that we might accommodate both your taste and your demands.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

The County Fair, judging from the attendance on Wednesday, promises to be a great success, and the visitors are well pleased with the display and satisfied with the exhibition generally. It was estimated that fully a thousand visitors were present Wednesday.

The Baby Show was remarkable for the lovely babies, the pride of their mothers, and the hope of the future. The prize for the prettiest baby was awarded to the delightful infant of Mrs. M. A. Gore, and the handsomest girl prize went to the pretty cherub of Mr. Zeddie Robinson, while the handsomest twins were declared to be those of Mrs. R. M. Sorrell, of Verbena.

Amongst a galaxy of beautiful rich and young women it was hard to determine which should be the prize winner, but the judges finally awarded the prize to Miss Naomi Beaty as being the neatest and most handsomely dressed girl present, the garments being of her own make.

In the F. A. Gulledge prize for the handsomest young man who would swear that he has never used tobacco or whiskey, there were eight contestants, and the prize was awarded to H. Greeley Williams.

The Fair will be open until Saturday and there is time for every voter of his county to prove his loyalty by a visit. In a county fair there is of course lacking some of the novelties to be seen at a state fair, but as the county fair acts as a stimulus to all within the county, the presence of every individual aids the cause and stimulates to further exertions in the future.

Editor Banner:—I have delayed writing since the primaries, but not because I have been disgusted, but have been very busy. It has been reported by some parties that I would not support the Republican ticket, and I want to correct this now and now, I'm doing and have done since the primary all I can for the ticket, and if you will wait you will see the largest majority from Chilton for the Republican ticket you have ever seen.

Well, I am disgusted with the Weekly Press howling negro, but I suppose Mr. Wood can be excused to some extent, as he does not seem to know anything except negro, being from Dallas, but if he will wait awhile we Chilton Republicans will show him something. Yes, we are white men, and believe in a white man's government, and I do not see how any self respecting Republican could vote a Democratic ticket this fall since we have been classed as negroes, etc.

I am glad to know that all the democrat candidates are in line and shining for the election of the Republican ticket.

Republicans, if there are any disgruntled among you, think well, act now, calculate the cost before you vote for Democrats to manage this countries affairs; think of the past, look at the future, if they should be elected.

I want to call the peoples attention to the methods of the Democrats just now, they are trying to divert your attention from the real important issues in this campaign, and cover up the real issues. We are not voting on dead issues.

I feel greatful for every vote I received in the two Republicans primaries, and I want to thank everybody that voted for me for their support, and I hope no act of mine will ever cause them to regret it.

Respectfully,
W. A. Barnett.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Clanton, Ala., Sept., 29, 1910

Editor Banner:—I was glad to notice in a recent issue of your paper that you were liberal enough to publish letters from Republicans. I wish to take advantage of that, and state my position on the campaign in our county today. I have been surprised, as well as grieved, to learn that there are some who thought that I was sore over the recent primary, and that I would not support our nominees. I wish to say now that the Republicans of this county are bigger than I am, and when they decide who shall be their nominees, I accept willingly and will give them my hearty support. Every nominee of the Republican primary, from Judge of Probate down, will have my most loyal support.

As is well known, my house, and contents, were recently destroyed by fire and that is the reason why I have not been able to do more work for the party since the primary. I hope soon to be on my feet again; and I am going to do my very best to roll up a big Republican victory in November. And the Republicans are going to win.
JOHN A. BEAN.

Editor Banner—Please allow me a space in your paper for the first time. The health of this town is not very good. Mr. Dan Goldon has been down with fever three weeks; he is improving some; hope that he may be up soon.

Miss Mattie Janes is just up from the fever.

I am sorry to say,
CRAP SHOOTER.

Clanton, Ala. Oct. 4, 1910.

Editor Banner—In reply to the article in the Press criticising the Chilton County Fair catalogue, I beg to say that the Press even had an opportunity of printing said catalogue but did not make a price that we could afford to pay and that said paper or its editor did not ask for any space in said catalogue.

There was no intentional slight for any party or person.

One of the Democratic canidates was one of the very first to engage space for his card which you will find on page eight.

Mr. J. O. Middleton paid for the space used by the Republican ticket and submitted the matter as other advertisers.

If the chairman of the Democratic Campaign Committee had been unto his job possibly he would have seen the advantage of helping out the fair at least as much by paying for advertising space necessary to have given his ticket a write up. I further desire to say that it was necessary to take advertisments in order to pay for getting catalogue and that matter was left entirely with me. And that I was working entirely in the interest of the Fair and not in the interest of any party.

Hunting for a Spectacle Peddler or Fakir

Last Wednesday morning one of Preacher Browns' sons from west Chilton came into Dr. Higgins office at Clanton enquiring if he had seen or knew anything of a spectacle pedler whose supposed name was Summerland. Dr. Higgins was unable to give any information as to whereabouts of the "Eye glass fakir." It stated by Mr. Brown that the supposed Optican had fitted several pairs of glasses in his section of the county and that the pedler disordered to fake the people, stated that he would make Clanton his headquarters and that if any of the glasses which he had fitted failed to give entire satisfaction, he would be in his office at Clanton and would make good all troubles that the glasses might give etc. Dr. Higgins was unable to give information, but stated to Mr. Brown that he had spent several hundred dollars in preparing himself at a reputable college for the work of fitting eye glasses and other optical work, and had also gone to an expense of several hundred dollars in fitting up a neat optical office in Clanton, and charged only a reasonable amount for the work done by him; the usual charges ranging from five to fifteen dollars, but in some instances as low as three dollars, and in every instance satisfaction is guaranteed. And he wishes to say further that if the people of Chilton and adjoining Counties desire to spend their money with spectacle fakirs, besides running the risk of ruining their eye sight, when they have a graduated optican within close call of them, he desires to be excused from all blame in the matter. He further asks that the people of Chilton county be more careful in matters concerning such a delecate organ as the human eye, and when requiring the service of any one, that they will consult with those who have made a special study of that particular branch of science.

Dr. Higgins has had two parties to call recently, one of them paid $5.00 and the other $8.00 for a pair of pedler's glasses which were absolutely worthless to the purchaser and tended to do great harm.

We extend our hearty congratulations to Dr. Higgins for his efforts in behalf of those who suffer with their eyes and suggest to those in Chilton and adjoining counties that when in need of an eye specialist they consult with him.

Mountain Springs.

Editor Banner—Please allow me a small space in your paper as I haven't herd anything from this place in some time.

The Sunday School at this place is progressing nicely at the present time. QUite a large crowd attended birth-day-party last Thursday night given by Miss Julissa Wells. Several from near here attended the singing at Clanton last Sunday.

The singing at Mr. W. H. Drivers last Sunday was all O. K.

Say what has become of Elleb Dnarb of this place, I would like to hear from her again.

I think there must be an attraction down the road as Messrs Robert Sellers and Walter Shaw went down the road Sunday afternoon.

I will close, wishing the Banner much success and if this escapes the waste basket I may come again.

Galera

Friday, last, the store of Miles Collins, opposite the Union station at this place, was entered by breaking through the back door and his safe blown open by the use of powder inserted near the combination lock, a hole having been bored through the door for that purpose. Over $60 in cash was taken and several checks.

Several strangers were noticed hereabout and some suspicion was aroused, but up to date there have been no arrests. It is strange to say that some tools were found lying hard by the safe after the burglary belonging to a blacksmith shop at this place, and said by some to be the same that were found entered, but the parties were evidently foiled in their atempt are they accomplished any damage.

Selecting Cotton Plant for Seed.

In order for each farmer to get improved cotton seed that are adopted to his soil, climate, and locality, he should make a careful selection from the best plants in the field.

The essential qualities of a good variety of cotton are:—1- The plants should be prolific or have the power to put on and hold lots of bolls. 2- The bolls should be large. 3- The percent of lent or proportion of lent to seed should be high. 4- The cotton should be as early as possible. Under boll weevil conditions this matter of earliness is of the very greatest importance.

For the farmer then to get a cotton with the above qualities, he should go through the fielb in advance of the regular picking and pick large mature bolls from the very best plants having three points:—1- The plants should be symmetribal, stocky, and close built, but not necessarily cluster or even semi-cluster. 2- They should begin fruiting near ground and the joints between limbs on the main stem should be short. 3- They should have many fruiting limbs and the spaces between bolls on these limbs should be short. 4- The plants should be filled with large bolls. 5- They should open early. 6- The seed should be medium in size and well covered with lint.

The cotton from these select plants should be ginned seperatly from the general run of cotton. Take good care of these seed during the winter and plant crop from them next year. Report this each year and after a while each farmer will have highly improved, productive cotton suited to his conditions.

Very sincerely yours,
L. N. DUNCAN

A POTATO 37 INCHES LONG.

Last Thursday afternoon the wife of Will Jones, a negro living on Mrs. J. T. Abernathy's place, near Verbena, was digging some potatoes, and seeing the small end of one sticking up out of the ground she pulled at it and unfortunate by the potato was broken. Seeing the potato broken and yet the piece she had about a foot long she began to dig for the rest of it. The potato was broken into four pieces but putting them all together as it grew the potato measured thirty-seven inches (3 feet 1 inch) long and was only about the size of an ordinary hoe handle.

OLD PARTIES PUT OUT STATE TICKETS

Republicans and Democrats of New York.

PARTY CONVENTIONS HELD

Democrats in Remarkable Convention Renew John A. Dix, and Republicans Select Henry L. Stimson as Candidates for Governor of the State

A state convention that will go down in political history as one of the most remarkable in the history of the democratic party closed at Rochester, N. Y., by nominating John A. Dix, chairman of the party's state committee, and a wealthy Washington county business man, to run on a progressive platform of the widest type.

The platform, framed to cover the issues which the democratic leaders believe were inadequately met by the republican convention at Saratoga, gained no less attention and approval than the candidate.

Regarding the platform there was from the first little or no division of opinion.

The republican state convention at Saratoga, N. Y., nominated Henry L. Stimson, of New York, as its candidate for governor. The nomination of Mr. Stimson was one more victory for Colonel Roosevelt, who personally led the fight for the nomination of his candidate, completing the unbroken series of triumphs from the moment the convention was called to order until its final adjournment.

The remainder of the ticket follows: For lieutenant governor, Edward Schoeneck.

For secretary of state, Samuel S. Koenig; renominated.

For state comptroller, James Thompson.

For state treasurer, Thomas F. Fennell.

For state engineer, Frank M. Williams, renominated.

For attorney general, Edward R. O'Malley, renominated.

For associate judge of the court of appeals, Irving G. Vann, renominated.

SUNNY JIM SATISFIED.

Vice-President Talks of Work of Roosevelt's Steam Roller.

Vice-President James S. Sherman, in speaking of the New York state convention said:

"I am entirely content with the result of the Saratoga convention. The platform is exceptionally clear and forceful, save only in reference to direct nominations. In that regard it needs explanation of its meaning and explanations will differ. I preferred the minority plank which was clear and unequivocal in declaration.

"The ticket named is excellent. Of course, the convention was absolutely dominated by one man, and its every action was taken at his bidding. That, however, I regard as proceedure and not basic. I shall, of course, support the ticket nominated."

WEALTHY FARMER SLAIN.

Speilers Believed to Have Been Assaulted Near Butler, Ga.

Believed to have been dragged from his invalid bed and assassinated by an unknown party, the body of J. Spurgeon Speilers, a wealthy farmer, who had been in ill health for several years, was found on his front porch at his home near Butler, Ga. His throat was cut from ear to ear, and there were nine knife wounds on his body, any of which would have caused death.

Mr. Speilers' death was at first believed to have been suicide, but a coroner's jury later returned a verdict that he had met death at the hands of an unknown party. The police have no clue to his assassin.

Mr. Speilers, who was said to have acquired considerable money, had been an invalid for nearly a year, following an attack of pneumonia, which had destroyed one lung. He had been confined to his bed since that time.

The police believe that an unknown party entered his room and dragged him from bed to the front porch, where he was assassinated.

FIRE AT GULFPORT.

Postoffice, Hotels, Theaters, Business Houses and Other Buildings Burn.

An entire business block at Gulfport, Miss., was destroyed by fire Friday. The flames originated in the Commercial hotel at 1:10 o'clock, and rapidly spread in the block on 28th avenue, between 13th and 15th streets.

The origin of the fire is unknown and no estimate of the loss can be given at this time, though it will run high.

Included in the burned block are the postoffice, two hotels, two theaters, several business houses and a number of frame buildings. It is learned the fire started in a barber shop and the cause is unknown. The postoffice is an old building and the government was only using the building temporarily, intending to move into the new building within a month. No fatalities are reported.

PANIC ON CROWDED CAR.

Mysterious Murder Occurs on New York Subway Express.

An express train on the subway was the scene of a mysterious murder at New York city. A well dressed man, apparently returning from the theater, was the victim. There was nothing on his person to identify him.

His assailant, according to the police, was Charles Wright, of Elizabeth, N. J., who was arrested by a subway watchman.

According to bystanders, the two men stood near each other in a crowded car. They did not appear to be acquainted but suddenly it was noticed that they were having a violent quarrel about something. Then came a pistol shot and the younger man fell to the floor mortally wounded.

There was a panic in the crowded car. Women in gay theater attire made for the doors. Several men grabbed Wright, who struggled with them. By that time the train had begun to slow down at the 14th street station. A subway watchman took charge of Wright as the doors swung open. He denied all knowledge of the shooting.

MANY SAILORS LOSE THEIR LIVES

Forty Perish by Capsizing of a Crowded Barge.

GEORGIAN AMONG NUMBER

Large Barge Filled With Jackies Returning to the Battleship New Hampshire From Shore Leave Capsized in New York Harbor.

There was given out from the battleship New Hampshire Sunday a list of twenty-nine men who were supposed to have perished by the swamping of a barge or whaleboat which was being towed to the vessel at anchor in the Hudson river Saturday night. Appended to the list are the names of eleven men who are still absent, but who were not recognized as having been in the swamped boat.

The generally accepted version of the cause of the catastrophe was that the barge, heavily loaded with sailors and marines, returning from shore leave, was towed into the heavy swells of a passing steamboat. Rising for a moment, like a cork, the barge then plunged into the trough between two waves, one of which broke over the side and swamped it.

Instantly the choppy water became dotted with struggling, shouting men, intermingled with floating packages, suitcases and personal belongings that the men were taking back to the ship. The whistle of the little steam launch that was towing the barge rent the air with sharp calls for assistance.

Few boats were in the vicinity, however, for the river was running high in white caps, kicked up by the strong wind. What few there were put quickly across the 200 yards that separated the distressed craft and the shore. Many of the sailors and marines were pulled aboard these boats; others held tightly to the swamped barge. Still others, unequal to the battle with the heavy waves and tide, floated up stream and disappeared.

SOME CENSUS FIGURES.

Richmond, Va., Rome, Ga., and Birmingham, Ala., Show Increases.

Census figures for Rome, Ga., made public by the bureau at Washington give that city 12,000 as compared with 7,291 in 1900.

The population of Birmingham, Ala., is 132,689, an increase of 54,270, or 345.4 per cent. over 32,415 in 1900.

Census figures for Richmond, Va., give that city a population of 127,822. This is an increase of 42,785, or 50.1 per cent. over 1900, when the city's population was 85,050.

NIGHT RIDER CASE IS UP FOR TRIAL

Alleged Participants in Hopkinsville, Ky., Raid.

TO ANSWER GRAVE CHARGE

Much Interest Manifested in Trial of Those Who Are Alleged to Have Figured in Memorable Raid Occurring in Kentucky Town in 1907.

The fall term of the Christian circuit court, which convened at Hopkinsville, Ky., with Judge Hanberry presiding, will be notable for the so-called "night rider" case on the docket. Dr. David A. Amos, Newton Nichols, Guy Dunlap, J. B. Malone, Irving Glass and John Robinson are under indictment on three separate counts, alleging complicity and participation in the memorable raid on Hopkinsville December 7, 1907, when a band of three hundred burned three large warehouses and other property, shot up the town, wounded two men and whipped a tobacco buyer.

Dr. Amos is accused of being the "general" and organizer of the secret clan that terrorized that section for many months. He is a physician of Cobb, Ky. The other defendants reside in Lyon, Trigg and Caldwell counties, except Glass, whose home is in Sikeston, Mo.

A hard legal battle is expected.

CARNIVAL OF DEATH.

Suicide and Accident Snuff Out Number of Lives at Pittsburg.

This rather exceptional record of a day's tragedies was compiled by the police of Pittsburg, Pa.

Mrs. Sarah Welsh, aged 32, was found fatally burned in her apartments at 19 Plum street, north side. The door of the flat was battered and scarred, the furniture in her place nearly all removed, and there were evidences of things having been hurled about the room. She died after saying that her burns were received in the explosion of a gas range, but the range was found intact. The police scented mystery in the case and are investigating.

George Stewart, aged 30, was found dead on the steps of the Herron Hill Methodist Episcopal church. He had taken carbolic acid. Relatives unknown.

George E. Ogden fell from the window of a Carson street hotel and was instantly killed.

W. S. Hertberger, aged 21, was killed by electricity while repairing lights at the Pressed Steel Company's plant in McKee's Rocks.

John Ross, aged 19, of Homestead, fatally shot himself through the lungs and will die. The police declare it suicide.

Myrtle King, aged 21, attempted suicide by drinking poison at a Second avenue rooming house. She is expected to recover.

SAM'L F. PARROTT DEAD.

Prominent Railroad Man Passes Away in Atlanta.

Samuel Fain Parrott, part owner of the Piedmont hotel, president of the Atlantic Compress Company and one of the most prominent railroad men in the south, died at the Elkin sanitarium in Atlanta on Monday, after a lingering illness.

Although Mr. Parrott had been in poor health since last May, he was not considered dangerously ill until about three weeks ago, when he had a relapse and steadily grew weaker.

Mr. Parrott was one of the receivers of the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic railroad.

A STRANGE FATALITY.

Man Laid Trap for Thieves and is Himself the Victim.

J. B. Beasley, a prominent merchant and postmaster of Rockport, near Georgetown, Miss., met death in a peculiar manner.

Several weeks ago burglars robbed Beasley's store and the postoffice. In expectation of another visit from the burglars, Beasley had set a loaded shotgun so that when the door was opened the gun would be discharged.

Forgetting the trap he had laid, Beasley attempted to enter the store and the gun was discharged, killing him almost instantly.

GIRL BURIED IN GULF.

Miss Miller, Who Lost Life at Talluiah Falls, Buried at Sea.

In conformity with a parents' promise that in event of her death she should be buried at sea, a casket containing the body of Miss Marjorie Miller was conveyed down the Mississippi river, and, heavily weighted, was consigned to the waters of the gulf, says a New Orleans dispatch.

She was drowned August 20 in the Talluiah river, near Talluiah Falls, Ga., while bathing with a party of friends.

Announcement of her funeral was made by her family, who said that the burial at sea had been arranged only by the simplest ceremony.

GIRL FANATIC'S DEATH.

Saturated Bible Leaves and Paper in Oil and Knelt in Fire.

Kneeling in the midst of a bonfire which she had made of pages of religious books and magazines and saturated with coal oil with her own hands, Mamie McCarthy, 18 years old, slowly burned to death in the rear of her home at St. Louis, while she prayed. She died at the city hospital an hour later.

The girl's action was a sudden inspiration. She apparently had waited until an unguarded moment to carry out her fanatical act. The Bible, magazines and papers with which she made the fire were taken from a center table in the living room, where she had been sewing.

MAIL CAR LOOTED

Masked Robbers Secure An Unknown Amount on Southern Pacific.

Two masked robbers invaded the mail car on the Southern Pacific train leaving New Orleans and secured several batches of registered mail. No attempt was made to rob passengers. It has not yet been ascertained what the robbers obtained. The robbery took place at Avondale, 12 miles west of New Orleans.

Postoffice officials at New Orleans state that they could not make an estimate of the loss, their only report being from one of the mail clerks that the postal car had been robbed.

The robbers are supposed to have boarded the train at New Orleans and have entered the mail car when the train came to a stop at Avondale, where the Mississippi river is ferried.

MAKING BAD MONEY.

Secret Service Unearths Bold Counterfeiting Scheme.

A Washington dispatch says:

The secret service has unearthed what appears to be a bold and extensive attempt at counterfeiting national bank notes.

It is intimated the country may be flooded with them. Notes of the same denomination and issue were found on the Pasadena, Cal., national Bank, issued on the First National Bank of Williamsport, Pa.

Chief Wilkie is convinced that all the bills are being made by the same gang and has rushed orders by telegraph to every secret service man in the country to spread the dagnets.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES. Alimony to the amount of $145,000 was awarded Mrs. Radeus T. Talcott in the circuit court at South Bend, Ind., after a divorce had been granted her. She and her husband had been married forty-four years. Mrs. Talcott charged cruelty and infidelity. Witnesses testified that Talcott's estate was valued at $400,000.

President L. S. Berg, of the New Orleans, Mobile and Chicago Railroad Company, has announced that he has closed a deal for the lease of the mammoth docks of the Turner Hartwell Company, of Mobile, Ala., for the purpose of increasing the export trade of the railroad.

Under an order of Judge Don A. Pardee, in the federal circuit court at Atlanta, H. M. Atkinson is made co-receiver of the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railway Company until further notice. The action was taken on account of the death of Samuel F. Parrott, who was a joint receiver with Mr. Atkinson.

The case with which aliens could pass over the lines resulted in the establishment of a strict patrol system on the border lines of New Mexico, Arizona, Texas and California, and the frequent reports of arrests and deportations in that country are evidence of the working of the system.

National bank notes in every city will be examined immediately by secret service men to determine how extensive the issue has been. The fact that the first was made on a bank in the west and appeared simultaneously with another on a bank in the east, convinced Chief Wilkie that the plans of the counterfeiters have been well-laid and that the extent of their ramifications is problematical. The character of the engraving on the notes testifies that they have a complete plant.

Governor Kitchen has announced that he has commissioned as state auditor R. F. Dixon, Jr., an attorney at law of Raleigh, N. C., to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Dixon's father, Major R. F. Dixon. The appointment holds till January, as a successor is to be elected in November. Nominations for the office will be made next week by democrats and republicans.

Basing their contention on the report of a government chemist that a submitted sample contained 70,000,000 bacterior to one centimeter, federal authorities at Louisville, Ky., seized a large quantity of tomato catsup. The condiment was found in a warehouse consigned to a prominent local firm, and came from a factory in Wheeling, W. Va.

While descending the steps of the main building at the Appalachian exposition, Knoxville, Tenn., arrayed in a bobbie skirt, Miss Helen Hunt, of Kentucky, fell and was painfully injured. She was taken to the emergency hospital, on the exposition grounds, and later was able to be removed to the city.

Major William E. Wailes, chief of the staff of General Joseph Wheeler in the Confederate army during the civil war, died at his home in Dalton, Ga. He was 73 years old, and his death removes all but one of General Wheeler's staff officers. His funeral and burial took place at Selma, Ala., his old home.

The life insurance agents of South Carolina will meet in Columbia on the second day of the state fair and at that time perfect their permanent organization, which was decided on at a meeting held at Spartanburg. Officers will be elected at that time.

The council of the convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, at Nashville, Tenn., passed a resolution to raise $5,000 as a memorial fund in behalf of James L. Houghteling, founder of the brotherhood, who died in Chicago in July, of which amount over $4,000 has been subscribed.

The Williamsport counterfeit is of a higher degree of perfection than those on the Pasadena bank, which were pronounced by the secret service men to be the best they had seen in recent years.

Acting Governor Henry B. Gray has appointed Dr. William Henry Oates, a physician of Mobile, to succeed the late Dr. Charles F. Bush as state inspector of jails, cotton mills and alms houses of Alabama.

The unveiling of the monument to General Oglethorpe will take place at Savannah, Ga., on November 22d. The occasion is to be made one of much importance.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES. Almost half of the business section of Nelson, Ga., was destroyed by fire. The fire was discovered early in the evening and was not under control until after 9 o'clock. A volunteer fire department, made up of citizens of the town, finally checked the flames after they had destroyed the greater portion of the town. Several buildings were saved. The loss is estimated at $16,000. The origin of the fire is not known.

William Hendricks, of Baltimore, Md., shot and killed his wife at the home of Mrs. William B. Groves, in Riverside avenue, and then committed suicide with the same weapon. Hendricks has been separated from his wife about a year.

Beldeena, regarded as one of the best trotting mares in the south, dropped dead at Memphis, Tenn., while competing in a race at a local track. The horse was owned by Colonel W. A. Collier, of Memphis, and was valued at $25,000. She had a mark of 2:11¼.

Fire in the old Imperial building at Common and St. Charles streets, New Orleans, resulted in a loss of $50,000, including the damage to the building and to several small shops on the first floor. The building was erected 60 years or more ago and was regarded as one of the principal structures in the city during the antebellum days.

The St. Louis limited, a Missouri Pacific train, bound from Kansas City to St. Louis, collided with a freight train near Hermann, Mo., and the fireman, H. E. Evens, and James West, were killed. The passenger engineer, William Murphy, was seriously injured. Three empty mail cars saved the passengers from injury.

Bennett Blackmore, 24 years of age, member of a leading eastern North Carolina family, and an attorney of Lenoir, N. C., committed suicide by drinking cabolic acid, his body being found in his room at Lenoir with a note stating his purpose, but assigning no reason for the deed. The body was shipped to his old home at Warsaw, N. C.

Refusal of a telephone girl to send in an alarm of fire because the persons calling did not have a nickel to put in the telephone, endangered the lives of ten persons when a fire was raging in the apartment house of Mrs. L. A. Humes at Philadelphia, Pa. Everything in Mrs. Humes house was destroyed and Mrs. Humes was so badly burned about the face and head that she had to be sent to the hospital for treatment.

August Wilena and Heinrich Wurz were drowned and five other men had a narrow escape from death when a small boat in which they were rowing to a steamer in the harbor overturned at Pensacola, Fla. All of the men had spent the night in the city and attempted to row out to the steamer in a boat which had a capacity of carrying only three persons, it is said.

James Wright, 60 years old, was taken into custody at Chicago on a charge of causing the death of his wife. As Mrs. Wright, who was 75 years old, attempted to sit down her husband, it is alleged, as a joke, pulled the chair from under her and she fell, injuring her spine. Death followed soon after.

John C. Parker, secretary of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, died at his summer home at Madison, Conn. He had recently returned from a visit to Carlsbad, Germany, where he went in the hope of benefiting his health.

The plant of the American Olive Oil Company, said to be the largest of its kind in the world, was destroyed by fire at Los Angeles, Cal. The loss is estimated at $450,000.

While services were in progress at Donelson church, Nashville, Tenn., lightning struck the building, killing Howard Sullivan, the 19-year-old son of Dr. W. B. Sullivan.

"I could die waltzing," said Miss Elizabeth Harris at the close of a dance at Chicago. As she seated herself she fell over. She died in a few minutes. She had been dancing continuously for four hours. She was 19 years old.

John Cheshire, the harpist, considered by many musicians to be the greatest living exponent of his instrument, died at his home in New York City after a brief illness. He was born in England seventy-three years ago.

Four thousand persons lost their lives in the recent war in Nicaragua, according to Jacob Weinberger, manager of the Bluefields Steamship Company, at Bluefields, Nicaragua, who has returned to New Orleans. Mr. Weinberger kept in close touch with the progress of the revolution in Nicaragua.

Peter Cirinciou, the six-year-old son of a wealthy Armenian, was stolen from in front of his home in Tarrytown Hill, N. J., by two men in a carriage and driven away with them. The police are searching for the kidnapers.

C. R. Peterson, a wealthy business man, fired a bullet into his mouth at a sawmill owned by him near Adrian, Ga., and died instantly. He had been in poor health recently, and this is given as the cause of his suicide.

NEWS NOTES FROM FOREIGN LANDS. At Manchester, Eng., the Federation of Master Cotton Spinners decided that they could make no further concessions to their operatives and that the lockout of 150,000 men on October 1 must become effective unless the employees yielded. The whole trouble originated in a local strike at the Fern mill at Oldham. The employees demanded that the dispute be settled by arbitration and threatened a general lockout in the event of a refusal. The strikers refused to accept arbitration on the terms proposed by the federation.

The authorities at Tokio, Japan, deny the reports of a recurrence in Japan of the naval expansion fever that marked the policy of the government three or four years ago and brought about much outside criticism and suspicion. The total increase in the naval expenditures for the current year contemplated in the budget, it is pointed out, is less than five millions of gold dolors.

Japan and Russia have entered into another agreement which so far has not been given wide publicity. Its effect is intended to prevent much of the agitation that has been going on in both countries, when some act of either government has affected the people.

Private advices from Italy state that Italian emigrants from the cholera infected districts of that country are being embarked at Genoa for America, their original starting points being concealed, says a Paris dispatch.

At Muelhausen, Germany, Arthur Flochmann, who was injured when his biplane collapsed at a height of 1,000 feet, died without having regained consciousness.

Sir Thomas Vezey Strong has been elected lord mayor of London without opposition. Sir Thomas is a prominent advocate of temperance reforms and the distinction of being the first total abstainer chosen as chief magistrate of the metropolis. He was born in 1837 and in 1860 married Lillie, the eldest daughter of the late James Hunt.

The French government has issued an order that all railroad employes being Paris from Austria and Italy be detained in Savoy depot for examination. Savoy forms a portion of the southeast of Paris.

FROZEN SALADS FOR LUNCH

Cool Dishes That Freeze Up and Are Inexpensive and Always Palatable.

A "frozen salad" is not a fresh vegetable, neither is it an expensive luxury. It is merely the latest and most appealing way to serve vegetables in very hot weather.

A mayonnaise jelly, a chilled aspic or a sherbet of vegetable juices justify the name, but in no way indicate the tempting qualities of these ornamentally named delicacies.

A mayonnaise jelly may be served with any frozen salad. Mixed with cubes of celery, cucumbers or any cold cooked vegetables, it may be molded in forms or cups and served on lettuce; or it may be used to garnish any ordinary soft salad.

To make mayonnaise beat one egg, season it to taste with salt and pepper, mix with half a cup of olive oil, one-eighth teaspoon of mustard, and one teaspoon of granulated gelatin in cold water, dissolve it in hot, and mix with the mayonnaise; harden in a shallow pan and cut in fancy shapes or chill in moulds of fancy form.

For a frozen tomato salad, stew one quart of tomatoes with a slice of onion or any seasoning preferred and strain when cold. Add a few drops of lemon and vinegar and freeze like a sherbet. Prepare the hearts of lettuce, arrange on a salad plate and serve with cones of the frozen tomato.

For a frozen cheese salad strain one cup of pressed currants to remove the seeds. Mix with cream cheese to the consistency of a smooth thin custard. Freeze and serve upon lettuce garnished with rings cut from olives.

Black Walnut Catsup.

Prick and lay in brine for two weeks as for pickle, exchanging the brine three times a week. Every other day drain the salt and water from the nuts; put them into a wooden tray and pound with a potato beetle into small pieces. Return to the brine. When the two weeks are up you should have—when the brine is drained off—a fine black paste. Have ready this pickle: For each quart of the nut paste allow a cupful of vinegar and the same of strong wine, a tablespoonful of sugar, a teaspoonful each of onion juice and grated horseradish, two teaspoonfuls each of ground cloves and mace and a tablespoonful each of ground ginger and black pepper. Mix all well together and put over the fire. Cook steadily, stirring often, for two hours. Strain through a sieve, cool and bottle, seal with beeswax and resin.

This catsup will be ready for use in a few weeks, and will keep for ten years in a dark, cool place.

Peaches in Turkish Mode.

Peaches cooked in Turkish fashion are served with boiled rice. Peel the peaches by plunging them in boiling water, then remove the stone through a slit in one side, without injuring the shape of the peach. Fill hollows with seeded raisins and arrange in baking dish; sprinkle liberally with sugar and bake in hot oven 20 minutes. Have ready a dish lined with boiled rice, spread over it peaches, and serve with sauce made of cocoanut milk thickened with cornstarch and sweetened with granulated sugar.

What Is U-Ba-Cura

It is well established Southern remedy which has achieved a wide reputation for its numerous cures of kidney, bladder and Liver trouble. It is harmless, purely vegetable and the greatest of all remedies for the cure of the above diseases. Under the use of these troubles as a rule, soon pass away, to the great relief of the sufferer. All persons whose Kidneys, bladder or liver is affected, should go to the nearest druggist and get a bottle of this superb remedy. Druggists sell it at 50c and $1.00 per bottle. GROUCH GERM IS DISCOVERED

New Form of Bacillus Particularly Active in Hot Weather Found in Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—A new germ, as yet unnamed, has just been discovered in Kansas City. It is a hot weather bacillus and affects young and old alike, being particularly noxious in adults, it is said, and producing a chronic case of what ordinarily is called the "grouch."

The discoverers of this germ are Dr. E. L. Mathis, chief probation officer, and his assistants, who constantly are making a study of human nature and, by the way, this particular bug is one which attacks human nature only.

"It is a hot weather bug," said Doctor Mathias, "and can produce the worst case of grouch in a short time that you ever saw.

"Just now we juvenile officers have little to do so far as the juvenile court is concerned, but we are kept busy as bees looking after what we call hot weather business.

"Somehow or other, this hot weather seems to 'peeve' everybody. It takes the form of grouch in adults and the form of what the grown-ups are pleased to call 'devilment' in children.

"A man lies down to take a nap of a hot afternoon. He is just tuckered out by the heat, he says, and a nap will straighten him out. Just as he gets comfortably settled, boys or girls in the neighborhood begin to romp, and, of course, they call back and forth, and the would-be napper is annoyed.

"Then the irate adult goes outdoors. He is hard hit by the weather bug. He loses his temper and gives the children a calling down. The bug, in turn, attacks the juveniles, and they answer back and make life miserable for the complaining one.

"About that time we get a call concerning a big disturbance. Some of the men go out, learn it is the same old story, and it is up to them to explain to the adult that children must play and that they can't be expected to conduct their game after the fashion of a Friends' meeting. They also lecture the children and take steps to restore the equilibrium of the neighborhood which is ravaged by the summer bug."

The juvenile officers have not gone into the investigation of the bug in scientific fashion, and as yet have worked out no cure.

Krupp Works Growing.

The Krupp works, in Essen, in Germany, are constantly increasing in size. The number of men employed by the company at its works in Essen and elsewhere increased during 1909 by nearly 4,000, so that at the end of 1909 about 67,000 men were in the employ of the company. At the Essen works a total horsepower of over 73,000 is used, this power operating over 7,000 separate machine tools, over 900 cranes, 187 trip hammers and 81 hydraulic presses.

Famous Wolf Family Shot.

The most famous wolf in the west, "One Toe," by name, was laid low the other day by a ranchman at Upton, Wyo., who shot the animal, which has been hunted by stock growers in that part of the state for years. "One Toe," so named from the fact that his trail showed him to have but one toe on his right forepaw, has been the despair of stock growers for many years, raiding their herds and being held responsible for losses that aggregate thousands of dollars.

Calomel and Caesar.

Old friendships are destroyed by toasted cheese or welsh rabbit. Hard salted meat has led to suicide. Unpleasant feelings of the body produce corresponding sensations in the mind, and a great scene of wretchedness is sketched out by a morsel of misguided and indigestible food. Of such infinite consequence to happiness is it to study the body! As Sidney Smith said: "Calomel is often of more consequence than Caesar."

A Good Example

"I am a good example," writes Mrs. R. L. Bell, of McAlester, Okla., "of what Cardui will do for suffering women.

"I suffered with my head and back, for over six years, and although I tried everything, I never could get anything to do me any good until I began to take Cardui.

"Cardui has surely helped me and built me up and I am so thankful that I have found something that will do me good. I feel so much stronger and better than I have in a long time."

It is well to make up your mind before you are sick what medicine you will take when you are sick.

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

You will be glad to take it when you are tired, miserable and when life seems a weary grind. It will put new thoughts into your head, fresh courage into your mind. If not sick now, at least burn Cardui on to the pages of your memory, so that when you are sick you will ask for it without thinking.

If sick or weak, get a bottle today. At all druggists.

B. F. YOAKUM ON ORGANIZING

President of the Frisco System While in New York Tells of Advantages to Farmers.

Mr. B. F. Yoakum, president of the Frisco system of railroads, while in New York recently spoke at some length on the advantages of organization among farmers. He said among other things:

"The east does not understand or appreciate what the farmers of the west and middle west are doing toward organization the better to protect their interests in handling their products. I saw enough at the farmers' convention held in St. Louis the first week of this month to convince me that the farmers as producers are more enterprising than the consumers in our large cities whom their products must feed.

"There were present at this conference farmers from 40 different states. Their business talks dealt mainly with commercial and agricultural questions and not politics. Formerly politicians had a good deal to say at such agricultural meetings and took up much of the time and attention of the members of such conventions discussing politics rather than the improvement of their own industry.

"The farmers are doing two things of importance for themselves and the whole country: They are increasing their production per acre and they are developing better methods of marketing their crops.

"The agricultural awakening over the country is general and genuine. New methods, both for producing and marketing, are being studied by the farmers and the results are better production and prices with less labor. The farmers' chief difficulty is the adoption of better business methods in marketing their crops. This is now being overcome through organization. In this they are working under disadvantages, some cases are crude and awkward, but they are much in earnest and are making headway.

"The farmers have in the different states over 2,500 selling and buying organizations. Some of these agencies are handling a large business. Some have just organized and are small, but all are working with businesslike directness in the interest of the producers.

"In some of the western states they are storing their grains and other nonperishable products in their jointly-owned elevators, warehouses and granaries. They do their own banking and wait for the prices that suit them before they sell.

"New methods are being adopted. In the next few years much improvement will be made. These organizations are working with a view of cutting out waste between the grower and the user. They are endeavoring to keep their products out of the hands of needless profit takers.

"The farmers' organization is helping the farmers, but the consumers will continue to pay large tribute to the army of profit takers which stand between the farms and the consumers' tables so long as present conditions make it possible for middlemen to take so many unnecessary profits before the products reach the consumers.

"New York is in no position to call the farmers slow and behind the times. The people of the greatest city of America are the ones who are not taking advantage of their opportunities and are paying enormously for such neglect.

"While the farmers of the west and middle west are busy organizing they are yet often forced to sell their potatoes at 15 to 20 cents a bushel or let them rot on their hands. Therefore to make this system a success for both the producer and the consumer the movement from the field to the table must be as near direct as possible.

"The farmers have learned that they cannot sell to advantage through agencies too far from their homes and receive proper protection, and to overcome this they are establishing nearby selling agencies. These agencies are run with as good business sense as any New York business may be run, yet New York has done almost nothing in the way of establishing cheap and convenient buying places for that unorganized class which cannot protect itself."

Farm Associations in U. S.

Co-operation is making some headway in this country, but so far, farmers have been misled by ignorant and unscrupulous men who have designed to use the organization for their personal profit, or by politicians who advanced their own selfish interest. It does not take the American farmer long to see things in the right light, however, and it is only a matter of time when co-operative bodies will be properly conducted and prove of inestimable value to the agricultural communities everywhere.

Farmer as Business Man.

The successful management of warehouses has led up to many other enterprises being undertaken by the cultivators of the soil. Give the farmer a chance and you will see that he can appreciate and accept business propositions just as readily as any other class.

Cultivation.

After planting, keep the riding cultivator going just as long as possible, and when harvest comes on we find we have made no mistake in doing the most thorough work.

IN A BEE-SQUIRREL BATTLE

Prowling Boy Has Time of His Life Defending Himself While Up in a Honey Tree.

Germania, Pa.—To have enraged a colony of half a dozen flying squirrels and to have been viciously and disastrously attacked by them was the experience of Harry Sloan, an eighteen-year-old Stewardson township boy, while the incident as a whole has suddenly disclosed a trait of this type of squirrel that even old woodsmen and hunters never knew of.

Flying squirrels have always been looked upon with more or less contempt, and many gunners utterly refused to shoot them because of a superstition, something akin to that with reference to a white doe, that the killing would bring bad luck to some member of the offender's family.

Young Sloan is an adept at "lining" wild bees and was engaged at that business over in the Kettle creek region when he had the experience of his life. He invaded the tree inhabited by bees and squirrels and the latter attacked him, one after another, as fast as the bees themselves, and equally mad. The little animals bit the boy terribly, one of them inflicting an ugly gash on the eye. Sloan was almost blinded, but he finally groped his way down along the tree to the ground, though the aroused squirrels continued their onslaught until he was squarely upon the ground and able to defend himself with a cudgel.

Washing Crepe de Chine.

Washing crepe de chine is no more difficult than to wash a frock of colored muslin. If tepid water and good soap are used with care it will come from the laundry as triumphantly as a piece of white linen. Do not let it lie in the water longer than is absolutely necessary, rinse thoroughly, and when half dry press on the wrong side with a medium hot iron. If of a delicate color the garment must be dried in a shady place after pressing.

Sweet Omelets.

Sweet omelets are varieties of plain omelet in which sugar is used instead of salt and pepper and in which the fillings and garnishings consists of sweets, equally appropriate for any meal and a grand resource as emergency desserts. With a simple sweet omelet as the basis any material at hand may be used, so its possibilities are practically without limit.

DIZZINESS—DO YOU HAVE IT?

This is caused by the pile being reabsorbed into the circulation. To get rid of this trouble it is necessary to use a good liver medicine to eliminate the surplus bile from the system. St. Joseph's Liver Regulator (either liquid or powder) does it to perfection. Use it for all bilious troubles and you will soon feel better. Accept no substitute, but insist on having the genuine St. Joseph's Liver Regulator. Druggists and dealers sell it, liquid, 50c a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25c a box, five boxes for a dollar. Upchurch Drug Co.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Armed with alfalfa and corn, the stockman can simply do anything.

A sheep must produce a variety of products if it is to be most profitable.

The essential requisites for a working horse are good size, quick action and strength.

Keep a pair of nippers handy to snip off the sharp points of a sucking pig's teeth.

In proportion to its size, the horse has a smaller stomach than any other quadruped.

Grubb flies worry the sheep in hot weather. Provide a dark, cool shed or let them run in thick underbrush.

It weakens the horses to keep them shut up in a close stable during the hot nights. Turn them out.

Every effort should be made to have the stock enter the winter in good flesh and heart.

It does not pay to give water in dirty vessels to any farm animal. Hogs are no exception.

Pasture is the cheapest pork producer and the longer the season of pasturage may be provided, the better.

A poor appetite in any farm animal is greatly against its doing its best, no matter where it is working.

Hog pasture is getting dry and short? Cut a little green corn and toss it over, stalks and all, to the hogs. It will help them out wonderfully.

It is not the quantity of food taken into the stomach, but the amount absorbed by it, which benefits the system.

Be considerate of your horses' comfort on these torrid summer days and offer them water frequently. They suffer with thirst as badly as you do and work harder.

Had Babies Mixed.

While shopping in Shenandoah, Pa., Mrs. Katie Dumshock of Centralia left her one-month-old daughter in a go-cart outside of a department store, and when, completing her purchases, began to push home a carriage which she apparently thought was hers. After traveling several squares Mrs. Dumshock noticed her error and became so frantic that officers had to restrain her.

A search was made throughout the town and with newspaper assistance the lost child was restored to the distracted mother.

Quest of Quietude.

"It's a long way to look forward," said Mr. Cumrox; "but I constantly find myself wishing the Fourth of July would come 'round again."

"Is life too slow for you?"

"I should say not. Mother and the girls are getting up lawn parties and afternoon teas and sailing trips and motor excursions and a lot of other things. It's getting so that the Fourth of July seems like the only safe and sane day in the year."

We cannot help ourselves, the rules of the post office are not to be trifled with.

Twenty years ago the Birmingham news was rather fond of speaking of that town as "Big, busy, bustling Birmingham," and to-day it might as well do so. The census returns just made Public give the papulation of Biamingham as 132,585, an increase of 225.4 percent in the last ten years

In 1900 the population was 38,415, and in 1890 "Big, busy bustling Birmingcam contained 26,178 people.

Of course, the recent annexation of surbuban territory has materially helped in this large increase, but we are proud to be within hailing distauce of so important a city as Birmingham. May the next duade witness another sort phenomeal increase.

The untimely death of Senator Max Hamburger at Mobile last Sunday will be greatly regretted throughout Alabama. He died from appoplexy, at an age when he was just reaching his prime. Of sunny disposition he made friends wherever he went, and they so row he has left us.

Life has few moments of surpassing thrill and wonder. Yet there are some; and the loveliest thing about it all is this, that wealth cannot buy them, nor genius create them, nor rank command them. The impartialness of God is beautiful. A few of the superfluities do seem to be a little unevenly distributed—but the great holy luxuries of life are as freely vouchsafed the peasant as the king. The glory and the beauty of life itself; the shelter of a mother's arms, and the deeper shelter of her heart; the first dismantling kiss of love; the earliest glimpse of your first-born's face—these are for the plowman as well as for the poet or the prince.—Robert E. Knowles.

Great Coal Bed.

A further development of the Great Greta coal bed at Kurri Kurri (N. S. W.) has taken place. A splendid seam of clean mineral has been struck which opens out a veritable mountain of coal. The company propose to open out three collieries, and estimate that it will require at least 1,500 hands. The marvelous depth of the seam as proved—34 feet 9 inches—should insure easy working, and consequently cheap coal.

Gigantic Electric Power Plant.

According to the Canadian Electrical News, the Long Sault Development company, in conjunction with the St. Lawrence Power company, proposes to build a 4,500-foot dam 45 feet high across the St. Lawrence river at the head of the Long Sault rapids and to build an electric plant to develop 600,000-horse power. The scheme will cost $20,000,000.

is the original—has been the standard for thirty-five years.

There are thousands of so-called "just as good" Emulsions, but they are not—they are simply imitations which are never as good as the original. They are like thin milk—SCOTT'S is thick like a heavy cream.

If you want it thin, do it yourself—with water—but dont buy it thin.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas it has pleased almighty God to remove from our midst our beloved member J. A. Scott, on August 9, 1910. Whereas the ways of the almighty are to us unknown and we do not know why His life should love been brought to what seems to us an untimely end.

On November 22, 1902, he was ordained as a Deacon of New Cedron Church. Whereas the church has lost a good member, one who tailed early and late for the welfare of his church and we the members of New Cedron Church do hereby tender the following Resolutions of respect to his memory.

1st. That we extend our sympathy and heartfelt sorrow to the bereaved family.

2d. We commend them to the infinite father who alone can support them in this their love of affections.

3rd. That a copy of these Resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this church, and a copy be sent to the Alabama Baptist and a county paper, and a copy be sent to the family.

Mr. J. T. Cooley killed a chicken snake about five feet in length, Wednesday afternoon, at the side gate of Mr. Patrick Smith.

NOTICE

I have compared the poll list with the list of registrated voters as best I could, but I am sure that there are some names that ought to be on the list that are not on it. Hence I make this statement, hoping to get those who are qualified on the list, all who have registered and have paid poll tax in some other beat, all who have paid their poll tax, using sometimes their given name, and sometimes their initials.

In fact, if there is any difference in any of your poll tax receipts, if you will write me, or come to my office, I will take pleasure in getting your name on the list, if you are entitled to be on it.

If you have paid a poll tax in any other county, the law requres you to get a certificate from the Judge of Probate in that county and file with the Probate Judge here, in order to get on the poll list.

However, if you are not on the poll list, and are challenged on the day of election, as the law requires you can take the affidavit and vote.

FOR AN ALL ALABAMA CONVENTION

November 22-23, 1910

To the People of Alabama:

The time is ripe for an All-Alabama movement to quicken the activities of our own people and to attract desirable settlers and investors form other states.

The resources of Alabama, agricultural and mineral, are incalculable. Much has been done in the way of development, but vastly more remains to be done. The first step in development is self knowledge. Our own people can and should learn more of the possibilities of the state that they, themselves may utilize the riches lying at their hands. There are thousands of farmers and small manufacturers in the north and northwest seeking for location. The hegira to Canada from the northwest has ceased since the fancied El Dorado failed of expectation. The South has the soil, climate and waterways and untouched resources. It is the treasure house of the nation. Foremost in possibility of agricultural and manufacturing development is Alabama. It is to the South and Alabama that the people of the north and west are looking with inquiring gaze. Let Alabama sound the invitation to these good people to come and dwell in the most favored state in the nation. For the purpose of getting the progressive men of Alabama together to unite in a concerted movement, state wide in its scope, to promote the business welfare and prosperity of every section, a meeting is hereby called for Montgomery, Ala., on November 22 and 23, 1910. To every man who feels in his being a desire to do something in a material way for his state, a cordial invitation is extended.

Commercial organizations, mayors of cities, judges of probate courts and chairman of boards of county commissioners are requested to appoint delegates to the meeting. This call is made under the authority granted at a meeting held in Birmingham October 13, 1909, for the purpose of reorganizing the Alabama Commercial and Industrial Association.

Signed: T. H. Molton. President; F. G. Blair, Vice-President; J. B. Babb, Secretary; Frank V. Evans, Treasurer.

The following resolution was adopted:—Resolved, that the Secretary of this association be and is hereby introduced to prepare an address to the Commercial and Industerial Association. The Farmers Union' the judges of probote of the counties and the mayors of the cities to appoint delegates to a convention to be in Montgomery, Ala., on November 22-23, 1910, for the purpose of definitely organizing an Alabame association for the promotion of the following:—Advertising Alabama, improved methods of an Alabame label, securing labor for farm, factory and mine, dairy possibilities of the state, commerce and transportation, cooperation of business and professional men, relation of the negro to immigration. And that the said secretary shall prepare a complete program for the discussion of these subjects, the object of the meeting being to organize the state association for the promotion of these ends.

Vida.

Editor Banner—Please allow me a small space in your paper, as I haven't seen anything from this place for some time.

Health of this community is fine at present. Our Sunday School is progressing nicely under the management of Mr. Clyott.

Mr. Lucian Hester of this place is visiting relatives at Clanton this week. The singing at Mr and Mrs. Hesters was enjoyed by a large crowd Friday night.

Miss Dovie Cook of Ridervill is visiting Miss Lilla Hester this week-and has also been visiting relatives in Prattville.

Mrs. Chambers of this place is visiting relatives at Maplesville this week.

Mr. Cylde Sanders is visiting relatives in Blocton this weak.

Some of the boys looked quite lonesome Sunday; wonder what was the matter?

Will ring off for this, and if this misses the waste basket will come again.

TWO LONELY KIDS.

"IT BEATS ALL"

This is quoted from a letter of M. Stockwell, Hannibal, Mo. "I recently used Foley's Honey and Tar for the first time. To say I am pleased does not half express my feelings. It beats all the remedies I ever used. I contracted a bad cold was threatened with pneumonia. The first dose gave great relief and one bottle completely cured me." Contains no opiates. Was it Brown?

By Nellie Cravey Gilmore

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.)

As long as she lived Sylvia would never forget that dizzy walk home from the hospital in the stinging, pouring rain; the savage pleasure she experienced in the cruel way it whipped her hot cheeks and half froze the angry blood curdling fiercely through her rebellious little body.

She had been a fool to go there, of course. And she faced the verdict of her own common sense with the keenest sense of humiliation she had ever known. To be refused admittance to the room where her lover presumably lay dying because she could not give an affirmative answer to the attendant's inquiry as to whether she were "anything to the patient," was bitter enough of itself, but to come face to face with Chalmers's mother and Alline Bester, about to enter where she had been denied, and to be met by a haughty stare of surprise from each, made her young blood boil.

As a matter of fact they were everything to each other. Both she and Chalmers knew that far better than any spoken word or circlet of gold could signify, but no formal engagement existed between them, and she could not be the first to proclaim their love.

They told her at the hospital that if he lived through the night the chances were he would recover. The following day a paragraph in the paper stated that young Chalmers was pronounced comparatively out of danger. A succeeding item hinted at his approaching betrothal to Alline Bester. And within a week the young fullback was on the rapid road to recovery.

The day before Chalmers was discharged from the hospital Sylvia, her mother and father sailed for Japan.

"Listen Dear," he Began Excitedly.

Nine weeks later Sylvia sat reading with overbright, indignant eyes the following letter from her lover.

"Boston, Mass., December 3.

"Dear Little Girl—Why did you run away without one word of farewell? Is it possible that, after everything, you can still be in the dark about how I feel toward you? Have I been mistaken in assuming that you felt the same?

"My last conscious thought before that frightful accident was of you; my first on reawakening to the rational world was of—you. My very first act on being released from the crucible of nurses and doctors was to hasten to Wildmere, only to find you thousands of miles away—and not one word or line of explanation!

"The governor and my mater were so cut up about the accident that I have concluded to retire from the gridiron for the present. Thus you see, everything considered, I return to college a very dejected and gloomy soph. Will you not drop me a line from the far off orient that life may seem something less than a blank, dear, and the world a habitable place instead of one vast, aching wilderness?

"As always,

"Billy."

Sylvia read the letter several times with a variety of emotions. Then she crumpled it and tossed it into the trash basket. Afterward, she went over to her writing desk and penned a cloudy polite little note in reply that effectually shut off any possible excuse for further correspondence. When the letter was sealed, the little resolute line of her lips relaxed into quivering and she broke into a storm of tears.

Early in the following autumn the Marburys returned to America.

It was on a glorious November morning that Sylvia came in, flushed, from a downtown expedition, and hurried straight to the little white sitting room in their new apartments at a fashionable New York hotel.

Without stopping to remove her hat, she turned her bag upside down, emptying the contents on a small, onyx table. There were several new postcards, half a dozen newspaper clippings, a few half-tones—of Brown.

She opened her scrapbook and pasted them all in with painstaking fingers. Never had there been a man like Brown on the Yale gridiron. Every day added fresh laurels to his already brilliant record. He was worshiped by his classmates, idolized by his team and adored by the girls.

From the wreck of her shattered hopes, Sylvia had risen to join in the universal hero worship. On her mantel was a panel of the formidable brown; in her bureau drawers were innumerable likenesses and unlikenesses. She carried his picture in a tiny locket about her neck, and on her desk was a porcelain painting of him.

She glanced smilingly at the dozen different caricatures each newspaper had proudly named as the "only true likeness" of the mighty one. Then, with a queer little pang at her heart, she opened the secret compartment of her desk and drew forth an old photograph of Billy Chalmers. She looked into the handsome, serious eyes long and earnestly; a little sob caught in her throat. How she had loved him! Could it be really true, she asked herself, that he had changed so much—and cared for that other (?), cared enough to marry her, as report said?

A sharp rap on her door interrupted the painful train of thought, and Sylvia rose and turned the knob, schooling her face into unconcern. It was a special, in Billy's own handwriting, and she tore open the envelope with crimsoning cheeks:

"Dear Sylvia," it ran. "May I call at four on a matter of importance? Am sailing at daybreak for Germany to take up the study of medicine in Berlin. Please do not refuse me.—Billy."

For an instant Sylvia stood holding the sheet between trembling, icy fingers. Should she see him? All the fierce resentment and wounded pride of the past year surged up in her defense; with a swift impulse she seized a pen and dashed down a single word and signed it "Sylvia."

The succeeding hours were the longest Sylvia had ever spent in her life, but Chalmers arrived promptly. She greeted him with her most formal little manner, effectually screening wild inward turbulence from his eager penetrating glance.

Every attempt he made to lead the conversation into personal channels was balked by her, and finally Chalmers broke out abruptly:

"Look here, Sylvia, the last time I saw you it was an understood thing between us that as soon as we both graduated we'd be—"

"Have you forgotten—Alline?" she interposed, coldly.

"That affair was all my mother's doing. Only recently I learned of the report in the paper which you must have seen. I went at once to Miss Bester and told her the true situation. She is to be married in April to another man. We shook hands and parted friends. On my word of honor, that is the sum and substance of the whole thing. By George, Sylvia! who is that fellow?" Chalmers had caught sight of the panel on the mantelshelf, and the color flooded his face.

Sylvia blushed, too, and said, foolishly: "Isn't he a wonder?"

"To judge by the gushiness of the press—he is," was the half-disgusted reply.

"You know him well, of course?" she queried, fencing for time.

"Oh, after a fashion! Do you?" He gave her a quick, keen look.

"Only in this legendary sort of way," and she indicated the pile of clippings on her desk, her eyes traveling comprehensively from one wall to another where were displayed the more or less ludicrous prints. "I suppose he's a perfect idol of the girls, isn't he?" she asked, demurely.

Chalmers grunted. "I happen to know that he doesn't care a fig for but one in the world—and she won't look at him."

"Oh," exclaimed Sylvia, "what a stupid she must be!"

Chalmers rose and paced the length of the room, then back again. He stopped in front of Sylvia's chair; his voice had changed when he spoke.

"Is it possible, Sylvia, that this fellow has supplanted me in your estimation—has taken the old, dear—place—?"

Sylvia laughed constrainedly. "I—you see," she said, "I had to have something to keep up my interest—somebody. It—it's a sort of fad, you know—"

"But if he should come here today, and ask you to be his wife, would you listen to him?"

"I—suppose—I—should," was the very subdued response.

Chalmers bit his lip. Suddenly he sat down on the arm of her chair and deliberately drew her head against him. "Listen, dear," he began excitedly. "I want to tell you a few things about Brown. He had a serious accident last year during one of the big games, and his people didn't want him to play football any more. He didn't make any rash promises, but rather than have them worry, he took an assumed name—"

Sylvia looked up tentatively, her eyes now wistful, now dancing—red lips parted.

"Do you think he did wrong in this?"

Sylvia shook her head, her black lashes shadowing the pink rim of her cheek.

"Sweetheart, I—I am Brown."

"Oh!"

He caught her close to his heart. "Morrow, dear, or will it require a "Will you cross the ocean with me to longer time to get accustomed to Brown's identity?"

"I knew it all along," she whispered. "I haven't missed a game. And—and—Billy, please let me talk, I—I think it would be something of a distinction, really, to be pointed out as Mrs. Brown."

Owns His Home.

"Have you ever seen the Canadian Rockies?"

"No."

"Then there is a glorious treat in store for you."

"Don't you believe it. If I ever get money enough to go to the Canadian Rockies my house will need painting. It always does whenever I begin to think I can see daylight ahead."

HOW TO KEEP BUTTER PURE

London Firm Sells Microbes to Be Introduced Into Cream to Kill Decay Germs.

London.—Inoculated butter—guaranteed to keep fresh for months—into which millions of beneficial bacteria have been introduced for the purpose of preserving it, will be in common use in the near future, and the part hitherto played by boric acid in butter will henceforward be played by the active microbe.

The production of these preservative micro-organisms is the object of a new company, which has recently opened its offices at Cricklewood, and here large laboratories are being installed for the purpose of raising millions of billions of bacteria for use in the dairies of the world.

The manager of the new company said that the discovery of the preservative microbe was the result of years of scientific research.

"Its object," he said, "is to fight other microbes that are found in butter which have a harmful effect upon it—that of turning it rancid. The only way of combating these germs has hitherto been by the use of preservative chemicals, which are harmful adulterants.

"But now my firm has succeeded in finding an antidote germ to the harmful one, and by introducing it into the milk before churning butter is made which will keep fresh and pure for a long time.

"The inoculation of the milk has the effect, broadly speaking, of setting up a fight between the opposing armies of germs and the bad ones, that would destroy the freshness of the butter, are destroyed by the harmless ones which are introduced."

The microbes are sold in the form of a clear liquid, in small bottles, which is added to buttermilk and prepared in a certain way before use. When the preparation is ready one gallon of it is added to every 20 gallons of cream in the butter churn, the rest of the butter making process proceeding in the usual way.

The prices of the cultures used in these processes vary from 75 cents to $2.50 a bottle, and full instructions to dairymen are issued with each consignment. The cultures are equally effective in margarine.

SNAKES IN SPORTING CLASS

Pennsylvania Reptiles Make Good at Fishing Trout—Also Attack Farmer's Pigs.

Altoona, Pa.—Two recent incidents prove the Blair county snake to be in the sporting class, though not always quite lucky in his hunting and fishing experiences.

Before returning to the city from his summer home at Royer, Postmaster George Fox of this city went down to Piney creek to look for trout.

As Fox was crossing the bridge he heard a commotion at the water's edge and, looking down, saw a water snake trying to swallow a seven-inch trout. Procuring his landing net, for he is a noted fisherman, Fox, assisted by George D. Cook, a Harrisburg merchant, who has been his guest for several days, landed both the snake and the trout. The snake never let go of the trout until a cudgel landed on its neck. The trout later made a nice meal for an Altoona friend.

Only the day before an Altoona railroader discovered the same snake, an old inhabitant of the pool, devouring trout, but the reptile got away. Its chief diet for a long time has been trout, it being an adept at catching them.

Hearing a pig emitting unearthly squeals, Harry Jones, a farmer, near Ebensburg, hastended to his pig stye and was astounded to find one of his pigs encircled by a blacksnake and slowly being squeezed to death. Jones grabbed up a rake and killed the reptile, which measured six feet four inches in length, four inches in diameter and 12 inches in circumference.

Elderly People Helped Free

The last years of life are the sweetest, and yet the most difficult to prolong. It is then that the greatest care is exercised in maintaining bodily health. But the chief care should always be with regard to the food you eat and whether you are digesting it properly. You should not allow yourself to become constipated.

No doubt you have tried salts and cathartic pills, purgative tablets, etc., and have come to the conclusion that they are violent in action and do but temporary good. Listen, then, to the voice of experience with regard to a wonderful and mild laxative, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is not new, only we are trying to find new friends for it.

A. A. Fults, of Johnston City, Ill., suffered from stomach trouble for six years and found his cure in Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. His wife uses it too with success. We could name hundreds of others. Some heard of it first through neighbors or friends; others through the doctor's offer to send any sufferer from a stomach, liver or bowel complaint a free sample bottle for trial, without charge. If you will send your name and address he will send you a trial bottle direct to your home. If it proves itself as he claims then continue the treatment by buying a 50-cent or $1 bottle of your druggist, as all of them sell it. Old people, like children, should look for purity, and it is well to mention that the purity of this remedy is vouched for with the U. S. government. Also, though a free bottle is sent to prove its merits, results are always guaranteed from the regular bottles bought of druggists, who will refund your money if it does not satisfy you. Send at least for the free test bottle today.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Building Up Affection.

Natural affection offers a fine foundation on which to erect the edifice of a firm and enduring friendship, but it will not rise up itself. We must build it, stone by stone, if we would possess it. If we have a valued and respected friend, what pains we take to cherish his friendship; how carefully we endeavor to prune away from ourselves that which would displease him, and cultivate those qualities which he admires; how we strive to gratify him by pleasant surprises, and to avoid all that could wound or trouble him! Yet, let the familiar house-door shut us in, and how many of us take the same pains?

Healthy Fowls.

The natural inheritance of all fowls is constitutional vigor, provided, of course, they are not enfeebled by injudicious breeding. Constitutional vigor can be maintained and brought about by choosing the strongest, healthiest and hardiest of the stock for breeders every spring and by killing off the weak and sickly ones in the fall. The introduction of fresh blood frequently not only keeps up the stamina, health and vigor of stock, but it also enables them to resist sickness and sudden changes of weather much better than fowls closely and continuously inbred, or fowls not bred to any degree of constitutional excellence, or selected for establishing any permanent quality.

Reaching the Top

in any calling of life, demands a vigorous body and a keen brain. Without health there is no success. But Electric Bitters is the greatest Health Builder the world has ever known. It compels perfect action of stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels, purifies and enriches the blood, tones and invigorates the whole system and enables you to stand the wear and tear of your daily work. "After months of suffering from Kidney Trouble," writes W. M. Sherman, of Cushing, Me., "three bottles of Electric Bitters made me feel like a new man" 50c at Upchurch Drug co.

THINK OF

Mexican Mustang Liniment

AND WHAT IT MEANS TO YOU.

Relief from pain that might otherwise cause you hours of agony.

Tired out muscles eased up and made ready for another day's work.

Lameness in the back and shoulders promptly cured and stiff joints limbered up.

Burns, Scalds, Cuts and Mashes rendered painless and quickly healed.

Rheumatism, Lumbago and Sciatica robbed of their anguish and banished forever.

Ulcers, Old Sores and Open Wounds healed promptly and permanently.

The first application of Mexican Mustang Liniment subdues the pain but it continues its work until every quivering nerve is soothed and quieted.

The great penetrating power of this famous remedy enables it to do this quickly and positively.

In all cases of Sprains, Bruises or Lameness, Mexican Mustang Liniment should be rubbed in persistently.

The antiseptic qualities of this old reliable household remedy make it safe and sure.

time to erect scaffolds that it does to do the work on small jobs. A very convenient movable bracket is made of 2 by 4 inch scantling, nailed to form a right angle and braced with boards. A 2 by 4 is then inserted and the bracket slid up the side of the building with the staging boards on it. The foot of the 2 by 4 is then staked to prevent slipping. Often there are odds and ends about the farm buildings that may be substituted for the 2 by 4s, using the above plan for the staging bracket.

ACREAGE DEVOTED TO HEMP

Increase in Importation Offers Market for Larger Home Production of Fiber.

The bluegrass region of Kentucky, in the center of which lies Lexington, raises about 20,000 acres of Cannabis sativa from which hemp is procured. The acreage devoted to hemp in other parts of the United States is very small—perhaps 600 acres around Lincoln, Neb., and an equal number in the lower Sacramento valley in California, with small experimental plantings in Indiana, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa and Arkansas.

Russia produces more for export than all other countries, but Italy, Austria-Hungary, Germany, France, Belgium, Turkey, China and Japan grow it commercially for fiber.

All the hemp fiber produced in this country is used in American mills, and as increasing quantities are being imported, a market for a larger home production is offered. Therefore, the circular recently issued by the United States department of agriculture on the cultivation of hemp in the United States, in which climate, soil, sowing, harvesting the plant, and methods of preparing the soft gray or yellow bast fiber are described and explained, should prove of interest to farmers in those sections of the country outside of the recognized hemp growing region where soil and climate seem to offer a prospect favorable to its production.

In Cabbage Fields.

Give nitrate of soda a trial in your cabbage fields. One hundred per acre for each application is the usual amount, although 200 pounds at a time is used by some growers. Leave check rows to show the difference in results.

FARM NOTES

Clean cultivation is half the battle.

Cauliflower seed are still brought from Denmark.

Intensive farming means more than double cropping.

The present day farmer is a specialist in the true sense of the word.

The legumes are especially strong in protein and therein lies their great worth.

Potatoes are continuing to absorb quite a good deal of the trucker's attention.

Exposing plant root exposed to the sun and wind is like leaving a fish out of water.

Small, stale vegetables will hurt your poultry. Feed them to the pigs, cows or poultry.

The three important leaf troubles of cucumbers are powdery mildew, downy mildew and anthracnose.

Apply a spraying manure with a spreader and put on uniformly, and all parts of the field are equally benefited.

It is seldom, if ever, necessary to plow land for alfalfa when it has been well enriched with manure.

The United Kingdom seems to be unable to produce more wheat from an acre of land than any other country.

The cotton vines are rarely pulled up and burned them. If only whipped over find a borer about the roots.

Many of the entire early sorts are set quickly along the furrows in rows two and a half to three feet apart.

Every farmer's garden should contain the good fruit and vegetables that the soil and climate will grow, and make up a great part of the meals, and they are the most wholesome foods that can be eaten.

SECURES WATER FROM DRAIN

Farmer Didn't Want to Bear Expense of Drilling Well, So Constructed Cement Trough.

I have a large pasture in which there is no natural water, writes Scott Adams in Farm and Home. I did not want to go to the expense of drilling a well, so I dug a hole over the drain that runs through the field. I constructed a little trough with a cement bottom and sides of wood. The water of the drain runs through this. I built a fence around it to keep stock from falling in, and once a day I dip water out of this into the tank nearby.

WEAN PIGS AT PROPER TIME

Much Depends Upon Their Thrift, Season of Year, Accommodation and Their Feed.

BY W. H. UNDERWOOD.

The age at which pigs can be weaned is indefinite. The time depends largely upon their thrift, the season of the year, the accommodation and the feed one has for them. I do not consider it advisable to wean pigs before they are two months old, I prefer more, to less age.

I generally wean my early pigs in May, as I like to raise fall litters from a portion of the sows. Sows can ordinarily be bred within a week after the pigs are taken away.

Sows that farrow in June will be too late to breed for fall farrow. It has been my custom to let these run with the sows until they wean themselves.

I prefer to have my sows with litters in as small bunches as possible prefer a house and small yard with plenty of grass for each sow. If they are thus divided, and any of the pigs get out of order, you at once know what litter it is, and feed accordingly.

Watch the little pigs closely and if they look thin and hungry see that their mother is better fed and swilled. As it is next to impossible to raise a litter of pigs without some of them getting the scours at one time or another, I will give my treatment for this ailment, which has proven successful to me.

I watch them closely, and if any of them are too loose at the next feeding I dissolve a teaspoonful of copperas, in a little warm water and feed it to the sow in her swill. If the first dose does not prove effective, I give another the following day.

When the pigs get from two to four weeks old I fence off a corner in the yard, where the dam cannot go, and give the pigs all the shelled corn they will eat.

As soon as they are accustomed to coming for the corn I begin by feeding a little fresh milk diluted one-half with water. I begin with one cupful and increase the amount as they learn to drink.

As the stomach of a little pig is as sensitive and delicate as that of a child it is very important that no milk is left in the trough from the previous feed as it tends to sour the trough and the new milk.

After I have the pigs eating and drinking, so they will come when called and their stomach thoroughly accustomed to the feed they are ready to wean.

Date cream is easily prepared and highly recommended for children. Remove the stones from the dates, cut them rather fine and put them into a glass dish. Cover with stiffly beaten cream and place the dish near the ice for 30 minutes.

Cleaning and Bleaching Hats.

The following mixture is recommended for cleaning and bleaching straw hats. It can be used on expensive Panama straws without injuring the material: Sodium bisulphate, five drams; tartaric acid, one dram; borax, five drams. Moisten a small quantity of the powder and apply it with a tooth brush to the hat. First remove the band.

Odors in Refrigerator.

Burn a paper in the refrigerator and it will remove all odors.

Capt. Regardus again hits the Bull's Eye

This world famous rifle shot who holds championship record of 100 pigeons in 100 consecutive shots is living at Lincoln, Ill. Recently interviewed, he says, "I suffered a long time with kidney and bladder trouble and used several well known kidney medicines, all of which gave me no relief until I started taking Foley's Kidney Pills. Before I used Foley's Kidney Pills I had severe backaches and pains in my kidneys with suppression and a cloudy voiding. On arising in the morning I would get dull headaches. Now I have taken three bottles of Foley's Kidney Pills and feel 100 percent better. I am never bothered with my kidneys or bladder and again feel like my own self. Upchurch Drug Co.

THE PARABLE OF THE TALENTS

Sunday School Lesson for Oct. 9, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 25:14-30. Memory verse 29.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord."—Matt. 25:21.

TIME.—Tuesday afternoon, April 4, A. D. 30. Immediately following the last lesson.

PLACE.—On the slopes of Mount Olivet, overlooking Jerusalem.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

The parable shines clearest in the light of the circumstances. Jesus and his disciples are still on Olivet, overlooking Jerusalem and the Temple in all their glory. Jesus had just foretold their destruction. Let the disciples learn a necessary lesson from the cause of that ruin.

Many and great talents had been committed to the Jewish nation. No nation had ever received so great a trust as they—the divine Revelation, religious truth, and best of all the Messiah, the Son of God; and thus power to become a blessing to all the world.

This nation had refused to use these talents intrusted to them; again and again they had buried the talent instead of using it; and now they were about to murder their Messiah, instead of using him, and thus to bury this talent in the earth.

The parable lay in full view before the disciples' eyes. What the city then was, multiplied into the new Jerusalem of the Revelation, could have been theirs evermore by faithful use of the divinely entrusted talents. The loss of all, "the outer darkness," "the weeping and gnashing of teeth," as the fruit of unfaithfulness, lay in the prophetic vision shown by Christ.

And now that buried talent was brought forth and was to be entrusted to the disciples and to the Christian church they were to found. The five talents were now offered to them, and the vital question was what they would do with them. The two courses were made very plain to them by the parable. It was written in letters of light on their sky, printed indelibly on their minds.

A man traveling into a far country, and therefore wishing to leave his affairs in competent hands. He represents Jesus Christ who was about to leave his disciples and go to heaven, which was a far country in the sense that his servants could not have visible communication with him. He was to leave the spread of the gospel, and the salvation of the world in the hands of his disciples, although he was with them in invisible but real presence.

The servants denote all those to whom the interests of the kingdom of heaven were entrusted. The Jewish rulers are among those represented by the man with one talent, for they looked upon the kingdom of God placed in their charge as a matter of small account compared with their own selfish interests. The apostles and early Christian leaders received some five talents, some two, some one; and so do all Christ's professed followers, and all who have received from Christ the privileges and blessings of his gospel. The principle applies to all men, for all have been entrusted by God with many things.

Robert Louis Stevenson was talking one day to the children of a school in Samoa about the Parable of the Talents, and told them there were three possessed by them all. Tongues, to be used to make all about them cheerful and happy. Faces, to be kept as bright as a new silver coin, that they might shine like lamps in their homes. Hands, to be kept employed in useful work cheerfully done.

His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant. He had his lord's approval. Faithfulness, not success, nor the amount gained, was rewarded. God will say "Well done" only to those who have done well. There are no empty compliments in the day of judgment. "Handel tells us that when he wrote the 'Hallelujah Chorus' he saw the heavens opened and all the angels and the great God himself!" A modest man of moderate ability said that he could not expect God's Well done, but he did expect that he would say, Well tried; Well attempted.

Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord, participate in his joy and share with him in his pleasure, the same kind of joy which our Lord himself feels. Leighton's words on this entering into the joy of the Lord are beautiful: "It is but little we can receive here, some drops of joy that enter into us, but there we shall enter into joy, as vessels put into a sea of happiness." The joy of the Lord Jesus Christ, of which the faithful, like him, shall partake in some measure here, and in its fullness hereafter, is the joy of a free activity in doing right, like the joy of motion in health, like the song of a bird in the morning.

Edward Everett Hale writing of George Washington says: "He was always subordinating himself to the duty that was before him. He was born, as we saw, to small opportunities; he made them great. He was educated with comparatively small advantages; he made them the first of advantages. He was brought up among simple people. He learned among the simple people the way in which to dictate to kings and to handle generals. You must let me reverently repeat the words of Scripture: 'He was faithful in a few things; he was made ruler over many things.'"

AIR CARS IN MARKET SOON

Great Activity in Manufacture of Aeroplanes Is Predicted by American Manufacturer.

New York.—In ten years aeroplanes will be in general use by private citizens for business and pleasure; not, perhaps, to so great an extent as the automobile is now, but to such a degree that their appearance will excite no comment whatever. This, at least, is the prediction of an American automobile manufacturer who has just returned from Europe.

As a result of the progress shown on the other side of the ocean and of the enthusiasm aroused no less than a dozen big concerns in and about this city are rushing plans for the manufacture of various types of air craft.

Several of these are companies now engaged in making automobiles who purpose to take on the manufacture of air cars as a side line, and one such big firm is already advertising its readiness to supply aeroplanes to all may care to purchase. Others purpose to devote themselves exclusively to meeting the demands of air navigators.

Watermelon Sweet Pickles.

Layer of grape leaves, layer of rind; sprinkle teaspoonful of alum, cover with water, and let simmer on stove until clear. Set aside to cool. To one pound of rind take one pound of sugar, one-half pint vinegar, six cloves, four sticks of cinnamon, and a small piece of white ginger root. Boil rind and sirup 30 minutes and can while hot.

A Suggestion to Women

What is the best remedy to use when girls are changing into womanhood. What is the best to use when you are low spirited, distressed with evil forebodings, together with pains in the side, with your nerves unstrung and life is a burden? If you also have lassitude and debility, turn to VINO-VITÆ, the great female remedy. As its name implies, it is a "wine of life" for ailing women giving strength to the weak, hope to the despondent and comfort to life. It assists and makes children easy, corrects the monthly period and insures good health. Druggists sell it at $1.00 per bottle. If your druggist can't supply you, write to the Granger Medicine Co. Chattanooga, Tenn.

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE FARMERS.

The much talked of season of hard times and business depression has failed to arrive; the prophecies of the chronic knocker are wanting in the fulfillment and the dire misfortunes predicted by the ever present calamity howler have died in the borning. Alabama, Chilton county and Clanton, instead of going to the bow-wows, as forecasted by would-be-wise sores, has gone steadily onward upon the road of material development that leads to certain success and abundant prosperity.

We are enjoying the fruits of our labors as never before; the cry of poverty is hushed throughout this heaven-blessed section; on every side is heard the tuneful tones of thrift and prosperity. The frugal farmer will not have to draw upon the store house of the West for his corn supply, for the harvest within our own fields is abundant in the extreme.

The cotton producer is satisfied with the results of his labors and the shining coin which high prices for his staple enables him to secure and jingle in his jeans, not only makes a gladsome sound to his ears, but fills his heart with joyful anticipations of a happy Christmas-tide. All things conspire to make his lot a pleasant one indeed.

The Chilton County Farmer is fast assuming that place in the economic relations of life which his avocation predestined him to occupy the front rank—a leader among the advance guard. Long faces have been succeeded by smiling countenances and mortgaged homes and farms are soon to become happy firesides and productive fields of pleasure. Hard times have been vanquished and prosperity is victorious.

Contentment, peace and plenty are knocking at every door.

We are now entering upon an era of commercial development never heretofore anticipated; a season of rich rewards for honest toil is now dawning and will soon burst with noonday splendor upon our people.

The farmers are happy as they should be, for mother earth has yielded them rich trophies for their plucking; prices are soaring amid the radiant beauty of the stars; his products are in demand as never before.

Cotton is again King and corn is the Prince Imperial. What more could the planter desire to make his cup of gladness overflow?

Desiring to have you make our place headquarters, we have arranged to pay the very top notch for every pound of the fleecy staple brought to our store.

We want to have a hand in your prosperity; we wish to be remembered in your rejoicing.

Come to us with your sample, we will top the market on every occasion; call upon us for your wants, our large and varied stock enables us to meet your every requirement and at prices that will make glad for the visit.

We hate the chronic croker, we despise the knocker and the pessimist. The old world is bright with hope, buoyant with success, happy in plenteous abundance. We want you to know that we rejoice at your season of success, you desire it and we hope you will enjoy it to the fullest extent.

Come to see us, your happy faces make us glad indeed.

Come whether you want to buy or sell, both or either or neither. We will be glad to greet you.

We are going to set the gait this year and those who would keep up with us must clip it off at a merry chase.

Cordially yours,

Farmers of Chilton County, we greet you as the two fold keepers and producers of our prosperity. You are they who have produced the wealth of our Country and upon your heads we pour our praises in unstinted measure. You have earned your reward and should enjoy the fruits of your labors.

The Merchant who has bought wisely and well rejoices at your success,

The cotton buyer whose heart beats in unison with your own delight in the oportunity afforded him to give you good prices for your staple; he who would withhold from you the best and highest the market affords is neither a friend to the farmer nor a wise man of business.

We want you to succeed, because in your success we also shall share.

We have bought not stingily but well; we have purchased in keeping with your position and your desire; you want the best, therefore we supplied ourselves with the best that we might accommodate both your taste and your demands.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

PEOPLES SAVINGS BANK
CLANTON, ALA.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Clanton, Ala., Oct. 3rd, 1910

Editor Banner—I would appreciate if you would allow me a small space in you valuable paper. first, I want to thank the good people of Chilton county, who came to the singing. We had a large crowd and an enjoyable day. There seems to be some rumors to the effect that some of the Republicans of the county are not going to support the nominees of the Republican prsmary of July last on account of the amendment fight. I for one, was against the amendment, and did all in my power to defeat it; at the same time I went into the Republican primary which came off July 25th, and voted for my choice as a Republican. Now I intend to do all I can to help bring about the election of all the nominees of the said primary. I wish to state further that I believe all the Republicans of Chilton county will do the same thing. I have lived in this county for the past 55 years, and have allways cast my ballot with what I conceived to be to the best interests of the masses of the people. I want to pay my respects to the Clanton Press man. He seems to have something to say in every issue of his paper, in a cunning, cutting way, trying to compare the white Republicons of this county with the black negro of Dalas county. He will find that the Republicans of this county are white men, and believe in fair and honest elections. If he writs till next November, we will defeat the democratic ticket by a large majority. While the Press man writes his slurs in one column of his paper, comparing us with negros, in the same issue he will beg us to support the Democratic ticket which has nothing to offer us but dry bones and soup houses. We need no such editors in Chilton county. He had better go back to Dallas county, as the people of Chilton county will take care of the Republican party without his help.

Respectfully,
R. J. Langston.

Mars Hill, Ala., Oct. 7, 1910

Editor Banner—I have been thinking for some time that I would write a few lines for publication. I am glad to know that the Republicans are falling in line, and when the Democrats depend on them to elect their ticket they will be fooled.

I would like to know how the Democrats expect to elect their ticket this fall. Take the vote Judge Reynolds got in the primary, and take Mr. Deason, Judge Reynolds got over eight hundred and Deason over five hundred, and besides Mr. Smith got over three hundred, so you see we have about two to one to start on, and I think this is about the way it will stand this fall. I am glad to know that Mr. Smith is doing all he can for the election of the Republican ticket. I was talking to him and he wants us to get the largest majority we ever got.

I would like to know what the trouble is with the Republican administration from national down to the county?

Did we farmers ever have a better time than we are having now?

Was our county ever in better fix than it is now? Did we ever have our puplic briages in better condition? Was our treasury ever in better fix? Was the fine and forfeiture fund ever in better condition than it has been since the last administration taken holt? In fact, is not the entire condition better than it ever has been? Judge Reynolds offered to put the net profits he made from the county court and convict hire against the profits and any ten years before he taken holt. I can see nothing to complain of except the Democrats want the office. I want to ask the voters this quesion; If the Democrats have got the town of Clanton in debt one thousand dollars how much would they get in six years? And especially since the same crowd want to get hold of the county that has put the town in debt.

Well, it looks like the leaders of the Socialist party want to help the Democrats, but they hardly know how to start, but I understand Mr. Pounds has come straight out and said he prefered to see the Democrats elected to the Republicans. This sounds mighty strange since we remember how the Democrats have loved Mr. Pounds in the past. It looks like the Socialists are to go into the strong hold of the Republicans, and make their speeches to try and reduces our vote, but if taey are all like the speech was at our place it will strengthen us.

No we can not be fooled by any such, we have been tried in the past. I hope every Republican will do his duty until the last vote is counted, and we will have such a victory as we have never had. Old Mars Hill will be there.

Respectfully.
C. L. Langston.

Clanton, Oct. 11, 1910

Editor Banner:—This is the first time that I have had anything to say, publicly, in reference to the present campaign, but it is not due to any lack of interest on my part. I have felt all along that the people of this county knew, so well, my position in the matter, that it would not be necessary for me to have anything to say. However, they are some facts that I feel the people of this county should know, and when they are placed before them, I am confident that they will have great weight in determining how they will cast their ballot in the November election. There is an old saying that it is best to "let well enough alone," and if the facts in relation to Chilton county, and the administration of its affairs at the hands of the Republican party, prove that it is in as good condition as any county in the state, and in a far better condition than a great many, then I believe that the voters of this county will reach the conclusion to let well enough alone, and continue the Republican party in power.

It needs no argument for me, or any one else, that there has been, under this present administration, a wonderful progress in the material development of our county along all lines. Some portions of our public roads which, at the beginning of this administration, were almost imposable, have been improved and perfected to such an extent that it is really a pleasure to drive over them. There has been a vast improvement in all of the public highways, so that the people in the remote sections of our county can, with the greatest of ease, carry the products of their labor to any market in the county, thus making it possible for them to sell at the highest market price, commodities which, before the improvement of our roads, were practically worthless, by reason of the fact that they could not carry them over the roads

I have compared the poll list with the list of registrated voters as best I could, but I am sure that there are some names that ought to be on the list that are not on it. Hence I make this statement, hoping to get those who are qualified on the list, all who have registered and have paid poll tax in some other beat, all who have paid their poll tax, using sometimes their given name, and sometimes their initials.

In fact, if there is any difference in any of your poll tax receipts, if you will write me, or come to my office, I will take pleasure in getting your name on the list, if you are entitled to be on it.

If you have paid a poll tax in any other county, the law requres you to get a certificate from the Judge of Probate in that county and file with the Probate Judge here, in order to get on the poll list.

However, if you are not on the poll list, and are challenged on the day of election, as the law requires you can take the affidavit and vote.

L. H. Reynolds
Judge of Probate.

Card of Thanks.

I wish to thank the managers and Judges of the Chilton County Fair Association for their kindness in awarding the prize to me and will assure them that they could not have given it to any one who appreciates it any more than I do.

Respectfully,
Miss Norma Dentt.

Safe Blown Open at Talladega Springs.

On October 6, the stores of J. W. McKinnon, W. H. Mitchell, J. Jackson, and Cooper Bros. were opened by professional burglars, but all were small losses except J. W. McKinnon's having blown open the safe and securing about $50.00 in money.

The burglars used soap, powder, and nitroglycerine to open the safe.

It was first supposed they entered the store by means of skeleton keys, but later developments showed them to be prized open. Every door of the named stores were open when W. J. Woods, station agent made the discovery. The loss and damage estimated by Mr. McKinnon was about $175 00

Police was Coleman Cornett of Sylacauga is working on the case, but no clues have been discovered as to their identity.

The people believe them to have caught a north bound through freight in the night and made their escape, as the cash box of McKinnon's safe was found near the depot.

THE BOY KING HAS FLED TO GIBRALTAR

Royal Family of Portugal Finds an Asylum of Safety.

UNDER BRITISH PROTECTION

Rigid Censorship Still Prevents News in Lisbon From Being Sent Out, but It Is Reported That Republicans Control Capital.

That King Manuel is safely out of Portugal is disclosed by dispatches from Gibraltar, which say he landed there Thursday night in company with the queen mother, the dowager queen and the Duke of Oporto. The royal family of Portugal is, therefore, now under British protection.

It is reported that Mr. Manchedo has been proclaimed provisional president of Portugal.

KING MANUEL

A rigid censorship still prevents news in Lisbon from becoming known, but dispatches that have come through by way of the French frontier and direct, indicate that the fighting in the streets of the Portuguese capital was of longer duration and of a more severe nature than at first reported.

A delayed dispatch from Oporto gives brief details of demonstrations held there on the day after the rising occurred at Lisbon. Since then, however, word from Oporto indicated that quiet had been restored.

Notification has been sent to the foreign powers by the provisional government of the proclamation of the republic.

Received at Oporto.

The republican government has been definitely established at Oporto without a struggle. The populace, with unanimity, received the proclamation enthusiastically. The general commanding the local division of the troops obeyed the instructions of the provincial government.

900 Reported Killed.

A special to the Paris Temps from Madrid says that it is reported that an insurrection has occurred at Setubal, Portugal, where many troops are quartered. The infantry that had gone over to the revolutionists engaged the royalist cavalry. The casualties are estimated at 900.

TRAGEDY NEAR ALBANY.

Accidental Discharge of Gun Results in Death.

William E. Meyers, general manager of the Albany Grocery Company, and one of the most prominent business men of Albany, Ga., was killed four miles south of Albany, at Blue Springs, through the accidental discharge of his shotgun.

Myers and Thad Huckabee, a traveling salesman of the Albany Grocery Company, had been squirrel hunting, and stopped in a stor at Blue Spring when a heavy rain came up. They were travelling in an automobile, Myers driving. When they were ready to resume their trip, Myers took a seat in the machine, and Huckabee started to crank off the machine. Myers' gun lay across the seat, and it was discharged just as the engine began to move, the entire load of shot entering his left breast.

The machine was rushed to the city as fast as possible, but Myers died as he was being taken out at his apartments.

WORK OF BLACKHANDERS.

Girl Reported Killed and Father Wounded at Dallas, Texas.

Following the attempt of alleged "black handers" Sunday to shoot down Vito Gennousia, an Italian merchant, and the killing Monday evening of Caroline Bicanio, the 9-year-old daughter of Joe Bicanio, and the wounding of the latter, Italians in Dallas are in a panic.

The police are exerting every effort to run down the assassins.

Gennousia is in bed with a broken ankle caused by a pistol bullet. It is the second attempt on his life within a few months.

A shotgun and pistol were used on Bicanio and his little daughter by two unknown Italians, who escaped in a buggy.

The police have made two arrests, but have not identified the men.

GALE LASHED NORTH SEA.

Many Lives Reported Lost and Vessels Driven Ashore.

Many lives are reported lost in terrific gales which have lashed the North sea, hurling several wrecks at the coast, says a London dispatch.

The steamer Welbome foundered in the gale off Cromer. The engineers were drowned and several stokers were reported missing. The others on board were saved after a long fight against the sea. Dispatches to mercantile marine agencies reported that several other vessels, most of them fishing craft, are believed to have been lost.

Life saving stations at a number of points along the coast reported rescues. Disabled ships drifting helpless before the gale were also reported.

The tempest was one of high wind and driving rain and at points along the coast the beaches were strewn with wreckage.

Cromer is known in marine circles as a dangerous place. Treacherous tides and currents run off the promontories at that point and the sea beats with terrific force against the great sea wall.

MINERS ENTOMBED BY AN EXPLOSION

Starkville, Colo., Is Scene of Disastrous Occurrence.

BELIEVED MEN ARE DEAD

Rescue Parties Were Driven Back by Deadly Black Damp, Which Filled the Mine After the Explosion—Majority of the Entombed Men are Foreigners.

Entombed by an explosion in the Starkville mine of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, at least 52 men were the objects of heroic efforts of rescuers, who worked throughout Sunday trying to penetrate the black depths of the mine in the hope that some and probably all of the imprisoned miners might be rescued alive.

The presence of black damp, which almost always follows in the wake of coal mine explosions, made the work of rescuers extremely hazardous and time and again members of parties were overcome, necessitating returning to open air, in order that their lives could be saved.

A touching feature of the rescue work was the self-sacrifice and devotion to duty of James Wilson, superintendent of the Starkville mine, who left a sick bed to lead the men who bravely volunteered to face the deadly black damp that their entrapped comrades should be rescued dead or alive.

Superintendent Wilson finally succumbed to the exertion which taxed his weakened strength, and almost overcome by the insidious gases was forced to give up and take to his bed again.

According to a statement given out officially by the coroner, there are known to be in the mine twenty-eight Poles, three Russians, ten Americans, four Mexicans and one Servian.

UNCLE SAM'S CASH.

Government Receipts Exceed Disbursements by Tidy Sum.

Uncle Sam balanced his books and counted his cash for September and found that for the first time since the present fiscal year began on July 1 the government has taken in more money in a month than it has been obliged to pay out.

The cash drawer showed a balance of $1,460,808 over all disbursements. If the payments on the Panama canal work and the public debt could be excluded the surplus would be $3,456,572.

There was a deficit of nearly $4,000,000 for the corresponding month last year. To date the total deficit for the fiscal year is $15,910,060, as against a corresponding total deficit of $32,169,315 last year at this time.

The favorable showing can be attributed to larger receipts and smaller expenditures. Total receipts for the month were $55,983,578 and disbursements $52,527,006. The expenditures were a good $6,000,000 less than on August 1 and the receipts were around $1,000,000 greater. There were sharp advances in customs receipts bringing the revenue collected from that source alone this year more than $81,000,000.

BEES GET BUSY.

Infuriated Insects Delay Traffic on Burlington Road.

Seventy-five hives of infuriated bees played an important part in delaying traffic on the Burlington railroad following a collision between two freight trains in which 20 freight cars were destroyed and a large quantity of merchandise damaged.

The bees were in a car of household goods. They kept the wrecking crew at bay for several hours before they were smoked out.

S. D. Nelson, of Upland, Neb., the owner of the bees, who was traveling in the car with the goods, suffered the only injuries resulting from the wreck. He was severely stung before he could make his way out of the car.

BY FOREST FIRES MANY LIVES LOST

Millions of Dollars In Property Also Destroyed.

FIRES BURNING SINCE JULY

Death Roll, It is Estimated, Will Reach Three Hundred or More—Crazed With Grief and Fear, People Wander Woods Half Clad.

Beaudette, Spooner, Pitt and Graceton, Minn., were wiped off the map by a forest fire Sunday. The bodies of seventy-five settlers have been located and it is thought the death roll among the settlers will be upwards of 350.

Wagon loads of human bodies are being brought into the railway station at Beaudette.

It is reported that many settlers, crazed with grief at the loss of families and property, are roaming the woods and searching parties are constantly going out looking for the injured, the dead and the demented. One family of nine, one of seven and one of five were destroyed on Friday night.

Tornado of Fire.

A tornado of fire struck Beaudette and Spooner and within three minutes after the first alarm every building was ablaze, and within an hour they were heaps of ashes. The people of these two towns had just sufficient time to get out of their homes with what they had on their backs. They were loaded onto a passenger train that was standing at the depot and taken to Rainy River, Ont.

The whole country east of Warroad is on fire. Roosevelt, Swift, Williams and Cedar Spur are in great danger. All the women and children are being rapidly removed to places of safety.

Thousands Are Homeless.

The Canadian Northern railway has stationed trains at every station at the service of the people and is doing everything in its power to relieve the situation.

The people of Beaudette and Spooner and the settlers through the north control part of the state have lost everything. Five thousand are homeless, and the greater part of them absolutely destitute. Help must reach them in the next day or two, and that, in a substantial way, as the greater part of them are but half clad.

It will be impossible to get details and names of the dead and injured before tomorrow, and some of the dead will not be found until spring. It will be impossible to estimate the damages or casualties until later, but the pioneers of northern Minnesota, must have help.

$1,000,000 CAPITAL.

National Bank of Commerce Soon to Organize.

The National Bank of Commerce, with $1,000,000 capital and $200,000 surplus, is about to become the latest addition to Atlanta's big financial institutions.

Details of the organization have been practically completed.

The new bank, which will make the seventh among Atlanta's national banks, will begin business about January 1.

Three locations in the heart of the city are now under consideration as temporary quarters; the permanent home of the new bank will be in one of Atlanta's well-know sky-scrapers.

The organization committee is composed of about thirty-five prominent Atlanta and Georgia business men, chosen from among the more than 200 Georgians who have already subscribed to the bank's capital stock.

MANY PERSONS INJURED.

Spreading Rails Supposed to Have Wrecked Southern Train.

A dispatch from Asheville, N. C., says: Passenger train No. 18 on the Murphy division of the Southern railway, coming from Murphy to Asheville, was wrecked Saturday, twenty people being injured, two probably fatally. The cause of the wreck, near the station of Ella, was the derailment of three coaches which went over the embankment, piling up at the bottom in a mass of splintered wood, twisted iron and injured humanity.

The derailment of the three coaches is believed to have been caused by spreading of the rails.

A WICKED COUNTRY.

Missionary Appalled By the Conditions Existing in Alaska.

"In all my travels, since I started in my missionary work in 1871, covering more than 150,000 miles, this was my saddest trip. I never saw as much wickedness in all my life as I did in those northerly cities and mining camps."

This statement was made by J. Logan Sample, Presbyterian missionary, 77 years old, who has just returned from a year's visit among mining camps of Alaska, and is en route to his home in Pittsburg, says a Chicago, Ill., dispatch.

HENRY L. STIMSON.

Republican Nominee For the Governorship of New York.

ROOSEVELT IN ATLANTA.

He Spoke in Memory of Late Joel Candler Harris.

Before an audience of 7,500 Atlantans at the Auditorium-Armory, Saturday night, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt paid a hearty sincere and inspiring tribute to the memory of the late Joel Chandler Harris, and expressed the fervent hope that the movement for a monument to the memory of Uncle Remus would be a most gratifying success.

It was a splendid audience that faced the speaker when he reached his place on the platform. In point of size and social brilliancy, it was a most notable gathering. And the attention accorded the speaker and enthusiastic applause which greeted his words showed it to be one in entire sympathy with the cause for which Mr. Roosevelt had come south to uphold and give his support.

SPENT $75 AN HOUR.

Tale of Extravagant Living Told By Two Robbers.

A tale of extravagant living was told to the police by Caesario Munez, who, with Alfonso Garcia, is under arrest in San Francisco charged with robbing J. M. Sumaga, a millionaire mine owner, of the City of Mexico, of $50,000 in jewels and nearly $2,000 in cash. Munez says then Garcia proposed that they set about spending the money without delay. They did so. Munez estimates that during their waking hours they lived at the rate of $75 an hour.

The detectives recovered $583 in money and $1,000 in jewels.

Munez, they say, has promised to find the remainder of the loot.

WOUNDS OFFICERS, KILLS SELF.

Ocala, Fla., Man Barricades Self in House and Fights Troops.

While attempting to arrest Will Summerlin on a trivial charge, at Ocala, Fla., Deputy Sheriff Hutson was fatally injured and ex-Sheriff Cordon was seriously injured when the latter fired upon the officers and barricaded himself in his home.

The Ocala Rifles were called out and surrounded the house. After firing at everybody in sight, he placed the muzzle of the gun in his mouth and blew his head off.

TWENTY-FIVE KILLED.

Disastrous Collision Occurs on Road in Illinois.

Twenty-five persons were killed and from sixteen to twenty-five injured in a collision two miles north of Staunton.

The collision occurred between a local train northbound and an excursion train headed toward St. Louis, and loaded with passengers on their way to view the parade of the Veiled Prophets in St. Louis. The accident, according to present information, was due entirely to the disregard of orders by the crew of the local.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES. While excavating for the foundation of a building to be erected in Rampart street, New Orleans, workmen unearthed twenty-two coffins, together with a number of human bones not more than six feet below the surface. The old building, which was removed from the spot where the find was made, was said to have been erected over a century ago. It is thought, from the position in which the coffins were found, that the parties interred were all placed in one grave.

Threatened conflicts between circus bands and church choirs in New Orleans have been averted. Mayor Behrman, in response to a petition presented to him by protestant ministers of the city, has announced that he will prohibit circus parades during church hours.

Advices have been received in Atlanta from the head office of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, in New York, denying that any negotiation has been held looking to the absorption of the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic by the Louisville and Nashville. The information which is authoritative, corrects a rumor that was given some publicity. It is officially stated that there is no truth whatever in the report that the Louisville and Nashville is about to take over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic.

It is announced that Yale university's residuary share in the estate of the late Samuel H. Lyman, of New York, will probably exceed $700,000. His will hrs just been probated. The gifts to Yale rank as one of the largest college benefactions of the year.

A. J. Pharr, formerly of the Great Northern railway, has been appointed assistant comptroller of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, succeeding W. A. Colston, transferred to the legal department.

Of a score or more of insect problems being worked out by the United States bureau of entomology, the destruction of the boll weevil in the south and of the gypsy and the brown tail moth in New England have proved most difficult, according to Dr. L. O. Howadr, chief of the New Orleans division. Dr. Hunt expressed confidence in the successful outcome of the fight against the insect "if the farmers follow out the course advised by the government."

An all-Irish deputation, headed by the lord mayor of Dublin, Michael Doyle, called upon Postmaster General Hitchcock at Washington, D. C., to protest against the abandonment of Queenstown as a port of call for mail steamers of the Cunard Company on their eastward passage from New York. Mr. Hitchcock promised his callers to take up their case with the company and do what he could.

The first estimate of the season's gold output from Alaska, made from the Alaskan-Yukon Magazine, anticipates a reduction of more than $5,000,000 from last year's output of $20,500,000. The estimate is $15,000,000. The chief falling off is in the Fairbanks district. A considerable decrease from the Nome output is anticipated also.

In an interview, Lee Some, chief secretary for Prince Tsai Sung, of China, is credited by the Gazette-Times, of Pittsburg, Pa., with the announcement that a contract for two Chinese battleships to cost $15,000,000 has been awarded to Charles M Schwab, head of the Bethlehem, Pa., Steel Corporation. The statement was not confirmed.

In the United States court at Abingdon, Va., Austin S. Wilson, of Bristol, Tenn., a railway mail clerk, was convicted for the theft of mail matter last November, and was sentenced by Judge McDowell to one year in the federal prison at Atlanta.

A tabulation of the automobile statistics, compiled for the American Automobile Association, shows that the output of automobiles in the United States for the season of 1910 reached a total of approximately 88,000 cars, valued at about $240,000,000.

By an order issued by the postoffice department at Washington, land grant railroads hereafter will receive only $15.39 for each 2,000 pounds of mail carried in excess of $48,000 pounds. The old rate was $17.10.

The oldest candidate on any ticket in New York state this fall is Cyrus M. Crum, of Nyack. Although 82 years old, he will stump Rockland county for re-election as county clerk. He already enjoys the distingtion of being the oldest county clerk in the United States. He has held the office continuously for fifty-four years.

The eighth international prison congress ended at Washington with the ratification of the election of Sir Evelyn Ruggles Brise, K. C. B., as president, and the selection of London as the place for the next meeting in 1915.

Professor George W. Chase, aged 76, one of the most prominent citizens of Columbus and the best known musician in Georgia, died at his residence at Columbus, Ga., of paralysis. Professor Chase was the first president of the Chase Conservatory of Music.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES. Conditions of anarchy prevails in Honduras, cable dispatches state. Foreign interests are said to be in jeopardy and warships of leading governments are reported to have been asked for.

Lewis Botto, aged 80 years, one of the oldest river men in the service and widely known along the Mississippi river, is missing, and is thought to have been drowned, having fallen, it is believed, from the Kate Adams while on his way to Memphis, Tenn.

Jim Hatfield, a member of the famous Hatfield feudist family, was shot to death in a saloon at Jackson, Ky., by John Puckett, a kinsman. The men fell out over a game for drinks. Hatfield secured an old army bayonet hanging on the wall and stabbed Puckett through the left arm and breast. Puckett then drew his pistol and shot one time, instantly wounding his antagonist. Hatfield was a coal miner. He was a brother-in-law with the famous McCoy-Hatfield feud.

Circuit Judge L. P. Pryor, in instructing a special grand jury at Hazle, Ky., charged with the duty of investigating the recent night riding troubles, declared the citizens should break up night riding by banding themselves together to capture or shoot, if need, to kill the marauders. The first outbreak took place Friday night, when fifteen masked men visited three farmers and ordered them to pool their tobacco or suffer the loss of their barns and stock by fire.

For the first time since the capsizing of the barge of the battleship New Hampshire last Saturday night in New York harbor, as the result of which twenty or more of Uncle Sam's sailors lost their lives, North river began Thursday to give up its dead. Twelve bodies have been picked up, nearly all of them within half a mile of the scene of the accident. Among the number was the body of Norman T. Seals, of Columbus, Ga.

While trying to rescue other members of his family from his burning home, John H. Owens, a well-known insurance representative of Corning, Ark., was probably fatally burned. James Nixon, another occupant of the house, was seriously injured and Mrs. Nixon was injured by jumping from a second-story window. Six other persons who were in the house at the time narrowly escaped death or injury by jumping from windows. The house was totally destroyed.

It is reported that six hours after he had committed criminal assault upon Mrs. Hiram Stuckney, a prominent young woman of Covington county, Ala., Bush Withers, a negro "trusty" at the Henderson convict camp, was taken from the warden while en route to prison at Andalusia, tied to a stake and burned by an infuriated mob of 400 men.

Passengers on the Pullman car Rosemont attached to the Rock Island westbound passenger train which arrived at Pueblo, Colo., are reported to have been robbed of between $7,000 and $9,000 in cash, drafts, checks and jewels after leaving Chicago.

Information reached Opelousas, La., to the effect that the Washington State Bank, Washington, La., had been entered and robbed of $3,000. The safe was broken open in such a manner that the officials believe the work was that of an expert.

The Guarantee Bank and Trust Company, of Birmingham, Ala., a state bank with $100,000 capital, has been closed, and E. D. Smith, a well-known attorney, named as receiver by the chancery court of Jefferson county.

Word reached Hot Springs, Va., from Pig Run, Bath county, Va., of a double shooting in which Edward Hamilton shot and killed his wife and mortally wounded his mother-in-law, Mrs. Lowe. Domestic troubles are said to have caused the tragedy. Mace fled and has not yet been arrested.

Despondent because she believed she never would recover from pellagra, from which she suffered a long time, Mrs. J. H. Millwood, aged 40 years and the mother of ten children, committed suicide at Galnesville, Ga., by cutting her throat with a razor. Her body was found lying in a pool of blood by her eight-year-old son.

The trouble between the Federation of Master Cotton Spinners which resulted in the lockout of 130,000 operatives has been settled at Manchester, Eng., and the mills will be opened at once.

A special from Charleston, S. C., says burglars entered the office of Dr. Almar Smith and stole $700 worth of teeth. It is the first robbery of the kind ever recorded there.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES. Troops sent in pursuit of the notorious brigand, Zelim Kahn, in Caucasia, were ambushed by his band and a rural captain, three minor officers and 12 soldiers were killed and many others injured. Reinforcements have been sent against the outlaw but the absence of roads in the mountains hamper the operations. The depredations of Zelim have been on such an extended scale that the authorities were compelled to dispatch three companies of infantry and a company of Cossacks to run down the marauders.

M. Tabuteau made a splendid flight over the Pyranees from Spain to France. The aviator rose at the bastian and directing his course between the lofty peaks of Haya and Paisquibel, followed the valley of the river Bidassoa to the sea, over which he passed to Biarritz.

Professor Bombarda, the Republican deputy and anti-clerical who was shot by an army lieutenant, died in Lisbon, Portugal, says a dispatch from that city.

King Frederick, of Copenhagen, has received Booker T. Washington and conversed with him on the subject of the colored race. His majesty praised the American for a copy of his publications.

What Is U-Ra-Cura

A well established Southern remedy which has achieved a wide reputation for its numerous cures of Kidney, Bladder and Liver trouble. A harmless, purely vegetable and the greatest of all remedies for the cure of the above diseases. Under most of these troubles as a rule, soon pass away, to the great relief of the patient. All persons whose Kidneys or liver is affected, should go to the nearest drug gist and get a bottle of this superb remedy. Druggists sell it at 50c and $1.00 per bottle. If your druggist can't supply you with U-RA-CURA write to the Granger Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

50 Per Cent

"I have used less than one bottle of Cardui," writes Mrs. Gertrude Ward, of Rushville, Ind., "and am fifty per cent better than when I began taking it. "Before taking Cardui, I had been in poor health and trouble, for eight years. My general condition was one of misery. I also suffered with severe backache. But now I am greatly improved in health, and feel that I owe it to all my suffering friends."

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

The rare medicinal herbs of which Cardui is made are gathered by manufacturers direct from the fields, and are not found in any other medicine.

These ingredients are what make Cardui a female medicine and tonic. It has been in use for over 50 years. Cardui has no equal as a woman's medicine. The ladies like it because it is a purely vegetable medicine, so safe, so gentle, so sure in its results. They have faith in its curative powers. Hundreds of thousands of other ladies have written testimonials, which are constantly being published by Ladies' Advisory Dept., Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn., for special directions, and 64 page book, "Home Treatment for Women," sent free.

Jim Hatfield, a member of the [illegible] famous Hatfield feudist family, was shot to death in a saloon at [illegible]son, Ky., by John Puckett, a [illegible]mah. The men fell out over [illegible] for drinks. Hatfield secured an old army bayonet hanging on the wall and stabbed Puckett through the [illegible] arm and breast. Puckett then drew his pistol and shot one time, mortally wounding his antagonist. Hatfield was a coal miner. He was connected with the famous McCoy-Hatfield feud.

Circuit Judge L. P. Fryer, in instructing a special grand jury at Cadiz, Ky., charged with the duty of investigating the recent night riding troubles, declared the citizens should break up night riding by banding themselves together to capture or, if need, to kill the marauders. The last outbreak took place Friday night, when fifteen masked men visited three farmers and ordered them to pool their tobacco or suffer the loss of their barns and stock by fire.

For the first time since the swamping of the barge of the battleship New Hampshire last Saturday night in New York harbor, as the result of which twenty or more of Uncle Sam's sailors lost their lives, North river began Thursday to give up its dead. Twelve bodies have been picked up, nearly all of them within half a mile of the scene of the accident. Among the number was the body of Norman T. Seals, of Columbus, Ga.

While trying to rescue other members of his family from his burning home, John H. Owens, a well-known insurance representative of Conway, Ark., was probably fatally burned, James Nixon, another occupant of the house, was seriously injured and Mrs. Nixon was injured by jumping from a second story window. Six other persons who were in the house at the time narrowly escaped death or injury by jumping from windows. The house was totally destroyed.

It is reported that six hours after he had committed criminal assault upon Mrs. Hiram Stuckney, a prominent young woman of Covington county, Ala., Bush Withers, a negro "trusty" at the Henderson convict camp, was taken from the warden while en route to prison at Andalusia, tied to a stake and burned by an infuriated mob of 400 men.

Passengers on the Pullman car Rosemont attached to the Rock Island westbound passenger train that arrived at Pueblo, Colo., are reported to have been robbed of between $7,000 and $8,000 in cash, drafts, checks and jewels after leaving Chicago.

Information reached Opelousas, La., to the effect that the Washington State Bank, Washington, La., had been entered and robbed of $4,000. The safe was broken open in such a manner that the officials believe the work was that of an expert.

The Guarantee Bank and Trust Company, of Birmingham, Ala., a local bank with $100,000 capital, has been closed, and E. D. Smith, a well-known attorney, named as receiver by the chancery court of Jefferson county.

Word reached Hot Springs, Va., from Pig Run, Bath county, Va., of a double shooting in which Edward Mace shot and killed his wife and mortally wounded his mother-in-law, Mrs. Lear. Domestic troubles are said to have caused the tragedy. Mace fled and has not yet been arrested.

Despondent because she believed she never would recover from pellagra, from which she suffered a long time, Mrs. J. H. Millwood, aged 50 years and the mother of ten children, committed suicide at Gainesville, Ga., by cutting her throat with a razor. Her body was found lying in a pool of blood by her eight-year-old son.

The trouble between the Federation of Master Cotton Spinners which resulted in the lockout of 130,000 operatives has been settled at Manchester, Eng., and the mills will be opened at once.

A special from Charleston, S. C., says burglars entered the office of Dr. Almar Smith and stole $700 worth of teeth. It is the first robbery of the kind ever recorded there.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES. Troops sent in pursuit of the notorious brigand Zelim Kahn, in Circassia, were ambushed by his band and a rural captain, three minor officers and 12 soldiers were killed and many others injured. Reinforcements have been sent against the outlaw, but the absence of roads in the mountains hamper the operations. The depredations of Zelim have been on such an extended scale that the authorities were compelled to detail three companies of infantry and a company of Cossacks to run down the marauders.

M. Tabuteau made a splendid flight over the Pyrannes from Spain to France. The aviator rose at San Sebastian and directing his course between the lofty peaks of Haya and Patrquibel, followed the valley of the river Bidasson to the sea, over which he passed to Biarritz.

Professor Bombarda, the Republican deputy and anti-clerical who was shot by an army lieutenant, died in Lisbon, Portugal, says a dispatch from that city.

King Frederick, of Copenhagen, has received Booker T. Washington and conversed with him on the subject of the colored races. His majesty asked the American for a copy of some of his publications.

A special from Marseilles, France, says that it is rumored that there have been many deaths from cholera among the Italian immigrants in that city.

CHANGING NOTES OF BIRDS

Their Calls Vary Decidedly in the Changing Circumstances of Sunshine and Storm.

One of the most interesting features in the study of bird life is to note their varying calls in the changing circumstances of sunshine and storm.

The frequent snowfalls of the recent winter have often been heralded by the mournful "cluck-cluck" of the blackbirds as they flock around the doors, looking for the crumbs that custom has led them to expect. The mavis is mostly mute during a storm, and tells his tale of woe more by his ruffled feathers and drooping wing than by his voice. His note, however, is the first to welcome change to warmer weather.

The stormcock, by which is meant the blue felt or fieldfare, does not frequent the habitation of man, but there is no more certain sign of approach of severe weather than a flock of these birds flying southward. Their note is an ominous "chuck, chuck," and but for that they would often pass unnoticed overhead.

The skylark also passes south uttering a timid, twittering note, which will later give place to a gay burst of song. The starlings flock greedily to wherever food is to be found, be it in field or homestead. The first blink of warm sunshine, however, sees them perched on the eaves, vibrating their wings in a manner no other bird does and imitating with an air of intense satisfaction the call notes of a host of other birds.

The sparrows which robbed the farmer in the autumn flock townward in winter, and their cheerless twitter on the housetops bears faint resemblance to their noisy chatter in the cornfield. The robin seeks his dole with an air of quiet confidence and sometimes rewards us with a burst of song quite out of keeping with his surroundings. The blue tits have no voice to say they are hungry, though their actions show it, but their spring note may be heard in the wood lands, when they forsake our doors for the field and hedgerow.

TELEGRAPHED TO THE CAT

How a College Girl Let Her Mother Know She Was a Phi Beta Kappa.

A bright college girl who had won a membership in the Phi Beta Kappa society was so eager to announce the fact at home that she telegraphed the news. Fearing to alarm an overanxious mamma with the telegram she addressed it to the family cat. This royal personage bears with regal dignity the name of "Tiglath Pileser."

When this message was ticked off in the Western Union telegraph office the operator, not wishing to declare himself stumped, wrote it out bravely:

"Dear Mamma—I have captured a Phibetakapakey.

"To Tiglath Pileser Brown, 2127 Fifth avenue, New York City."

The messenger boy got into further trouble by inquiring of the dignified maid of color who opened the door if Italians lived there and receiving an indignant negative he retaliated: "Well, they must be a set of dippy freaks, anyway."

Kill Sick Fowls.

When a fowl becomes ill the best cure in many cases is to kill it. Only in trivial ailments or in the case of valuable birds which in all probability have been infected from outside, is an attempt at cure at all recommended, and even then when the disease is so defined that the treatment is fairly certain. By exercising good care, with all that it includes, correct sanitary conditions, good houses, well sunned and aired, proper food, exercise and cleanliness and prompt attention to birds who seem indisposed, will often prove effective in checking what otherwise might turn to be a very serious epidemic. Remove all sick fowls from the rest of the flock and see that all conditions are correct for preventing the spread of the disease to other members of the flock.

SIXTY VARIETIES OF PEAS

English Firm Shows Many Kinds of Vegetables—Small Proportion of Commercial Value.

London.—The average man, who enjoys a dish of green peas and knows the delicacy merely as "peas," will be astonished to hear that at the Royal Horticultural society's show at Holland park one well known firm alone showed 60 varieties of the vegetable.

Though the ordinary consumer does not know it, each variety possesses a different quality and taste, which the expert can detect.

A representative of one of the biggest firms of seed merchants in London said that the different varieties of peas were grown almost exclusively for show purposes.

"For commercial purposes," he said, "only the dwarf varieties are grown. The expense of 'sticking' the taller peas would run away with the grower's profit.

"The finer varieties of peas are grown for culinary purposes only by expert gardeners in private gardens. They are much finer in taste than the ordinary pea, but they have no commercial value, because the average purchaser will neither pay extra, nor, indeed, ask for a particular kind.

"At the moment, as a horticulturist, I should recommend the Battleship pea as the best, but the grower for the market is producing quite a different variety. He is growing a dwarf pea of 2 feet 6 inches or 3 feet at the most in height."

The manager of a popular restaurant, who was also consulted on the subject, said that the best quality of peas could be supplied to the average diner "if he would order or demand them. The ordinary diner out," he said, "does not realize that vegetables, like wines or cigars, vary in quality. He orders peas without any specification."

SPOONING IN PUBLIC PARKS

Adam and Eve Made Love in Eden, Therefore Their Children Should Do the Same.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Public courtship was upheld in the pulpit by Rev. G. L. Morril, pastor of the People's church. This was in answer to a popular appeal made to the city authorities to stop "spooning in the parks."

"Adam and Eve were placed in Eden to spoon, and their children have been at it ever since. Mingling winds, nodding flowers, hills that kiss the skies, creeks that mingle with rivers, and waves that clasp each other, are but a commentary on Solomon's words that 'two are better than one,'" said he.

"The rich have palatial parlors or private parks in which to make love, or they go to ocean or mountain by auto, train or ship, where they plan marriages that often end in divorce and death.

"The poor walk or go in street cars to parks and lakes, where they read books of nature and learn lessons of repose, cheer, humility, economy and beneficence, then meet and mate and make happy marriages and home. Lovemaking, which is proper in the home or parlor, is just as proper in a public park. What is wrong is wrong everywhere, in public or private."

WOULD DATE ALL HEN'S EGGS

Colorado Legislature to Be Asked to Enact Such Law at Next Regular Session.

Denver, Col.—At the next regular session of the state legislature a bill will be introduced to compel farmers to stamp eggs offered for sale with their names and the dates they are laid. The bill will be introduced by Harvey E. Garman from Denver county.

The object of the law, Mr. Garman says, is to enable the purchaser to tell just how fresh an egg is when he buys it. This will be a public benefaction, he thinks, as most of the people who come to Colorado for their health depend upon fresh eggs.

"It is not an easy thing to purchase eggs that are fresh," said Mr. Garman the other day, commenting on the proposed law. "And the consumptive seeking health knows this better than anyone else. The grocer always has on hand what he calls 'fresh' eggs, 'seconds' and 'cracks,' and some grocers have been known to keep in stock eggs which on their books are marked 'rots.' The eggs marked 'fresh' mean nothing more than that the eggs are the freshest the grocer happens to have on hand."

TRAP 200 CATS IN A MARKET

Vicious Animals Fight Captors, But Are Put Into Baskets for Annihilation.

New York.—Yowling, spitting, scratching and biting, 200 cats were cornered, one by one, the other night in the old Washington market and dumped into baskets, to be disposed of by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Agents of the society, policemen, watchmen, butchers, fishmongers, green grocers and all the little world of the market joined in a midnight hunt that, for activity and noise, outdid anything ever chronicled from Africa.

For years the cats, at first encouraged to keep down the rats, had run wild and increased in garrets and cellars until they became an intolerable pest. The market is now in process of renovation.

50 Per Cent Better

"I have used less than one bottle of Cardui," writes Mrs. Gertrude Ward, of Rushville, Neb., "and am feeling fifty per cent better than when I began taking it.

"Before taking Cardui, I had suffered with female trouble, for eight years. My greatest trouble was irregularity. I also suffered with severe pains, every month, but now I am greatly improved and will recommend Cardui to all my suffering friends."

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

The rare medicinal herbs of Cardui are imported by the manufacturers direct from Europe and are not to be found in any other medicine.

These ingredients are what give Cardui its superiority, as a female medicine and tonic, over any other medicine.

For over 50 years Cardui has been the favorite woman's medicine. The ladies like it, because it is so easy to take, so gentle, so safe, so reliable in its results, and they have faith in its curative tonic powers, because of the thousands of other ladies it has helped. Try it today.

NOTICE to SUBSCRIBERS.

To all subscribers who are a year or more in arrears a statement will be mailed and we trust will be promptly attended to. Those subscribers who have already received a statement will receive The Banner this week, and after this week it will be discontinued, and the account placed in the hands of a collector.

We cannot help ourselves, the rules of the post office are not to be trifled with.

This is number one of volume nineteen of The Banner, and we are endeavoring to reach every home in the county with a sample copy. 2200 copies are being issued this week. We will be pleased to receive your subscription if you are not already on our list.

On Monday Hon. Charles Scott, candidate for governor on the progressive Republican ticket, made an address to the voters at the court house. If we were not sure that Emmett O'Neal will be our next governor, we could find it in our heart to support Mr. Scott.

Hon. W. F. Aldrich, former congressman from this district, also made a speech. The audience was not very large, few being aware of their coming here.

Mr. Scott also spoke at Jemison on Tuesday to a fair sized audience, his speech being well received.

THE SITUATION.

With this issue The Banner commences the nineteenth year of its existence—for 18 years it has, without missing a single issue, brought to the people of Chilton County a record of the events happening around them, rejoiced with them in their gladness, sorrowed with them in their grief, and, we trust, has cheered them in their hours of gloom.

With pride we have noted the progress of the county, excelled by none of her sister counties, her growth in population and wealth, her increasing manufactures, the great advance in her educational institutions, the general prosperity of her people, and everything that tends to the welfare of an enlightened citizenship.

Through good times and hard times, the Banner has journeyed with the good people of Chilton; we have seen and suffered with the farmers in the time of 4c cotton, and exult with them in the present prospects of a remunerative price for their toil and labor. Formerly known as one of the poorest counties in the state, Chilton is now acknowledged as one of the best communities in the commonwealth.

New towns and communities have arisen in this time, notably the thriving city of Thorsby, the prosperous town of Ridervilie, the increasing burg of Mt. Creek, and the splendid home for Confederate soldiers nearby. Jemison has made, and continues to make, great progress, and is now an incorporated city, growing in wealth and importance. Maplesville and Stanton are, likewise, moving forward, while beautiful Verbena retains all of its old time attractiveness. Several other communities have come into existence, all linked together in one harmonious whole by the extension of the rural free delivery service, and all of the numerous telephone lines which bring neighbors, near and far, closer together.

The western part of the county has been opened up by a new line of railroad, the Mobile and Ohio, bringing it in close touch with the capital city and with Tuscaloosa.

From an overgrown village Clanton has developed into a substantial city with well paved streets, electric lights and other modern conveniences, and is steadily improving.

Churches have increased in number and membership, and many neighborhoods now possess houses of worship, neat and elegant, the pride of their members, and the hope of the future. Schools have multiplied, and very few of the chileren have to go very far to the house of learning, while the worthy pedagogues are better enabled to teach the young idea in the modern system of acquiring knowledge. In every direction, progress is noticable, and with the cry, "So far good, but still on to better things."

And all this progress has been acomplished under the rule of the people. At the outset, when the Banner began its existence, the good people of Chilton had declared themselves in favor of the Populist principles, and the administration was placed in the hands of disciples of that party, and most worthily were the affairs of the county administered.

With the demise of the Populist party, a change was inevitable—some went one way, and some the other—some went to the Democrats, and others espoused the cause of the Republican party.

At the last general election of 6 years ago, the Republicans were the victors, electing every one of the county officers, with one exception, the County Treasurer, and while the Banner has watched from an adverse standpoint the career of the Republican officials, we are bound to acknowledge that the affairs of the county have been conducted in a thorough, honest, business-like manner, as is evidenced by the prosperous condition of the county, the contented disposition of our people, and the general welfare of all within our borders.

The Banner has not the slightest desire to dictate to the voters of Chilton—that which suits you will also suit us—but looked at from an impartial point of view, we ask any man to consider for himself what is the best thing to do, and then vote accordingly.

Judge Reynolds, a child of Chilton, a youth of home-growth, a man of the people, has proven himself an efficient and capable manager of public affairs,—is it worth while to make a change, or give him another term? It is up to the voters to decide.

So far as the State is concerned we believe that Mr. Emmett O'Neal, and the Democratic nominees, will be duly elected, but the county Democratic ticket has very slight prospects of success, in spite of the hysterical shriekings of any man that we are going to win.

The days of blind fidelity to party are about over—William Jennings Bryan will not support the Democratic nominee for governor of his state: Tom Watson refuses to support the Democratic nominee for governor of Georgia; Democrats of Tennessee decline to accept the regular nominees. There are some of the Democratic nominees we CAN NOT support,—there are some Republicans we WILL NOT support. The hope of the country is the independent voter.

Refusing to be influenced by party prejudice, and viewing the situation along broad lines of patriotism, we believe that the best interests of the people of Chilton county will be subserved by re-electing Judge Reynolds, and the Banner will give him its hearty and active support.

JUDGE REYNOLDS AND THE DEMOCRATIC SECRETARY

Clanton, Ala., Oct. 10, 1910

Editor Banner:—Below, will be found the correspondence between Mr. F. M. Wood, secretary, of the Democratic Campaign Committee of this county, which I ask that you publish. This correspondence fully explains itself, and needs no comment from me.

L. H. REYNOLDS.

Letter No. 1. Sept. 8, 1910

Hon. L. H. Reynolds,
Clanton, Ala.

Dear Sir:—Under the law of Alabama, it becomes the duty of the Probate Judge, the Sheriff, and the Clerk of the Circuit Court to appoint the several inspectors, clerks and returning officers for the holding of an election. But the law provides that when any one of these three is a candidate, then the Probate Judge shall notify the Register in Chancery, and he shall appoint a third member of the board.

You are a candidate for re-election to the Probate Judgeship, and the Register in Chancery is a candidate for Circuit Clerk, and it may be that you construe the law in such a manner asto exclude the Register from the making the appointment of the third member of the board. In this event, the law provides that the Governor should be notified.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding. I will greatly appreciate it if you will give me your construction of the law in this matter.

This, you understand, is no political move, but simply for the protection of both parties in the holding of the election. See Sections 349-50-51, Political Code 1907.

Thanking you for an immediate reply, I beg to remain,

Yours truly,
F. M. WOOD, Sec.

Letter No. 2. Sept. 14, 1910

Hon. F. M. Wood, Sec.
Clanton, Ala.

Dear Sir:—Just as soon as the nominations are filled, I will take up the matter you refer to in your letter of Sept. 8–10.

I am leaving for French Lick Springs today. Respectfully,
L. H. REYNOLDS.

Letter No. 3. Oct. 5, 1910

Hon. L. H. Reynolds,
Clanton, Ala.

Dear Sir:—You promised me just before leaving for Indiana, that you would give me some reply with reference to Sec. 349 of the political Code. (Page 309.)

Up to this time, I have heard nothing from you, and as the time is now growing short, I will thank you to let me hear from you in reference to the matter.

Yours truly,
F. M. WOOD, Sec't'y.

Letter No. 4. Oct. 6, 1910

Mr. F. M. Wood, Sec't'y.
Clanton Ala.

Dear Sir:—I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th inst., and contents fully noted.

In your letter of Sept. 8th, you refer to Sections 349-51 of Code of Alabama, and say, "I will greatly appreciate it if you will will give me your construction of the law in the matter."

Neither of the sections referred to appear complicated or intricate, but are in my opinion, unusually clear and pointed.

In the matter referred to, it will be my pleasure and duty to follow the statutes in such cases made and provided.

Yours very respectfully,
L. H. REYNOLDS.

Letter No. 5. Oct. 8, 1910

Hon. L. H. Reynolds.
Clanton, Ala.

Dear Sir:—I have your letter of the 6th inst., which neither answers mine, nor states your position, but since you seem somewhat reluctant about the matter, I guess I can turn elsewhere for the information desired.

Of course you will have no objection to my letter and your own appearing in print.

Yours truly,
F. M. WOOD, Sect'y.

Oct. 10, 1910

Mr. F. M. Wood, Sect'y.
Clanton, Ala.

Dear Sir:—I have your letter of 8th inst. and note that you say that my letter of the 6th inst. neither answers your letter of 5th inst. nor states my position. You also say that "guess I can turn elsewhere for the information desired." And further state "of course you will have no objection to my and your letter appearing in print."

For one time you are right, I have no objection whatever to your printing the letters, and presume that your sense of fairness and justice will cause you to publish the entire correspondence. The exalted position occupied by you when you first arrived in Chilton—an expounder of truth and justice—impresses me that you will do this.

I know of no law, either written or unwritten, that requires this office to run a kindergarten law school for your special benefit. The acts and records of this office are always open to the general public, and if by an inspection thereof you are able to obtain the much desired "construction of the law"—I shall be pleased.

While I am always glad to receive suggestions from any citizen in the conducting of the affairs of this office, and while I have no objection or complaint whatever—absolutely none—to the Democratic party having turned over to you the entire management of its county campaign—hoofs, horns and all, yet I must make it clear to you that I am with the consent of the majority of the voters of this county, running this office to the best of my ability. And even though the management of the Democratic party headquarters and all has been delivered to you it gives you no right to the management of the affairs of the Probate office of Chilton county.

Respectfully,
L. H. REYNOLDS.

Every man in the county, or woman either, who served as a witness at court, prior at the time that Judge Reynolds assumed control of the probate office, knows that their certificates were worth only about 50c in the dollar, and the reason was that there was no money with which to pay them. They also know that such is not the case now, but their certificates are worth 100 cents in the dollar, and as soon as they get the certificate, they can walk right over to my office and get the money. We have about $5,000 in general fund, and there are several hundred dollars to the credit of the fine and forfeture fund, and we are just in the beginning of another tax year, which of course, will bring an abundance of money into the treasury. Why this difference in the fine and forfeture fund of to day, and that of what it was when Judge Reynolds assumed control? There is but one answer, and that is, —it is due to the superior business management of Judge Reynolds of this county court and conducts, over that of his predecessors. It can not be said that the Circuit court contributes materially to the fine and forfeiture fund, and it is safe to say that the Circuit draws out of the treasurer more than three dollars for each one that it puts into the treasury. Our people can point with pride to the management of our county's affairs by the present administration.

I have been waiting and watching for the Democrats to offer some reason or argument why the county should be turned over to them, but I have not heard of a single change they would make, or a single improvement that they would bring about. They simply realize that our county's administration is absolutely above criticism, and that they can not better it,—consequently, they have resorted to misrepresentations, vituperations, and appeals to prejudice. The demacratic paper, the Clanton Press, is continually hollering "pie", and charging the Republicans of a lot of "pie hunters". If there ever was a disgruntled, discredited, bunch on earth, who are hungry and starving for "pie," it is that little crown of Clanton Democrats, who have taken over the Democratic party, body and soul, —but if by "pie," they mean getting in control of the offices of this county, then I am sure that their political stomachs will be put as an aching void after the election.

Then the Clanton Press has something to say about Judge Reynolds being the "boss". He is a boss in one respect, and that is he bosses the office to which the people of this county have honored him by election, and his "bossing" of that job has been so satisfactorly, that they are going to put him back there by an over-whelming, majority. But the moment that Judge Reynolds, or any of the officers, would begin to cater to and be "bossed" by the little Clanton Press, or any other of the leaders of the Democratic party, that moment, the people of this county would repudiate them.

I am satisfied that our entire ticket will be elected, but when it comes to the heads of the two respective parties, can any man say that Judge Reynolds is not better qualified to fill the office, that Mr. Deason? Reynolds went into the office without any experience, whatever, but has given us the best administration the county has every had, and it stands to reason that, with the experience he now has, he will give us a still greater one, if elected.

In the conclusion, I can say that I have kept in touch with this campaign, I am familiar with the sentiments of the people in each section of our county, and never before, since I have been having anything to do with politics, have I known our people to be so harmonious, so united. We grow wiser in each election, and each succeeding one finds us harder to fool by the Democrats. I am confident that all of our people, with the numerous additions to our party which I feel confident we will have, will go out to the polls in November and elect our ticket by the biggest majority ever known.

Faithfully yours,
J. WILEY LITTLEJOHN.

To Keep Milk and Butter.

Place butter in a bowl or small jar and cover with a saucer; set this and the bottle of milk in a rather deep pan and pour in enough cold water to half fill the pan, then fold a linen towel or piece of tablecloth twice, dip in cold water, and spread dripping wet over the bottle and bowl, with the edges of cloth in the water. Set the pan where the air can circulate. The milk will keep sweet all day and the butter will be nice when wanted even in the hottest weather.

ELEVEN TONS OF DIAMONDS

Output of the Kimberly Mines in Thirty-nine Years—Discovery of the Record Gem.

The day's work at the mine was over and Frederick Wells, the surface manager, was making his usual rounds. Glancing along one side of the deep excavation his eye suddenly caught the gleam of a brilliant object far up the bank. He lost no time in climbing up to the spot where he had noted the glint of light. He had not been mistaken; it was a brilliant crystal. He tried to pull it out with his fingers and as this proved impossible he sought to pry it out with the blade of his penknife. To his surprise the blade of the knife broke without causing the stone to yield. Then he knew it was a large stone. So large and brilliant was the stone that he feared he was either dreaming or was insane.

Determined to test the stone on the spot before proceeding further, Wells rubbed off the dirt from one of its faces with his fingers and soon convinced himself that it was not a lump of glass, but a diamond, apparently of exceptional whiteness and purity. He finally succeeded in prying out the stone and bore it away with him to the office of the mine. Here it was cleaned and, to the astonishment of all, was found to have a weight of 302¾ carats, more than three times that of any other diamond that had been discovered. Before many hours passed the telegraph carried tidings to all parts of the world that the greatest diamond of this age or any other age had been brought to light.

It was thirty-nine years, July 13, 1871, since the discovery of diamonds in South Africa. Do you know how these great mines were discovered? the Christian Herald asks. A trader stopping over night with a Dutch farmer saw the children playing with bright marbles. The trader took the white stones to Capetown and found they were diamonds of wonderful beauty and great value. In these thirty-nine years about eleven tons of diamonds have been taken from the Kimberly mines. Think of eleven tons of diamonds, like eleven tons of coal, being dumped into your cellar!

Another Panacea.

A physician of some note has just announced another panacea for all the ills humanity is heir to. It consists simply of sunshine. It must, however, fall upon the bare skin. Among the afflictions which it is said to have cured by this means are tubercular ulcerations, skin diseases, old cuts and sores and obesity. "An abdomen triple plated with adipose tissue will melt like snow under the caresses of the sun," it is declared. "To take a sun bath," the doctor explains, "it suffices simply to stretch one's self completely unclothed in the direct rays of the sun, taking care always to protect the head, and above all the back of the neck. There must be no intermediary between the skin and the sunlight, for the chemical power of the solar rays is completely nullified by clothing and by glass. The inclination of the rays is also important; when they fall perpendicularly their action is much greater; oblique rays glance, on the contrary, from the surface of the skin, and are without effect."

DIZZINESS—DO YOU HAVE IT?

This is caused by the bile being reabsorbed into the circulation. To get rid of this trouble it is necessary to use a good liver medicine to eliminate the surplus bile from the system. St. Joseph's Liver Regulator (either liquid or powders) does this to perfection. Use it for all bilious troubles and you will soon feel better. Accept no substitute, but insist on having the genuine St. Joseph's Liver Regulator. Druggists and dealers sell it, liquid, 50c a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25c a box, five boxes for a dollar. Upchurch Drug Co.

Mt. Nebo.

There will be singing at this place the Fourth Sunday evening at 1:30. Let us all be sure and be on time, and bring our books. Everybody is invited to come, we wish to see a large crowd out. Prof. James Franklin is going to be with us and direct the music, all that are present I am sure will enjoy it, for Prof. Franklin is certainly a good singer. With best wishes to all I shall not detain the readers any further.

A LOVER OF MUSIC.

Forced to leave home.

Every year a large number of poor sufferers whose lungs are sore and racked with coughs are urged to go to another climate. But this is costly and not always sure. There is a better way. Let Dr. King's new Discovery cure you at home. "It cured me of lung trouble," writes W. R. Nelson, of Calamine, Ark., "when all else failed and I gained 47 pounds in weight. It's surely the king of all coughs and lung cures." Thousands owe their lives and health to it. Its positively guaranteed for Coughs, Colds, La Grippe, Asthma, Croup—all Throat and Lung troubles. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free at Upchurch Drug Co.

Hunting for a Spectacle Peddler or Fakir

Last Wednesday morning one of Preacher Browns' sons from west Chilton came into Dr. Higgins office at Clanton enquiring if he had seen or knew anything of a spectacle peddler whose supposed name was Summerland. Dr. Higgins was unable to give any information as to whereabouts of the "Eye glass fakir." It stated by Mr. Brown that the supposed Optican had fitted several pairs of glasses in his section of the county and that the pedler inordered to fake the people, stated that he would make Clanton his headquarters and that if any of the glasses which he had fitted failed to give entire satisfaction, he would be in his office at Clanton and would make good all troubles that the glasses might give etc. Dr. Higgins was unable to give information, but stated to Mr. Brown that he had spent several hundred dollars in preparing himself at a reputable college for the work of fitting eye glasses and other optical work, and had also gone to an expense of several hundred dollars in fitting up a neat optical office in Clanton, and charged only a reasonable amount for the work done by him; the usual charges ranging from five to fifteen dollars, but in some instances as low as three dollars, and in every instance satisfaction is guaranteed. And he wishes to say further that if the people of Chilton and adjoining Counties desire to spend their money with spectacle fakirs, besides running the risk of ruining their eye sight, when they have a graduated optican within close call of them, he desires to be excused from all blame in the matter. He further asks that the people of Chilton county be more careful in matters concerning such a delecate organ as the human eye, and when requiring the service of any one, that they will consult with those who have made a special study of that particular branch of science.

Dr. Higgins has had two parties to call recently, one of them paid $5.00 and the other $8.00 for a pair of pedler's glasses which were absolutely worthless to the purchaser and tended to do great harm.

We extend our hearty congratulations to Dr. Higgins for his efforts in behalf of those who suffer with their eyes and suggest to those in Chilton and adjoining counties that when in need of an eye specialist they consult with him.

"IT BEATS ALL"

This is quoted from a letter of M. Stockwell, Hannibal, Mo. "I recently used Foley's Honey and Tar for the first time. To say I am pleased does not half express my feelings. It beats all the remedies I ever used. I contracted a bad cold was threatened with pneumonia. The first doses gave great relief and one bottle completely cured me." Contains no opiates. Upchurch Drug co.

A Constipation Remedy Free

There is no action of your daily life of greater importance than to see that your bowels move. They should move at least once a day naturally, and by that is meant without any help. If they do not move at least once a day you can consider yourself constipated and it is time you did something about it.

You will be glad to know there is a way out of the difficulty. Lemuel Landerdale, an old soldier at Quincy, Ill., Elmer McMillan, of Speed, Mo., Mrs. Monahan, of Stonewall, Miss., and many others were so you are now. But one day they awoke to the fact that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin was curing their friends, so they bought it too and it cured them. Today they are loud in praise of it.

What Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin did for them it should do for you. Surely your constipation is no worse than theirs, one of whom had it since '61. It only remains for you to realize that salts are of but temporary good, and what you want is a permanent cure; that purgative tablets, cathartic pills and such violent things make a great show of doing something, but do nothing that is lasting. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a scientific preparation, a laxative-tonic, a mild syrupy liquid that contains ingredients that not only cure the constipation, but tone the intestinal muscles so that they learn again to work without help. A bottle can be bought of any druggist for the small price of 50 cents, and there is a dollar size for families who have already found out its wonderful value in stomach, liver and bowel troubles, in old or young.

Send your name and address to the doctor and a free trial bottle will be sent you so that you can test it before buying.

A Historic English Church.

The historic Church of St. George, Esher, England, which has been closed for public worship for half a century, is in such a bad state of repair that unless it is restored at once it will inevitably go to ruin. Built in the time of Henry VIII, it has a great many royal and historical associations. It was attended by Queen Victoria, Princess Charlotte, the first Duke of Newcastle and his brother, Henry Pelham, the leaders of the well-known Pelham Ministry; Edward Gibbon, the historian; Jane and Anna Maria Porter, the novelists, and many other persons of interest. It has also associations with Sir Francis Drake, who is said to have presented one of the bells. The late King Edward showed considerable personal interest in the building, and was a large subscriber to the funds.

Rickshaws for Vancouver.

The sight of business men going to and from places of business and of women making their shopping rounds in the Japanese rickshaw may not be a novel one in this city if the plans of a local company for importing a number of the rickshaws here for hire materialize. There are a number of trained rickshaw coolies in the local Japanese district, and it is the intention of the promoters of the company to have these men, clad in suitable uniforms, for their work.—Vancouver Letter to the Portland Oregonian.

Reaching the Top

in any calling of life, demands a vigorous body and a keen brain. Without health there is no success. But Electric Bitters is the greatest Health Builder the world has ever known. It compels perfect action of stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels, purifies and enriches the blood, tones and invigorates the whole system and enables you to stand the wear and tear of your daily work. "After months of suffering from Kidney Trouble," writes W. M. Sherman, of Cushing, Me., "three bottles of Electric Bitters made me feel like a new man." 50c at Upchurch Drug co.

THINK OF

Mexican Mustang Liniment

AND WHAT IT MEANS TO YOU.

Relief from pain that might otherwise cause you hours of agony.

Tired out muscles eased up and made ready for another day's work.

Lameness in the back and shoulders promptly cured and stiff joints limbered up.

Burns, Scalds, Cuts and Mashes rendered painless and quickly healed.

Rheumatism, Lumbago and Sciatica robbed of their anguish and banished forever.

Ulcers, Old Sores and Open Wounds healed promptly and permanently.

The first application of Mexican Mustang Liniment subdues the pain but it continues its work until every quivering nerve is soothed and quieted.

The great penetrating power of this famous remedy enables it to do this quickly and positively.

In all cases of Sprains, Bruises or Lameness, Mexican Mustang Liniment should be rubbed in persistently.

The antiseptic qualities of this old reliable household remedy make it safe and sure.

THE LAST JUDGMENT

Sunday School Lesson for Oct. 16, 1910

Specially Arranged for This Paper

LESSON TEXT.—Matthew 25: 31-46. Read verses 34-36.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.—Matt. 25:40.

TIME.—Tuesday, April 4, A. D. 30. The same day as our last two lessons.

PLACE.—On the Mount of Olives.

Suggestion and Practical Thought.

That there is a day of judgment is a fact, but it is difficult, and not important, to decide the exact nature or time of the coming of the Lord to judgment. It is said in Matt. 24:34 that "this generation shall not pass away till all these things be accomplished," and it is repeated in Mark 13:30, Luke 21:32, and again in Matt. 16:28, "there are some of them that stand here, which shall in no wise taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom," when "the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels, and then shall he render unto every man according to his deeds."

This must refer to the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the old dispensation or age, and the coming of the gospel dispensation. But it does not exclude the great and final coming and judgment day at the end of that age.

There is really a judgment day at every great crisis of the nation or of our lives, at death, at the coming of rewards or punishments for our actions, at every time of decision. For instance, we have seen within the last few years many persons who have been for years growing rich by graft and dishonesty and have suddenly met their judgment day, while others have been reaping the rewards of faithful service. So young men who have been going on in course of drinking and sinning for a long time, suddenly find themselves drunkards, in ill health, incapacitated for their best work. They have been brought up at a judgment day; while those who have resisted temptation and been faithful and true are also reaping their rewards.

Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand. The sheep, the righteous. Come. Draw near to your Elder Brother, to your Father, to your home, for here is the place for you. Ye blessed of my Father means exactly "my Father's blessed ones," denoting not simply that they have been blessed by him, but that they are his. Blessings innumerable had come to them through their being willing to become his children and accept the kind of blessings he had to bestow, such as his loving care, the bestowal of the Holy Spirit, the experiences of the gospel, the renewal of the heart, sanctification by the Spirit, the power to become children and heirs of God, the gifts and fruits of the Spirit, eternal life, the favor of God, the rest in the everlasting arms, the pavilion under the shadow of his wings.

Receive not by purchase, or by labors, but by becoming children of God, like God, and therefore heirs—heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Every one must be the child of him whose child he is. He that is a child of sin is an heir of sin; a child of the devil inherits from the devil; a child of goodness and of God inherits from God. The kingdom of heaven, the kingdom which consists in righteousness, peace, joy in the Holy Ghost (Rom. 14:17), in which saints reign over infinite forces and powers to make them minister to happiness and good: "All things are yours," because "ye are Christ's."

To have done it unto me, the poor and needy and sick, and all the classes whom Jesus helped in Palestine are his representatives now on earth. The only visible expression of our love to him is through them. What a privilege this is to show our love to our Master. How it enriches our life if we keep in mind that we are not only helping the needy, but expressing our love to our Master.

The unconsciousness of the righteous shows that their virtues were sincere and true. Whosoever does good deeds for the sake of the reward receives no reward, and will obtain none, for the soul of goodness is left out of such deeds.

The cause of the doom was the refusal to do the deeds that belong to the heavenly kingdom and to be ruled by its motives. They refused to be fit for heaven. They decided to live such lives. The plan of their lives was such that all the evils of society—graft, child labor, poverty, degradation, crime, oppression, drunkenness, disease, could go on without any effort on their part to put an end to them.

The punishment is like the sin: it is heaven and joy and God and the companionship of the good from our sins, and adds the everlasting fire. This is a warning of love. It is a statement of the fact that by the very nature of things sin leads to ruin, and righteousness to heaven.

No evil can enter heaven, for if it did heaven would not be heaven any more.

President Eliot of Harvard, in an address to medical men, said that sincere people might refuse to believe in a future hell, it was the doctor's business to show young men that they perverted in certain vices they would find a hell in this life.

Let us for each of us to make the break and start on the way which we know where we wish to go and live by.

The law of the harvest is "to reap more than you sow."

LITTLE MISS SMITH ARRIVES

"Popper" Tells All About His First Evening With the Wonderful New Baby.

Dear Aunt Eleanor:

Little Miss Smith (weight 10 pounds) arrived at the Methodist hospital at 9 last evening.

So far as human intelligence can foresee Margaret and the little one are both in apple pie order. And, speaking from a purely unprejudiced viewpoint, she is really the most remarkable baby, in many respects, you ever saw.

And, believe me or not, when she was about half an hour old she looked up at me and grinned. Margaret says this is all bosh, but I guess I've been on earth long enough to know when a lady smiles at me, whether she is smiling at me or not. And I like to believe that she actually recognized her "popper" and to take it as an omen that we are destined to become really chummy.

Hoping that you will drop in on us soon, I remain, sincerely, Eb.

P. S.—In my haste I may have neglected to mention the fact that she weighs 10 pounds, and is really something out of the ordinary.

P. P. S.—Say, do you think those hospital nurses are the wise gazabos they are cracked up to be? Last night when I first saw baby she started in to cry a little, and I wanted to pacify her with some nice chocolates, and would you believe those buttinskys wouldn't let me? I'm going up to the hospital tonight with a sack of butterscotch and you bet I'll find out whether I'm to have any voice in the rearing of my own daughter (weight ten pounds).

P. P. P. S.—Margaret and I had quite a little argument last night about baby. She's set on Wellesley and I am equally prejudiced in favor of Vassar. Present indications, however, point to a compromise in favor of Wellesley.

WORLD TAKES CARE OF ITSELF

Real Philosopher Does Not Worry Much Over the Terrible Plight of the Future.

One may ardently advocate the conservation of natural resources without losing rest in worrying about what we shall do for crosstie when all forests are destroyed, or for warmth when coal is exhausted. It is really unwise to get hysterical over such troubles, so long as they are under contract for future delivery. None of us should be deficient in philosophy. The real philosopher is he who, having a sure tip that things are coming his way, smiles upon adversity with indulgence.

It is just as well to consider that by the time crosstie material quits growing all the Pullmans will be in the air with all the berths upper, and that a thousand years from now, if the scarcity of coal runs the price up to $1,000 a ton, some miserable sinners of the present may have cause to rejoice in the prospect of lower temperatures.

The world is going to take care of itself and the guess that the little earth will be rocking along on schedule time a hundred thousand years hence is just as good as any other. Why, therefore, worry? Why attempt to solve the puzzle of navigating the future of dreadnoughts too big for the sea; leave that to future Hobsons.

If the safe and sane people will just make up their minds to cultivate philosophy, and to practise it, many disturbing factors would be eliminated. There is nothing like determining that it will work out all right; it always does.

How Gypsies Crossed the Connecticut.

Tuesday was gypsies' day and controlled the workings of the ferryboat Colonial at the Connecticut river all afternoon. Sixteen wagons loaded with men, women and children blocked the road to the boat, while one of the band was dickering with Purser Joe Bates for reduced rates, which he would not grant. Automobile parties sizing up the situation and knowing how long it would take to convey the bunch over bought out their rights, paying one, two and three dollars, through which means they made enough money to pay all expenses and a large amount to the good. It was nine o'clock p. m. before the last one departed with the man who did the collecting and handled the cash, taking along with him the leader, who stood at his post with the purser still dickering for reduced rates. They were seen counting the cash and had left a good surplus after crossing the river.—Old Saybrook correspondence New

BACKS INDIAN LORE

Chief Census Agent Tells of Condition in Fairbank's District.

Alaskan Report Declares Redskins of Far North Count Only by Sun and Moon and "Sleeps"—Habits and Character of People.

Washington.—"Leatherstocking" is verified and Fennimore Cooper is vindicated and their substantiation comes, as it should, through the census bureau. It is from faraway Alaska, but it is official.

The substantiation is found in a report from Chief Census Agent McKenzie telling all about the taking of the census in the Fairbanks district.

Mr. McKenzie gives assurance that the Indians do measure time by the "snows" and "suns" and distances by "sleeps." Indeed, he asserts that they have no other standards of time or measurement, and in relating the fact he cites an instance which throws no little light on the difficulties of enumerating the red men.

"Only the very young children, who have been educated in the government schools," he says, "have any knowledge of their ages or births, and the agents were instructed to use the age and birth months as nearly as could be.

"Time with them is computed on suns and snows, and distances by sleeps. Marriages, separations, births and deaths are all based upon such calculations and we were obliged to base our information in the same way."

He then gives this instance:

"An Indian buck claimed to have lived '200 snows.' After much talk and use of the sign language it was determined that he was about eighty years old. He was found to have been twenty snows old when he 'got his first woman;' to have kept her 'four snows, when she got away'; that he 'got more woman and keep her five snows and then she died; that he 'got no woman for twenty snows more,' and finally that he 'got young chicken and keep her all time ever since, now on twenty-five or thirty snows.'"

Regarding the habits and character of the people, he says:

"As a class they are indolent, lazy and dirty, although in recent years the teachers have taught the younger ones that dirt has been the cause of much of their illness and the present generation is keeping themselves healthier by bathing. Their homes are filthy, as a rule, and conducive to the diseases with which the Indians are most afflicted."

Temperature from 30 to 70 degrees below zero; snow from three to twenty feet deep; wind blowing a blizzard most of the time; no human habitation in sight; no covering at night except a tent, and no "grub" that was not many times frozen.

These are some of the conditions under which the census was taken in the interior.

The report covering the work in the fourth or inland district of the territory has just been received by Director Durand, and while the story is simply told, it is a thrilling narrative of adventure, showing that when Uncle Sam starts out to round up his children he spares no expense to locate them and satisfy himself as to their status.

Mr. McKenzie's narrative comes in advance of his figures, so that it is impossible to give the population of the country covered by him and his twenty assistants. For reasons of its own, the census bureau determined to number the Alaskans during midwinter.

Mr. McKenzie made his headquarters at the mining town of Fairbanks. His first special agent was appointed on the 10th of last November and the work was completed by the 11th of last April, when McKenzie left for "the states." His experience in getting out of the country was by no means as thrilling as some of his experiences while engaged in the work, but it was stirring enough to arouse interest in a warm spell.

Hardship necessarily was involved in the work. Only men inured to the rigors of the Arctic climate were employed, and while they suffered severely, none of them lost their lives.

Churches and school houses in the interior of Alaska are few and far between. Necessarily they are confined to the towns and Indian settlements. Most of the Indian schools as well as the church services are conducted by the missionaries.

The white people do not attend either the Indian schools or the Indian churches, so that those of the outlying districts get their religion and their education at home. In the matter of education Mr. McKenzie reports that the home system works very well, the long nights of the winter causing an enforced confinement of children that is conducive to study. He says that many of them do even better than students in the schools.

Mr. McKenzie also reports that there is very little sickness among the white inhabitants of Alaska, and he says that few of those who are sick will acknowledge the fact. There is no fever, but some pneumonia. Most of the Indians are afflicted with tuberculosis and other diseases of civilization are prevalent.

"How shall I represent this railway that has become noted for erratic dividends?" asked the map maker.

A Suggestion to Women

What is the best remedy to use when girls are changing into womanhood. What is the best to use when you are low spirited, distressed with evil forebodings, together with pains in the side, with your nerves unstrung and life is a burden. If you also have lassitude and debility, turn to VINO-VITÆ, the great female remedy. As its name implies, it is a "wine of life" for ailing women, giving strength of the weak, hope to the despondent and comfort to life. It assists and makes child birth easy, corrects the monthly period and insures good health. Druggists sell it at $1.00 per bottle. If your druggist can not supply you, write to the Granger Medicine co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

-GOOD NEWS FOR THE FARMERS.

The Chilton County Farmer is fast assuming that place in the economic relations of life which his avocation predestined him to occupy the front rank—a leader among the advance guard. Long faces have been succeeded by smiling countenances and mortgaged homes and farms are soon to become happy firesides and productive fields of pleasure. Hard times have been vanquished and prosperity is victorious.

Contentment, peace and plenty are knocking at every door.

We are now entering upon an era of commercial development never heretofore anticipated; a season of rich rewards for honest toil is now dawning and will soon burst with noonday splendor upon our people.

The farmers are happy as they should be, for mother earth has yielded them rich trophies for their plucking; prices are soaring amid the radiant beauty of the stars; his products are in demand as never before.

Cotton is again King and corn is the Prince Imperial. What more could the planter desire to make his cup of gladness overflow?

The much talked of season of hard times and business depression has failed to arrive; the prophecies of the chronic knocker are wanting in the fulfillment and the dire misfortunes predicted by the ever present calamity howler have died in the borning. Alabama, Chilton county and Clanton, instead of going to the bow-wows, as forecasted by would-be-wise seers, has gone steadily onward upon the road of material development that leads to certain success and abundant prosperity.

We are enjoying the fruits of our labors as never before; the cry of poverty is hushed throughout this heaven-blessed section; on every side is heard the tuneful tones of thrift and prosperity. The frugal farmer will not have to draw upon the store house of the West for his corn supply, for the harvest within our own fields is abundant in the extreme.

The cotton producer is satisfied with the results of his labors and the shining coin which high prices for his staple enables him to secure and jingle in his jeans, not only makes a gladsome sound to his ears, but fills his heart with joyful anticipations of a happy Christmas-tide. All things conspire to make his lot a pleasant one indeed.

Desiring to have you make our place headquarters, we have arranged to pay the very top notch for every pound of the fleecy staple brought to our store.

We want to have a hand in your prosperity; we wish to be remembered in your rejoicing.

Come to us with your sample, we will top the market on every occasion; call upon us for your wants, our large and varied stock enables us to meet your every requirement and at prices that will make glad for the visit.

We hate the chronic croaker, we despise the knocker and the pessimist. The old world is bright with hope, buoyant with success, happy in plenteous abundance. We want you to know that we rejoice at your season of success, you desire it and we hope you will enjoy it to the fullest extent.

Come to see us, your happy faces make us glad indeed.

Come whether you want to buy or sell, both or either or neither. We will be glad to greet you.

We are going to set the gait this year and those who would keep up with us must clip it off at a merry chase.

Cordially yours,

Farmers of Chilton County, we greet you as the two fold hero and producers of our prosperity. You are they who have produced the wealth of our Country and upon your heads we pour our praises in unstinted measure. You have earned your reward and should enjoy the fruits of your labors.

The Merchant who has bought wisely and well rejoices at your success,

The cotton buyer whose heart beats in unison with your own delight in the opportunity afforded him to give you good prices for your staple; he who would with hold from you the best and highest the market affords is neither a friend to the farmer nor a wise man of business.

We want you to succeed, because in your success we also shall share.

We have bought not stingily but well; we have purchased in keeping with your position and your desire; you want the best, therefore we supplied ourselves with the best that we might accommodate both your taste and your demands.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Clanton, Oct. 11, 1910

Editor Banner:—It has come to my knowledge that my failure in business was being charged up to Judge Reynolds, which I consider very unfair to him as he had nothing to do with the management of my business. He did let his son Grady have money to but in the business when it started, but the first of July, 1909, I pought his son out, and I gave him my note for his share in the business.

The following notice appeared in the Union July the fifteenth 1910.

"I have sold all my in erest in the firm of C. W. Reynolds & Co to C. W. Reynolds, he assumes all liabilities of said firm. He will continue to do business at the same stand. Thanking all my friends and hoping that you will continue to do busines with C. W. Reynolds.

I am Respectfully.
H. G. Reynolds.

Now there is not one dollar due that was contracted before Grady sold out to me, and Judge Reynolds has not had one thing to do with my business since, and how any fair minded man could blame Judge Reynolds with my failure I do not see.

No one has credited me thinking that Judge Reynolds would pay the debt, and it does look like that those that have sold me goods would know who they sold to better than a few politicians, who have not lost a cent on this business.

Of course I am sorry of the failure, and more than sorry that the newspapers of this county have tried to inject my business matter in politics.

Respectfully,
C. W. REYNOLDS.

Bethany

Editor Banner—Please allow me a small space in your dear old paper. The health of this community is not coming well now, we regret very much to say the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs J. A. Shaver and taken away their beloved son, Walter. He was born Aug 4, 1888, and died Oct. 16, 1910. He leaves father, mother, and one prother and a host of friends to mourn his departure. He was loved by all who knew him. He was a quiet young man and has been a consistent member of the Missionary Baptist church for five years. Take it easy mother and father, our loss is heaven's gain. It is God's will. He works all things well.

NOTICE.

There will be an all day singing at Baker school house the fifth Sunday in this month. By request of Mrs. Vickers everybody is invited. Bring your books and baskets. Come, let us meet in harmony and listen to our songs so sweet.

REV. N. A. DEBBS.

HON. JOHN M. ATKINS, OF HEFLIN,

Republican Candidate for Congress from the 4th Ala. District

Mr. Atkins was born in Chambers County, Alabama, forty-seven years ago. He was raised in Randolph County, moved to Cleburn county in 1887, and since that time has been prominently connected with its business and social affairs, and is highly respected by all with whom he is acquainted. He is essentially a business man, being a member of the mercantile firm of Atkins & Owen and preisdent of the Bank of Heflin. He takes an active part in all public affairs, town, county and state, and is always found on the moral side of every question. He has served as a member of the City Council of Heflin, and is now a member of its School Board. He is prominent in fraternal affairs, being a member of the Masons and Khights of Pythias; a Methodeit in his church affiliations, and while active in his church work, is liberal in his views, and cheerfully aids that which he thinks will uplift his fellows.

Mr. Atkins stands for progress and prosperity for the people of Alabama; he believes in fair, square dealing in both politics and business. He appeals to the voters of the fourth District of Alabama to shake off its political bondage, and send a man to Congress who will represent the ideas and wishes of the people.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but these who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

CLANTON BANK, CLANTON, ALA.

DEATH HAS CALLED SENATOR DOLLIVER

Distinguished Statesman Dies Quite Suddenly.

PROMINENT AS POLITICIAN

Senator Dolliver Was One of the Strong Figures in Public Life—An Authority on Tariff and Railroad Rate Legislation.

Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver died at his residence at Fort Dodge, Ia., Saturday, while one of his attending physicians, Dr. E. M. Van Patten, was examining the distinguished statesman's heart with a stethoscope.

His death followed an acute attack of stomach trouble which affected his heart. His physicians announced that his death was directly due to dilation of the heart.

Twice in the limelight as a strong vice presidential possibility and in the front rank throughout his entire career in congress as an authority on tariff and railroad rate legislation, Senator Dolliver was one of the strong figures in public life. As an orator, both in the halls of congress and on the lecture platform, he never failed to charm his audiences with his eloquence, incomparable stories, of which he had an inexhaustible fund, and with his homely similes. He was famed particularly for the biting ridicule which he was ever ready to hurl at a political opponent and which usually went unanswered.

Senator Dolliver was born near Kingwood, Preston county, Va. (now West Virginia), February 6, 1858. He was graduated in 1875 from the West Virginia university, and at 20 was admitted to the bar.

FATAL ENCOUNTERS.

Reckless Gun Play in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania.

Fighting with revolvers in Allegheny county, Pa., has cost three lives within 48 hours; three participants have been wounded in the four engagements and two of these are in a serious condition. The toll of reckless gun play is:

The dead:

Patrolman Daniel Santon, shot and killed by Robert Robertson, a negro, in a Jones avenue tenement.

Collins Wells, southern negro, killed in a revolver battle with police and detectives in Corapolis.

Michael Joyce, of Universal, shot and killed by "Dic" Johnstone, while trying to plunge a knife into his enemy.

The wounded:

Patrolman Henry Miller, of Carnegie, shot Saturday in a running battle; will recover.

Joseph Paris, of White street, McKeesport, shot in the head by Leon Letson, a boarder, during a duel.

Leon Letson, boarder at the Paris home, shot in the groin by Paris.

CENSUS OF CITIES

Charlotte and Shreveport Gain 88 and 75 Per Cent Respectively.

Population statistics enumerated in the fifth census were made public by the census office for the following cities.

Louisville, Ky., 223,928, an increase of 19,197 or 9.4 per cent over 204,731 in 1900.

Lexington, Ky., 35,099, an increase of 8,720 or 33.1 per cent over 26,639 in 1900.

Charlotte, N. C., 34,104, an increase of 15,922 or 88 per cent over 18,091 in 1900.

Shreveport, La. 28,015, an increase of 12,002 or 75 per cent over 16,013 in 1900.

Geographically Louisville is not a southern city, so is not a competitor for second place among the cities of the south.

Of the large cities of the southern territory thus far reported, Louisville shows the smallest increase. At this ratio she will be eclipsed in the next city by both Atlanta and Birmingham.

The returns indicate the immense strides taken in the south's population in the past ten years.

CROPS IN GOOD SHAPE.

Report of Conditions to the Agricultural Department.

A general review of the crop conditions of the country by the department of agriculture at Washington says:

Aggregate crop conditions on October 1 (or at the time of harvest) in the United States were about 1.9 per cent higher than on the corresponding date a year ago and 0.4 per cent lower than the average condition on October 1 (or at time of harvest) of the last ten years. The area under cultivation is about 0.2 per cent more than last year.

The condition of certain crops on October 1 (or at time of harvest)—100 representing for each crop, not its normal condition, but its average condition on October 1 (or at time of harvest), (ten-year average for most crops)—was:

Corn, 102.4; rice, 102.3; cranberries, 102.2; lemons, 101.3; sorghum, 99.8; peanuts, 99.2; cotton, 98.9; sugar cane, 98.7; buckwheat, 98.1; sugar beets, 97.2; sweet potatoes, 96.7; tobacco, 96.6.

The total production of hay for 1910 was 69,116,000 tons compared with 64,938,000 tons in 1909, the yield per acre being 1.34 tons compared with 1.42 last year and 1.44 the ten year average.

MANY PERSONS INJURED.

Spreading Rails Supposed to Have Wrecked Southern Train.

A dispatch from Asheville, N. C., says: Passenger train No. 15 on the Murphy division of the Southern railway, coming from Murphy to Asheville, was wrecked Saturday, twenty people being injured, two probably fatally. The cause of the wreck, near the station of Ella, was the derailment of three coaches which went over the embankment, piling up at the bottom in a mass of splintered wood, twisted iron and injured humanity.

The derailment of the three coaches is believed to have been caused by spreading of the rails.

$248,000,000 SPENT ON PANAMA CANAL

$47,000,000 More Required to Complete it.

PROGRESS OF GREAT WORK

Work on the Great Waterway is Moving Along in a Most Satisfactory Manner, According to Chief Engineer's Report to Commission.

It is estimated that $47,920,848 will be required to continue the construction of the Panama canal during the fiscal year beginning July 1 next.

The principal items are $19,211,306 for skilled and unskilled labor and $19,186,751 for the purchase and delivery of material and supplies.

An estimate of $1,000,000 is submitted for the re-location of the Panama railroad. The total appropriations on account of the canal to date are $248,002,668. Of that amount, $40,000,000 was paid for the French rights and $10,000,000 to Panama.

Steady progress in the construction of the canal is shown by the monthly report of Chief Engineer Goethals to the isthmian canal commission.

TRAGEDY NEAR ALBANY.

Accidental Discharge of Gun Results in Death.

William E. Meyers, general manager of the Albany Grocery Company, and one of the most prominent business men of Albany, Ga., was killed four miles south of Albany, at Blue Springs, through the accidental discharge of his shotgun.

Myers and Thad Huckabee, a traveling salesman of the Albany Grocery Company, had been squirrel hunting, and stopped in a store at Blue Springs when a heavy rain came up. They were traveling in an automobile, Myers driving. When they were ready to resume their trip, Myers took a seat in the machine, and Huckabee started to crank off the machine. Myers' gun lay across the seat, and it was discharged just as the engine began to move, the entire load of shot entering his left breast.

The machine was rushed to the city as fast as possible, but Myers died as he was being taken out at his apartments.

$1,000,000 CAPITAL.

National Bank of Commerce Soon to Organize.

The National Bank of Commerce, with $1,000,000 capital and $200,000 surplus, is about to become the latest addition to Atlanta's big financial institutions.

Details of the organization have been practically completed.

The new bank, which will make the seventh among Atlanta's national banks, will begin business about January 1.

Three locations in the heart of the city are now under consideration as temporary quarters; the permanent home of the new bank will be in one of Atlanta's well-know sky-scrapers.

The organization committee is composed of about thirty-five prominent Atlanta and Georgia business men, chosen from among the more than 200 Georgians who have already subscribed to the bank's capital stock.

BEAT UNCLE SAM OUT OF $1,000,000

Big Customs Fraud Reported at New York.

BIG ART FIRM IS INVOLVED

Great Establishment of Duveen Bros., Famous the World Over as Art Dealers, Charged With Having Defrauded U. S. Government.

The entire Fifth avenue establishment of the five Duveen brothers, of New York, known the world over as dealers in rare art objects and antiques, has been seized by federal officers, and Benjamin J. Duveen, the only member of the firm in the city, was arrested, charged with conspiracy to defraud the government of customs dues.

Henry A. Wise, United States district attorney, in asking for heavy bail, said the frauds would reach more than $1,000,000, and that all five brothers were implicated. Bail was fixed at $50,000, which was promptly given, and Duveen was released.

Special agents of the department of justice, armed with warrants, conducted the raid on the aristocratic establishment. After placing Benjamin J. Duveen under arrest, a search for undervalued articles was begun, and more than a van load of "suspicious" goods was found.

Mr. Wise, in explaining the case, said that information was recently placed in his possession tending to show that the Duveens had for years been defrauding the government out of customs duties on works of art and antique furniture imported from abroad by means of false consular invoices. The records at the custom house were hurriedly overhauled and the records seemed to substantiate the charges.

UNDER MARTIAL LAW

Perfect Quiet Now Said to Prevail at Lisbon, Portugal.

Although Lisbon remains under martial law, pending a reorganization of the administration, the soldiers have been gradually withdrawn from the streets. The people have resumed their business occupations and perfect tranquility prevails.

The government has announced that the Irish Dominican fathers and nuns, who have conducted a school there for many years, will be exempted from the order of expulsion. This step doubtless is due to the desire of the republicans to keep on good terms with Great Britain.

The casualty list from the recent fighting falls below the most moderate of previous estimates. The official estimate gives the number killed as between 100 and 150. Unofficial estimates place the number still lower.

The provisional government has taken possession of the houses of several religious bodies. No opposition was met with. It has been decided to issue a decree enforcing compulsory military service.

A GHASTLY CRIME.

Supposed Murderers Mutilate Man to Prevent Identification.

With his throat cut, his scalp torn off and the flesh carved from his face, Ferdinand Greeley, of Florissant, Mo., member of a wealthy family, was found near a haystack, less than a mile from the aviation grounds at Kinloch park in St. Louis county.

The features were cut from the bones and the scalp was taken off, it is believed, to prevent identification.

The identification was established by relatives, who recognized the clothes the murdered man wore. He was 27 years old.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES. The statue of General James Oglethorpe is to be unveiled in Savannah, on November 22, and will be the occasion for a military and naval demonstration in which Hon. James Bryce, the British ambassador; a detachment from the regular army, national guard of Georgia, vessels of the United States and British navies will take part, in the event plans tentatively agreed upon with Hon. J. Randolph Anderson, chairman of the monument commission, are carried through.

The Whiting Lumber company, backed by a wealthy English syndicate, has purchased the entire town of Robbinsville, N. C., with the exception of the courthouse site, two church properties and three private lots. The company, it is understood, proposes to develop valuable timber properties which it owns adjacent to Robbinsville, and may make a manufacturing town there. It is said it will spend $3,000,000 in developing processes. The company's main offices are in Philadelphia.

H. G. (Bill) Barlow, editor of Sagebrush Philosophy, and an apostle of the "Red Corpuscle Rush," died at Douglas, Wyo., following a sudden attack of heart disease. Barlow, who was 50 years old, was city editor of the Laramie Boomerang, when that sheet was famous under Bill Nye. When Nye left The Boomerang, Barlow succeeded him as editor. Barlow began to attract attention about 15 years ago when he commenced the publication of "Sagebrush Philosophy," a magazine abounding in quaint humor and pithy sayings.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES. Spanish exiles who have fled from Lisbon, are arriving at Vigo, Badajos and other points on the frontier. At Badajos, upon the order of the bishop, the nuns have surrendered the Carmelite convent. Owing to pending legislation affecting the religious orders, the influx of refugees is embarrassing to the Spanish government. Premier Canalejas said that the government was moved with pity to receive the exiles, but that a permanent invasion could not be tolerated.

A Copenhagen dispatch says: The celebrated inventor, Vlademar Poulsen, has produced an apparatus for wireless lighting of electric lamps. His assistant stood in one room holding two lamps. The inventor went into another room and placed the transmitting apparatus in position. On pressing two contacts the lamps were alternately lighted and extinguished. No connection of any kind existed between the lamps and the apparatus.

The cotton mills of Lancashire, Eng., have resumed operations. George Howe, a local employe, whose discharge caused the strike at the Fern mill and resulted in the lockout of 130,000 operatives, was given work in another factory. In one week the lockout caused the workers half a million dollars in wages and depleted the union funds by $200,000.

Stretched a Point and Said Yes.

"Talk about a bartender having to listen to all the life stories of every mellow customer that drops in," began the soda clerk, "you ought to see the way it is on this job. Every man out in this neighborhood that's been on a jag the night before seems to make a bee line for this stand for a brome seltzer the first thing next morning, and then I have to stand for a line of confidential chat that would make a bartender dizzy. The last man in here insisted on calling me to one side to show me the picture of a girl in the back of his watch. I couldn't get away till he'd told all about how anxious she was for him to flag the drink thing for keeps, and wanted to know if I didn't think he ought to with a little girl like that for inspiration. She was only fair to look at, but I told him yes."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Forced to leave home.

Every year a large number of poor sufferers whose lungs are sore and racked with coughs are urged to go to another climate But this is costly and not always sure. There is a better way. Let Dr. King's new Discovery cure you at home.

"It cured me of lung trouble," writes W. R. Nelson, of Calamine Ark., "when all else failed and I gained 47 pounds in weight. It's surely the king of all coughs and lung cures." Thousands owe their lives and health to it. It's positively guaranteed for Coughs, Colds, La Grippe, Asthma, Croup—all Throat and Lung troubles. 50c and $1.00 Trial bottle free at Upchurch Drug Co.

THE
Southern Ruralist
OF ATLANTA, GA.

Is the Greatest Agricultural Paper in the South today. It covers every department of the farm and home. We have examined it carefully, and consider THE SOUTHERN RURALIST the most valuable premium we can offer our readers. It comes twice a month—24 times a year. A sample copy will be mailed free to any one on request.

The most valuable thing about the Southern Ruralist is the Prize Specials, which are published on the first of each month. The Ruralist pays $30.00 each month for the best articles from its subscribers on special subjects, such as Fall Plowing, Poultry, Fertilizers, Farm Tools, Gardening, Fruit Growing, Stock Raising, Dairying, etc. These articles come from every part of the country. They are written by men who do the work and give actual experience. They will help you as nothing else will.

REGULAR DEPARTMENTS AND STAFF WRITERS

Our New Fixtures

With the putting in of our new Cabinet Show Cases for Suits, you will find ours, one of the best arranged stores in the country for your convenience and comfort. Our fixtures are so arranged that you can see our goods at a glance and the light throughout our floor space is excellent. Our service has always been our pride, politeness being the watchword of our clerks.

If You Are Coming to the Exposition

You will make a mistake in not visiting our store. We will welcome all visitors and it will be a pleasure to show you our stock. You need not think you'll have to buy something if you come in. We are proud to show you our store and what we've got. The goods and values will recommend themselves.

Free Checking Department

For your convenience we have installed a large bundle counter where you may check free of charge any small luggage before going out to the fair grounds. This is free to all and we want you to take advantage of it without thinking you are placing yourself under any obligation whatever. Go bring us your suit case or basket and we'll give you a receipt for it. Call when you like for its return.

In Bad Fix

"I had a mishap at the age of 41, which left me in bad fix," writes Mrs. Georgia Usher, of Conyers, Ga.

"I was unconscious for three days, and after that I would have fainting spells, dizziness, nervousness, sick headache, heart palpitation and many strange feelings.

"I suffered greatly with ailments due to the change of life and had 3 doctors, but they did no good, so I concluded to try Cardui.

"Since taking Cardui, I am so much better and can do all my housework."

Take CARDUI

J 41

The Woman's Tonic

Do not allow yourself to get into a bad fix. You might get in so bad you would find it hard to get out.

Better take Cardui while there is time, while you are still in moderately good health, just to conserve your strength and keep you in tip top condition.

In this way your troubles, whatever they are, will gradually grow smaller instead of larger—you will be on the up-grade instead of the down—and by and bye you will arrive at the north pole of perfect health.

Farmers and Automobiles.

Several Washington bankers were discussing the automobile question. One of them broke the news that the Hillsdale, Maryland, association had just resolved not to lend money on real estate if the ultimate purpose of the borrower was to buy an automobile. The financiers all agreed that such a rule would be excellent.

"The automobile craze has become a good deal of a menace," said W. T. Galliher, of the American National bank. He added, with a twinkle in his eye: "The reason eastern money is not flowing into the eastern market the way it used to is that so many farmers are buying automobiles."

Raising Opportunity.

At the very last session an investigation of the sale of the state lands in the Philippines was ordered by the senate. It was found that the house could not adjourn before unanimous consent was given—and Representative Morris, of Nebraska, put on the screws and demanded that investigation be undertaken. Rather than swelter a few more days the house voted the investigation. While this does not indicate any absorbing eagerness on the part of the Republican leaders to have the charges of fraud and improper conducted investigated, it does prove that one must be alert to seize the golden moments as they fly.

Everybody, regardless of political creed, is cordially invited to attend these appointments and hear the issues of the day discussed. The ladies are especially invited.

J. OSMOND MIDDLETON,
Chairman Republican Campaign Committee of Chilton county.

THE TRUTH AND NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH!

With considerable regret we feel impelled to acknowledge that some of our subscribers (no, we will amend that, some of our readers) have taken umbrage at the declaration in the last issue of The Banner on "The Situation."

The truth is not at all times palatable, but so far as The Banner is concerned we have always tried to tell the truth, irrespective of consequences, and while it would be absurd to expect every one to agree with us, yet we are heartily grateful to acknowledge the many kind words spoken to us in regard to the position taken by us.

In the last issue of The Banner we endeavored to tell the people of Chilton county the political situation as it is, not as you may wish it to be—your hopes and expectations are your own—but each one should remember that others have hopes and expectations also which may not correspond with yours.

In last week's Banner we asserted our belief in the victory of the State Democratic ticket, and up to the present we have not heard one word against the correctness of that proposition—mistaken as we think the ticket is in at least one instance.

That Emmet O'Neal will be the next Governor of Alabama, we feel quite confident, and in our opinion if the state was searched all over not a better man could be found for the position than Mr. O'Neal—a man of human feelings and passions; one who understands the needs and desires of the people; one who has the will and the strength to see the wishes of the people carried out. In short, he is the right man in the right place,

On the whole, the rest of the State ticket is entirely satisfactory with one exception, and that a very important one.

It is one of the anomalies of the present primary system that such as this should happen, but here we have a man nominated for the second highest position in the State, whose expressed views, in one particular at least, are diametrically opposed to that of the head of the ticket, and yet as he is the nominee of the party we are expected to support him.

It can only be expected that he will do his utmost to thwart the efforts of the Governor, and in the event of his succeeding to the governorship by any unfortunate calamity, the people of Alabama would have to be commiserated. Such an event, it is true, may not be considered as a probability, but who can foretell the future?

In the same line of reasoning, The Banner stated in its last issue its belief in the victory of the Republican ticket in the county—a belief based on a careful review of the situation for many months—we might say years and still be keeping close to the truth.

Some of our good Democratic friends have virtually acknowledged the truth of this position, but say we should not so express ourselves, but on the contrary should howl "We are going to win" all the time until after the election and then begin to explain where we were mistaken.

In times gone by it is said it was customary in the black belt to yell vociferously before elections "Great Democratic victory," "Big majority," etc., (and, aside, "How much majority do you need?) and the returns were forthcoming accordingly, but such methods are not to be thought of or tolerated in this day and time in Chilton County.

That the sentiment of a majority of the people of Chilton County is undoubtedly with the Republican party can not longer be denied with any truth, and that sentiment is growing stronger day by day.

Some years ago it was decidedly unpopular for any man to declare himself a Republican in this section but there has always been a strong proclivity for the Republican party in Chilton County, and of late years that proclivity has manifested itself by the election to office by that party of men who have proven themselves true to the best interests of the people of the entire county. —If proof is needed, what more can be asked than the present prosperity of the county, its contented people, and a full treasury to meet all demands?

It is universally acknowledged on all hands that two equally balanced parties are the best safeguard of the State, and while Chilton may at present be one of a few counties to elect Republican officials, it is well to remember that "large oaks from little acorns grow," and having begun this good work let it continue until we have two equally balanced parties in the State, and at the present moment it appears to us that the best thing the people of Chilton County can do is to vote for Judge Reynolds and the entire Republican ticket in the County.

Judge Reynolds has proven himself a thoroughly competent official, true to the people, true to the Constitution and true to his God. What more can be demanded? Is it possible to do better?

Called For Glory Divine.

Among the customers in a drug store one day last week was a little girl who is known to her playmates in that vicinity as "Peggy." As she stood waiting for her turn it could be noticed that she was repeating something under her breath in her effort to remember what her mother had sent her to buy.

"Mother wants five cents' worth of glory divine."

"Of what?" said the young clerk, who was standing there as if stunned by a hard blow of a baseball bat.

"Glory divine, glory divine," came the reply in a louder voice than when she had made the original request.

"You had better go home and have your mother write it down on paper, little girl," said the clerk, feeling that the girl was too sure to argue with him.

Soon she returned, and, handing the note to the clerk, he read, "Five cents' worth of chlorate of lime."—Philadelphia Times.

A Bit of Sicily.

"There is no Italian town more picturesque than the Sicilian capital, Palermo," writes a traveler. "In its port lie crowded the queerest coasting craft I have ever set eyes on. Sailing ships of all rigs, their hulls painted all the colors of the rainbow, nose up against the quay, where mule carts, whose drivers are shouting at the top of their voices, wait to take away the merchandise. The narrow street where the custom house officers examine the goods brought ashore is a place of terrific noise. When a driver, two clerks and two custom house officers are discussing the contents of a bale or a cask it seems as though murder must be committed within the next few seconds. But somebody signs something, the cart moves on, and everybody laughs."

Murdering Shakespeare.

"I never hesitate to cut and slash and change any play until it suits me," said Stuart Robson to his legal adviser on one occasion.

"I suppose you edit Shakespeare with a blue pencil?" replied the lawyer.

"You can just bet I do."

"Then, I imagine, you would plead guilty to an indictment for murdering the Bard of Avon?"

"No; I would not, but I would admit dissecting his corpse."

Needs Prodding.

"It is a great mistake, Mabel, to trifle with the affections of a man who loves you by encouraging some one else."

"Well, he's a little slow, auntie. I think he needs a pacemaker."

A 50-cent bottle of

Scott's Emulsion

NOTICE.

There will be Sunday School at Samaria next Sunday, Oct. 23, at 2 o'clock p m., and after S.S. Estie Calloway, of Wegufka, will make a S.S. lecture everybody is invited to come and here Mr. Calloway, we know he will tell something good Fleet Footed Postmen of Venice.

Probably the letter carriers in Venice are the most ingenious in the world. They know how to dodge every waterway, turning up on their routes with a precise regularity that convinces you they have mapped every scrap of the damp city's dry land on their brains. If you go to your destination by gondola they can beat you thereto by a good bit of time. What they know about canals has been applied by them to navigation on land, and they know every tiny street in the city.

Of course there are postoffice gondolas, too, gay yellow things that quite outcolor the yellow sunlight, and any day you happen over the bridge of the Rialto you will see them all fastened to their red and gold poles just underneath the old palatial Fondaco dei Tedeschi, which centuries ago by decree of the Venetian senate two famous architects of early days, Girolamo Tedesco and Giorgio Spavento, built for the use of the many German merchants then living in Venice (somewhere about the year 1505).—Travel Magazine.

The Mystery of a Duel.

Having fought his duel and saved his honor by firing a shot in the air, the editor of a French provincial newspaper went back to his desk, and the incident had quite left his mind when he felt something strange in his thigh. He looked and found that he was bleeding profusely. A doctor was called, who discovered that a bullet was imbedded in the editor's thigh some two inches deep and required extraction. "Why was this not taken notice of on the spot where the duel took place?" he asked. The editor was as much in the dark as the doctor. At the moment of the duel he had fired into the air, and his adversary also took a distracted sort of aim. There had evidently been no intention of doing the slightest harm on either side. The editor felt nothing as he left the field and had shaken hands with his antagonist as a sign of reconciliation. How a bullet came to be lodged in his thigh was simply one of the mysteries of dueling.—London Telegraph.

It is ever true that he who does nothing for others does nothing for himself.—Goethe.

Falling Hair — Ayer's Hair Vigor promptly destroys the germ that causes falling hair. It penetrates the hair tube, restores tissue to health. The hair stops falling out, grows more rapidly.

Dandruff — Ayer's Hair Vigor has a specific influence over the germ of dandruff. It destroys the germ and in a healthy condition.

Does not Color the Hair

We wish you to positively and distinctly understand that Ayer's Hair Vigor does not affect the color of the hair, even to the slightest degree. Persons with the whitest or the lightest and most delicate blond hair may use it freely without having the hair made a shade darker.

Ingredients: Sulphur, Glycerin, Quinin, Sodium Chlorid, Capsicum, Sage, Alcohol, Water, Perfume.

A NEW REGIME IN COLLEGE

It Started a Tide in the Affairs of Matthew.

By GUY WETMORE CARRYL.

[Copyright, 1906, by American Press Association.]

At twenty minutes to 4 on a certain February afternoon the blue eyes of Matthew Bacon opened to their fullest capacity, the heart of Matthew Bacon stood still for an instant and then began to pound with a vehemence which threatened to snap off the buttons of his waistcoat, and Matthew himself drew a deep breath and then said "Gad!" the sole and seeming insufficient reason for which remarkable manifestations was one white violet which had suddenly come to light between the pages of a copy of "Paradise Lost" in the library of Fuller university.

It was the first year of the coeducational system at Fuller, and students and faculty alike were still in the throes of self adjustment to the new regime.

Matthew Bacon, '01, president of the senior class, who in the early days of his college career had trotted over the cinder path at phenomenal speed and so into the esteem of his fellows, was among the first to yield. He had made a practice of avoiding the society of women, conscious of his own shortcomings in a social sense. Now that it was forced upon him it was more disconcerting even than if he had sought it of his own free will.

The term was fully a fortnight old before Matthew began to note essential points of difference. But the habit of observation, once taken, grows like a weed, and a week later, to his own intense amazement, he found himself watching at the semiweekly lecture on literature for the entrance of one particular algret. It was a black algret, spangled with silver and perched coquettishly on what Matthew somewhat inadequately described to himself as a "big green hat," in blissful ignorance of the fact that there are greens and greens and that this especial green was a soft dark emerald, which had nothing in common with the blatant gaudiness of lighter tints and was, moreover, most distractingly becoming to the face underneath. But there was no doubt in his mind about the face itself. Even his untutored appreciation grasped the fact that twice a week the most delicate complexion and the brownest eyes and the softest chestnut hair and the most bewildering tip tilted nose and the sweetest mouth in two hemispheres were separated from him, in fact, by the width of the class room aisle and metaphorically as far distant as Venus from earth.

Her name, Miss Ayres, came directly before his on the roll.

When he discovered by accident one day that she lived on Hamilton avenue Matthew straightway and helplessly chose the most inconvenient and circuitous route to college. Once only he saw her on the steps, and then she was talking with another man, and the stupidest man, at that, in the whole of Kenton City!

Things went on in this fashion until February, and then Matthew took a resolution. In his mother's conservatories the violets were already in bloom. They were a fad of Mrs. Bacon's, those big double white ones, and not to be seen elsewhere in Kenton, and her keenest pleasure was found in the half hour which she spent each morning in the violet house gathering the new blown flowers for her table. But she was a woman of perspicacity, was Mrs. Bacon, and when, very red in the face and stammering desperately, Matthew requested her one morning to leave the plants untouched until his return from college that afternoon she contented herself with a calm "Certainly, my son," which earned his gratitude, while it excited his astonishment.

"The mater hasn't an atom of curiosity," he said to himself, "and thank goodness! But it's most surprising in a woman."

For how could he be expected to remember, occupied as he was, with weightier matters, that it was become his custom to write "Natalie" on bits of paper, which he afterward carefully destroyed, first blotting them with admirable distinctness on the writing pad in his study?

That afternoon he gathered every white violet in sight and, with something akin to instinct, laid them loosely together in a box with some maidenhair fern instead of arranging them in the inevitably depressing form of a masculine bouquet. Then he sat in his study for a full hour, pen in hand and a sheet of paper before him, biting his left thumb and staring at the parcel he had made. Finally he wrote seven words—"Will you wear these at lecture tomorrow?"

Another half hour of meditation followed, at he end of which time he signed "An Admirer" to his note, slipped it into the box, snatched up his hat and sallied forth. The clocks were striking 9 as he marched resolutely up the steps of the Ayres residence. looked the servant who came to the door sternly in the eye, said, with a steadiness he had not expected, "For Miss Natalie" and abruptly departed. Three hours later he was in bed, with the covers in astonishing confusion, staring at the ceiling and applying to the person of one Matthew Bacon an infinite variety of the most unflattering epithets imaginable.

He might have known it! The following morning in lecture, when instinct rather than actual perception told him that Miss Ayres had taken her place across the aisle, he summoned all his resolution and looked at her, full and fair. She was bending over her notebook with an appearance of complete unconcern, and there was not so much as the petal of a violet visible about her from top to toe!

That day was celebrated in the annals of his class as that of "Bacon's Great Grouch." He was, as his nearest friends conceded, positively unfit for publication. For half the afternoon, seated on one of the campus benches, he replied with acerbity that too frequently merged into profanity to all remarks addressed to him. He became in short order an object of derision. Groups gathered about him and from a safe distance bombarded him with sarcasm, as small boys throw peanuts at a caged lion—to make him roar. The climax was reached when the most irreverent of his tormentors exclaimed, "Who is she, Matt?" and all the others echoed the inquiry with extreme relish. Then Matthew gathered his books and himself together, and took his way gloomily to the library to the supplementary reading which the professor of English VIII had prescribed. It was precisely seven minutes later that he opened his eyes to their fullest capacity, drew a deep breath and then said "Gad!"

Intuition told Matthew the story in a word—she had kept at least one of his flowers! Her supplementary reading was naturally the same as his. She had been in the library that day reading that book and to keep her place had left the violet between the leaves. The spirit of Matthew Bacon soared instantaneously into the seventh heaven of delight. But she had not worn the violets as he had asked. She had rebuked him for the impertinence of his anonymous letter. He was a cad. And the spirit of Matthew Bacon plunged promptly into the nethermost abyss of despair.

For fifteen minutes, which seemed like as many years, he sat, with his temples in his hands, gazing with unseeing eyes at the lines before him and telling himself that there was nothing left to make life worth the living. Through his preoccupation he heard the voice of one of the library pages speaking to a reader opposite to him at the table.

"The librarian says he's sorry, miss, but 'Purradise Lost' is out. Here's the other book you wanted."

In a lightning flash of thought Matthew knew what voice it was that he would hear in reply.

"Oh, dear!" said Natalie Ayres. "Well, never mind. This will do."

A phrase from something he had read was pounding in Matthew's ears, in fragments at first, finally in one connected whole, "There is a tide—in—in the affairs—in the affairs of men—which—taken—taken—at the flood—leads on—leads on—leads on to fortune!"

Hastily he tore a leaf from his notebook and scribbled a message which would have been a credit to a boy of ten:

WIH you forgive my rudeness in sending you that ananermous letter? I did it without thinking, and I'm terribly repentent. But I'm really all right, indeed I am, and my mother knows yours. I was under a kind of spell.

MATTHEW BACON.

Slipping this epistle between the leaves where lay the white violet, he returned the book to the loan desk and then went back to his seat and spent an apparent eternity upon a rack of mental torture. At the last moment the voice of the page, informing Miss Ayres that she could now have "Purradise Lost," threw him into a panic.

When he looked up it was to meet her eyes. For a moment they stared at each other, Matthew turning from pink to crimson and from crimson to white and the girl with an enigmatical smile on her lips.

"If your mother knows mine," she said presently, with an air of severity, "don't you think you might go to the trouble of getting a proper introduction?" Then she laughed outright. "I'm afraid your letter is what might be called a kind of a spell!" she added.

After all, since the course of true love is destined never to run smooth, it is better that the bad bumps should come at the beginning rather than at the end.

When, at the commencement of the class of 1901, Miss Natalie Ayres wore a superb bunch of white violets people said that she must be a particular friend of the Bacons. And so by that time she was—a very particular friend.

For the Service of the Race.

There is no division of opinion as to the goal for which our girls are educated. More and more, out of the chaotic past, the conviction stands out that each one of us is in training for the service of the race. A woman's goal, like a man's, is to give up her life that the life of the next generation may be safer and wiser and happier than this one. No higher education that is not foolish and ill-judged can unfit a woman for bringing splendid children into the world and training them wisely. No higher education that is not foolish and ill-judged can unfit a woman, who is not blessed with children, for dealing nobly and wisely and generously with the rising generation.—Louise Collier Willcox, in Harper's Bazar.

Low Death Rate in Philippines.

Any ideas that the Philippines are unhealthful as an abiding place for Americans would seem to be dissipated by the statement issued from the bureau of insular affairs that the death rate among the more than 8,000 government employees in the islands for the quarter ended March 31 was only 6.9 per 1,000 a year. These employees, of whom some 3,700 are Americans, include all the officials and employees of the insular, provincial and municipal governments and the police and fire departments of Manila.

Telephones on Steamships.

The telephones used on the steamship Lusitania are quite interesting. The induction coil, condenser and bell of the instrument are inclosed in a small white enamel box, and the switch hook which projects from one side is provided with a special retaining device to prevent the receiver from being knocked off by the motion of the ship. The receiver is allowed to rock on the hook, otherwise the lever would lift and make a false connection when the ship was pitching and rolling.

Elephants in Danger.

In France a society has been recently organized which is known as "Friends of the Elephant." The purpose of this society is to protect the elephant from wholesale slaughter. So fast are hunters slaying the elephant that the animal is in danger of extermination. Fully forty thousand of these beasts, it is estimated, are slaughtered every year. In all Africa, it is stated, there are no more than three hundred and twenty-five thousand elephants.

First Wooden House.

Three hundred years ago the first home of wood was erected on Manhattan island. It was near where the west end of Pearl street is and was made of rough logs, quite different from the fast one of steel and stone now being built not far from the same site.

"IT BEATS ALL"

This is quoted from a letter of Mr Stockwell, Hannibal, Mo. "I recently used Foley's Honey and Tar for the first time. To say I am pleased does not half express my feelings. It beats all the remedies I ever used. I contracted a bad cold was threatened with pneumonia. The first doses gave great relief and one bottle completely cured me." Contains no opiates. Upchurch Drug co.

Cures Dyspepsia; Trial Is Free

It is a popular mistake that only wealthy people who eat rich and highly-spiced foods suffer from dyspepsia, or, as it is also known, indigestion. The laborer in the street, the worker in the field also finds himself a victim of this disorder. Among the very greatest sufferers from it are women.

Dyspepsia is indicated by a constant feeling of laziness, by loss of appetite and troubled sleep, by sour stomach and distress after eating, by bad complexion and listerless eyes.

There is no surer and speedier cure for this trouble than Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which dyspeptics have been using successfully for twenty years. This great herb laxative compound cured Capt. Clark, of Buffalo, Ia., of dyspepsia and sour stomach that he had had for forty years, or until the lucky day that he heard of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It cured Joel Adams, of Montgomery, Ala., after suffering continuously for sixteen months. These are only a few of the many. But it is not expensive to be cured with this grand remedy, as it can be bought at any drug store in a 50-cent or $1 bottle.

Your very neighbors are probably lifelong users of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, but if you want to know without expense what it will do for you personally, send your name to Dr. Caldwell and he will be glad to send you a free trial bottle. He is actually anxious to have you make a test of his remedy.

Thousands of families everywhere keep it in the house against such an emergency as constipation, sour stomach, indigestion, biliousness, dyspepsia, heartburn, torpid liver, etc., which may come on any member of the family any day. It is a pleasant to the taste, acts gently and does not gripe. It is the great children's laxative tonic.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Diplomatic Dress for 75 Years.

During the first seventy-five years of independence our consuls as well as diplomats wore a uniform or official dress, as it was called, prescribed by the state department, and modified from time to time. The last changes were made for Mr. Livingston, secretary of state for Andrew Jackson, and the diplomatic dress consisted of a blue coat and blue pantaloons, with gold embroidery and a white waistcoat. Though simple in form, it represented the diplomatic dress of other countries. The consular attire was similar, though the naval button was prescribed and the costume had something of a naval air. Diplomats and consuls wore small swords, but no epaulets.

Thackeray a Prophet.

Thackeray's suggestion of a possible flight from London to Armagh in an aerial machine makes interesting reading at the present time. In "The Irish Sketch Book," published in 1842, speaking of Armagh Cathedral, he wrote: "It wants a hundred years at least to cool the raw colors of the stones and to dull the brightness of the gilding; all which benefits, no doubt, time will bring to pass, and future cookseys setting off from London Bridge after breakfast in an aerial machine may come to hear the morning services here, and not remark the faults which have struck a too susceptible tourist of the nineteenth century."

Reaching the Top

in any calling of life, demands a vigorous body and a keen brain. Without health there is no success. But Electric Bitters is the greatest Health Builder the world has ever known. It compels perfect action of stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels, purifies and enriches the blood, tones and invigorates the whole system and enables you to stand the wear and tear of your daily work. "After months of suffering from Kidney Trouble," writes W. M. Sherman of Cushing, Me., "three bottles of Electric Bitters made me feel like a new man." 50c at Upchurch Drug co.

SANDS OF THE SEA USEFUL

Of Great Importance in Glassmaking and Warfare—Moving Character of Quicksands Explained.

The sands of the sea are singularly useful. They are of primary importance in glassmaking. They have an important place in warfare, as a bank of sand twenty inches thick is proof against modern rifle shots. The electrical properties of sand show that it has positive electricity, although a rod of silica, the chief constituent of sand is negative.

The singular drying effect which occurs when a stretch of wet sand is pressed by the foot is due entirely to an alteration in the piling of the sand grains. Normally the grains are close together, but abnormal piling is brought about by pressure of the foot, the space between the edges of the grains being enlarged and the water drained away. If the pressure of the foot is continued the sand becomes wetter than ever, the partial vacuum quickly bringing water from the surrounding sand.

In quicksands the moving character is thought to be due to the imprisonment between the grains of gases from organic matter.

English as She Is Warped.

School teachers are wont to compare notes from time to time, and in a friendly way vie with each other in the production of particularly brilliant or particularly stupid answers.

"What is the most incorrect sentence any of your children ever got off?" asked a Glenwood school teacher recently at the Schoolmen's Club.

"One of mine got this off not long ago," responded a young man who teaches at the Robert Morris school; 'It ain't his'n like, but yourn.'"

"My best, said a George R. Mead school pedagogue, "ran something like this: 'Rase roast beef is meat what there ain't none whats's any undercover.'"

The best one of the afternoon was furnished by a Germantown teacher. "Here is one," he said, "which has the old classic, 'He seen his duty and done it noble,' beaten forty ways: 'Lowtenant Grant hearn the enemy in his bed, but he snuck up on him and killed him without knowin' who, where or what he was.'"—Philadelphia Record.

Odd Name.

J. M. Shephard of Knob Noster writes the Star concerning the origin of his town's name: "Nob Noster is situated at the foot of two beautiful hills, or 'knobs,' in the western vernacular. These knobs are green and grassworn to their summits and rise out of a flat prairie, from which they can be seen for many miles. When the village was founded in the early fifties a schoolhouse was built and an eastern schoolmaster was employed to teach a pay-school. When he arrived at his place of employment he was struck with the beauty of the knobs, and being exceedingly proud of his knowledge of Latin dubbed them 'Knobs Noster' or 'Our Knobs.' The villagers were struck with the name and named their town after the designation of their Latin-loving schoolmaster. The process of time seems to have worn the 's' from 'Knobs.'—Kansas City Star.

Bald-Headed Musicians.

The important observation has been made that the blowers of wind instruments are invariably bald or baldescent, while the players on stringed instruments are adorned with luxuriant hair. Robert M. Gay in the Atlantic says that flutes, clarinets, oboes, horns, trombones, bassoons and bassos have blown their way bareheads as bare as stones and sands of the plains of Africa. But of all bareheads, Tympano's is the baldest. His radiant scone beams out in the musical storm like the moon amid heavy clouds, and, I have no doubt, gives much confidence to the surrounding musical sea. He is never serious. He glares at the score, but with uncompromising attitude shows by that he, at any rate, knows what it is all about. How admirable in his possession as he screws up his pharynx, taps them gently, and lingly, with critical ear inclined, allays their throbbings with soothing palm. (And all this amid an avalanche of sound, like a man wildly tying his necktie while going down the Jungfrau.)

He Didn't Know Its Meaning.

"Once," said an old time actor, "I stood entranced in the wings [illegible] Charles Thorne was reading a Shakespearean speech. Curiosity overcame me, but admiration held me. I [illegible] he couldn't study out the quotation in report of that speech, but he read it. I had never heard it read before. The meaning was crystal clear. When it came off, for destiny I asked him to the meaning of the speech. 'Why, it means,' said he. 'That—' A pause. 'No, it's this way.' A longer pause. 'Now, suppose—' that doesn't just express it.' He went on tangling himself up. Finally he turned to go and said: 'I don't know what it means, but it's a d— fine speech.'"

When O. Henry Lost Prestige.

Once, when exploring a fertile district for story material, O. Henry invited a bright little girl to dine with him. She accepted on condition that she might bring a friend along. During dinner the writer sought to learn his guests feel at ease by remarking in English to the extent of using "ain't" and "hadn't oughter" and a few other popular mutilations of the mother tongue.

He saw the little girl a few days later.

"I was awful mortified that night," she said. "You spoke so ungrammatical before my lady friend!"—Lippincott's Magazine.

DIZZINESS—DO YOU KNOW WHAT CAUSES IT?

This is caused by the bile being reabsorbed into the blood. To get rid of this trouble it is necessary to use a good liver medicine to eliminate the surplus bile from the system. St. Joseph's Liver Regulator (either liquid or pills) does it to perfection. Don't suffer all bilious troubles and you will feel better. Accept no substitute but insist on having the genuine St. Joseph's Liver Regulator. All druggists and dealers sell it, liquid or pills, a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, a box, five boxes for a dollar. Upchurch Drug Co.

ST OF MARRIAGES

People Try to See How Much Can Be Spent.

Story of Clergyman in London Who Was Out for All the Cash He Could Get—Some of Anecdotes He Would Furnish.

London.—Some of the fashionable weddings that have taken place lately seem to indicate that the people concerned were anxious to see how much money could be spent on the affair. In England the ceremony is much complicated. The most usual form of marriage is by "banns." Notice is sent to the clergyman of the church where the young couple desire to be married, the announcement being read out three Sundays running before the wedding day, and for this the bridegroom pays the clerk 50 cents. If neither of the parties live in this parish one or other of them must do so for three weeks before the ceremony can take place, but this condition is often evaded by the bridegroom taking a room for the period a stick or bag in it for the required time.

Of course, you have to pay the clergyman something for performing the ceremony for you, and the legal fee is $5, with 50 cents to the clerk, and a further 50 cents for a copy of the certificate of marriage, but each clergyman sets what he chooses, and some charge their services rather high.

Recently a young couple who live in Kensington decided to get married at one of the churches in the Strand, in order that this was a convenient central point for all their friends, and also near the Charing Cross station, from which they were starting for Paris immediately after the ceremony. It was to be a very quiet affair, no bridesmaids, no bouquets, no carriages, no red carpet, etc. On the fine morning the brides's father set off to find the incumbent of one of these London churches, an interview with a double-barreled name and, incidentally, a double-barreled lodging as well. After a great effort the father got him to talk about the marriage, and finally inquired the fee.

"The fee would be $25," said his reverence. "And, of course, you would have music? We supply that and that would be $5." The father was about to say something, when the padre began again:

"And you would like some red carpet and flowers, I suppose? We supply that also."

Then began the man out of whose pocket the money was to come for all these things—

"And if it's a wet day, you would require an awning," continued the clergyman. "We supply the awning and the charge would be $5."

"Oh," gasped the father, casting about in his mind for a way of escape, finally the other went on:

"And, of course, you would have flowers. My daughter always decorates the flowers, and I'm sure she would be delighted to do them for you."

Before the astonished father could reply, the clergyman rang the bell and requested the servant who answered it to ask "Miss Louie" to come down. "Miss Louie" duly arrived, and expressed herself enchanted at the prospect of doing the flowers for the wedding.

"Now, what do you think it would cost, dear?" asked her father. "Do you think you could do it for $25?"

At this last straw was laid on the unfortunate victim's back, he roused himself sufficiently to stammer that he must consult his daughter before making the final arrangements, and made for the door, intending to escape. But the clergyman had reserved a parting shot. He took up a small paper-covered book from the table, he said:

"This is a small book on the history of the church. I am sure your daughter would like to read all about it, as she is thinking of being married there."

"Thank you; I'll give it to her," said the unfortunate man.

"That will be 25 cents," said his reverence, and the unfortunate father threw the money on the table and fled for his life. Needless to say the marriage did not take place at his church.

SLAUGHTER GAME BIRDS

Wild Animals Become Serious Menace in Oregon—Plan for Extermination.

Caldfield, Ore.—Calvin Wright, one of the county's game wardens, gives it as his opinion that the worst enemy the game birds in this locality is the cat which has become wild. Mr. Wright has just returned from an extended trip up and down the coast country, and he declares that the cats are doing away with the game birds.

"This county is a great place for game both in the cities and the country districts, and they have increased with such rapidity that there are not birds sufficient for all of them. As a result the cats have become wild and run in the woods. Mr. Wright says that the increase of these semi-wild animals in the woods is much greater than would be imagined. He says that the cats not only break up birds' nests and kill or drive away the birds, but that they devour scores of the young before they are able to look after themselves.

"The matter has become the menace that Mr. Wright will take up the matter with State Game Warden Finley and will advocate the payment of a bounty for the killing of cats that are not properly confined.

Bald-Headed Musicians.

The important observation has been made that the blowers of wind instruments are invariably bald-headed, while the players on string are adorned with locks to make a Delilah's fingers itch, says Robert M. Gay in the Atlantic. The cornet, oboe, horn, trombone, tuba, bassoon have blown each of their heads as bare as sirocco and simoom the plains of Africa. But of what use heads, Tympano's is the baldest, the radiant scene beams out in the musical storm like the moon amid lurid clouds, and, I have no doubt, gives much confidence to the surrounding the musical sea. He is never at a loss. He glares at the score, with uncompromising attitude shows that he, at any rate, knows what it is all about. How admirable in him the possession as he screws up his kettle-drums, taps them gently, or, jingly, with critical ear inclined, allays their throbbings with unobtrusive palm. (And all this amid the cacophonic clanche of sound, like a man artistically tying his necktie while climbing down the Jungfrau.)

He Didn't Know Its Meaning.

"Once," said an old time actor, "I stood entranced in the wings while Charles Thorne was reading a classical spearean speech. Curiosity almost devoured me, but admiration held me. I knew he couldn't study out the meaning of a report of that speech, but he read it so well I had never heard it read before. I knew the meaning was crystal clear. When he came off, for dexterity I asked him what to the meaning of the speech. 'Well,' said he, 'that—' A long pause. 'No, it's this way.' A longer pause. 'Now, suppose—' But he that doesn't just express by words went on tangling himself up. Finally he turned to go and said: 'I don't know what it means, but it's a damned fine speech.'"

When O. Henry Lost Prestige.

Once, when exploring a factory district for story material, O. Henry invited a bright little girl to dine with him. She accepted on condition that she might bring a friend along. During dinner the writer sought to make his guests feel at ease by reciting in English to the extent of using "ain't" and "hadn't oughter" and a few other popular mutilations of the mother tongue.

He saw the little girl a few days later.

"I was awful mortified that night," she said. "You spoke so ungrammatical before my lady friend!"—Success Magazine.

BARBERS OF ANCIENT TIMES

Introduced Into Rome From Sicily. Their Shops Became the Resorts of the Fashionable.

Professional barbers are said to have been introduced into Rome by Messa from Sicily, of which island he was praetor in the days of Cicero. Under the empire their shops, in some instances, became fashionable resorts at which every luxury of the toilet was enjoyed, and the gossip and news of Rome and the empire were discussed. The means, luxury and weakness of personal adornment therein carried to excess is amply immortalized in the pages of Terence, Plautus, Horace, Juvenal and Martial. Other barber shops were more retired, as we learn from the annals of the Emperor Commodus, who, having wearied at times of the wholesale tragedies of the Coliseum, wherein armies and fleets engaged in murder at his savage behest, and being desirous of a little humorous diversion used, like the Caliph of Bagdad in the Arabian Nights, to disguise himself and sally forth accompanied by two or more of his favorites, and having hired a barber's shop suitable for his purpose would place one of his men at the door to solicit custom. Having secured a customer, the emperor-barber would politely affix the towel and apply the lather, all the time keeping up a running fire of the latest jests and little pleasantries until the customer and himself were almost overcome with laughter. Then the keen-edged razor would slip and among regrets and proffers of assistance the noseless victim would be assisted to the rear of the shop, where between threats and bribes he was kept from making a riot until one or two more victims were added to the number and Commodus, tired of his demoniac pleasantry, was ready to return to the palace or the arena.—Charles Winslow Hall in the National Magazine.

BABY PLANETS NUMEROUS

Asteroids, All Moving In Orbits Between Those of Mars and Jupiter, Number 659.

It is related that when the one hundredth asteroid, or minor planet, was discovered, many years ago, certain astronomers organized a celebration of the event and that while the solemnities were in preparation two or three more asteroids were picked out in the sky by the diligent observers.

These bodies, so far as recognized and officially mapped, now number 659. They all move in orbits between those of Mars and Jupiter and may be either the debris of a ruined planet or the results of an abortive attempt of nature to form a planet.

The development of astronomical photography has added large numbers of these minor planets to our lists. In the Harvard observatory at Arequipa, Peru, sixty-four separate asteroids were photographed between 1898 and 1901, and forty-seven of these were new discoveries.

As may be imagined, the number of these bodies is now so large that it is a difficult matter to tell whether one of them is new or is to be identified with a previous discovery. In several instances mistakes of this kind already have been made. The swarm of planetoids is a numerous one, and it has become a kind of astronomical sport to pursue them and pick them out.

As instruments become more powerful and methods more delicate the smaller bodies of the group will be detected one by one and added to our charts. The exact value of such discoveries to the science of astronomy, however, is somewhat problematical.

Taking Exercise.

The worst error of exercise, the most dangerous fad of physical culture, is not to take enough of it, and to sneer at every form that does not bear the dollar mark. By one of these cynical poetic justices of nature the very men who denounce all physical culture and recreation as fads are those who pay the heaviest personal penalty for this delusion. They use the vigor that they have gained to chain themselves in dungeonlike offices or airless workrooms twelve or fourteen hours a day. They "feel fine" and are sure they are going to live to be 100; but one day, to their astonishment, a little artery, whose coat has been hardened for twenty years unnoticed, becomes so brittle that it snaps suddenly—and down they go with a stroke of paralysis, like a winged duck. It is never safe to jeer at the gods, whether the imaginary ones of Olympus or the real ones of modern science.—Outing.

Capt. Bogardus again hits the Bull's Eye

This world famous rifle shot who holds championship record of 100 pigeons in 100 consecutive shots is living at Lincoln, Ill. Recently interviewed, he says, "I suffered a long time with kidney and bladder trouble and used several well known kidney medicines, all of which gave me no relief until I started taking Foley's Kidney Pills. Before I used Foley's Kidney Pills I had severe backaches and pains in my kidneys with suppression and a cloudy voiding. On arising in the morning I would get dull headaches. Now I have taken three bottles of Foley's Kidney Pills and feel 100 percent better. I am never bothered with my kidneys or bladder and again feel like my own self. Upchurch Drug co.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson IV.—Fourth Quarter, For Oct. 23, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Comprehensive Quarterly Review — Golden Text, Luke ix, 51—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

As the reviews thus far this year have not come at or near the end of the quarter, I feel led to do with this as with the last review and give the lessons and Golden Texts and then a summary of the teaching as probably the most profitable way to handle the fourteen lessons.

Third quarter:

No. 3. Peter's Confession. Matt. xvi, 13-28. G. T., Matt. xvi, 16.

No. 4. The Transfiguration. Matt. xvii, 1-8, 14-20. G. T., Matt. xvii, 5.

No. 5. Forgiveness. Matt. xviii, 21-35. G. T., Matt. vi, 14.

No. 6. On to Jerusalem. Matt. xix, 1, 2, 13-26. G. T., Matt. xix, 14.

No. 7. The Laborers. Matt. xx, 1-16. G. T., Matt. xix, 30.

No. 8. Nearing Jerusalem. Matt. xx, 17-34. G. T., Matt. xx, 28.

No. 9. Entering Jerusalem, Matt. xxi, 1-17. G. T., Matt. xxi, 9.

No. 10. Wicked Servants. Matt. xxi, 33-46. G. T., Matt. xxi, 43.

No. 11. Marriage Feast. Matt. xxii, 1-14. G. T., Matt. xxii, 14.

No. 12. Three Questions, Matt. xxii, 15-46. G. T., Matt. xxii, 21.

No. 13. Temperance, Gal. v, 15-26. G. T., Gal. v, 25.

Fourth quarter:

No. 1. Wise and Foolish, Matt. xxv, 1-13. G. T., Luke xii, 40.

No. 2. The Talents, Matt. xxv, 14-30. G. T., Matt. xxv, 21.

No. 3. Judgment of Nations, Matt. xxv, 31-46. G. T., Matt. xxv, 40.

We must keep before us in all these studies in Matthew that we are considering Jesus as the King of the Jews. As such He was born, and as such He was crucified (ii, 2; xxvii, 37). He is mentioned in chapter i, 1, as "Son of David, son of Abraham," and we need to remember the unconditional promises to both, all of which shall be fulfilled in due time. There are many who see in Jesus only a Saviour by whom they may reach heaven when they have to die, but such is not the revelation of Him in the Scriptures. He is the King of kings and Lord of lords, the prince of the king of the earth, before whom all kings shall fall down and whom all nations shall serve (1 Tim. vi, 15; Rev. xvii, 14; xix, 16; i, 5; Ps. lxxii, 11). The kingdom, which is to include all nations, with Israel as a righteous nation at the center, was plainly and fully revealed in the Old Testament and was preached by John and Jesus and the twelve and the seventy as at hand. That the Messiah of Israel should suffer before He should reign was also plainly stated and typified in the lives of Joseph, Moses, David and others, but that a long period, an age, should intervene between the sufferings and the glory was not revealed in the Old Testament. This is the mystery kept secret since the world began which was specially revealed to Paul (Rom. xvi, 25, 26; Eph. iii, 1-11; Col. i, 26, 27).

When Peter, by the Spirit of God, confessed Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God, then Jesus for the first time spoke of His church which He would build on that foundation truth. But Peter, not understanding the Scriptures nor the purpose of God, rebelled at the thought of Jesus' sufferings. Then our Lord taught that all disciples must be willing to suffer with Him, but that there would surely be a reward and that, though He and His followers were for a time to be content to suffer, the kingdom would surely come as shadowed forth in the great event of the transfiguration. With such a kingdom before us, made sure to us by a risen and glorified Christ, and having been made partakers of it by His great sufferings for us, by which we have the forgiveness of sins, we should walk worthy of such a kingdom, freely forgiving every one and by fasting and prayer overcoming the devil. As He steadfastly set His face toward Jerusalem, knowing all that awaited Him there, so we, His followers, must be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord (1 Cor. xv, 58). We must let His love constrain us to accept any manner of service gladly, not for reward, but in real gratitude to Him, quite certain that the Judge of all the earth will always do right. We should be inspired by the assurance that as truly as all the Scriptures concerning His humiliation were literally fulfilled, even to His riding upon an ass' colt, so literally will all that is written concerning His glory be fulfilled also. Therefore we should rely upon Him to keep these temples of our bodies wholly for Himself, cleansed by His word and Spirit, that He may bear through us the fruit He desires to His glory.

All that we may have to bear for His sake from ungrateful, unreasonable and even cruel people should be accepted as the necessary pruning of the branches in order to the bearing of more and better fruit unto Him. The flesh is to be reckoned dead, and we are to live in the Spirit, walk in the Spirit and be led by the Spirit, and thus show forth His praises. Being made ready for His call either to be absent from the body or to be caught up in the body at His coming for His saints by His righteousness freely given to us, may the Spirit so fill us that our light may so shine before men that they may glorify our Father.

This is an exact representation of the carton containing a bottle of St. Joseph's Liquid Liver Regulator, but it is much larger than this illustration, and printed in black ink on a yellow carton. Druggists and general merchants sell it at 50 cents a bottle, or you can get it direct from us at the same price. This is a delightful liver medicine—prompt, effective, and exceedingly pleasant to the taste. Try just one bottle to satisfy yourself—and you'll buy more.

-GOOD NEWS FOR THE FARMERS.

The much talked of season of hard times and business depression has failed to arrive; the prophecies of the chronic knocker are wanting in the fulfilment and the dire misfortunes predicted by the ever present calamity howler have died in the borning. Alabama, Chilton county and Clanton, instead of going to the bow wows, as forecasted by would-be-wise seers, has gone steadily onward upon the road of material development that leads to certain success and abundant prosperity.

We are enjoying the fruits of our labors as never before; the cry of poverty is hushed throughout this heaven-blessed section; on every side is heard the tuneful tones of thrift and prosperity. The frugal farmer will not have to draw upon the store house of the West for his corn supply, for the harvest will in our own fields is abundant in the extreme.

The cotton producer is satisfied with the results of his labors and the shining coin which high prices for his staple enables him to secure and jingle in his jeans, not only makes a gladsome sound to his ears, but fills his heart with joyful anticipations of a happy Christmas-tide. All things conspire to make his lot a pleasant one indeed.

The Chilton County Farmer is fast assuming that place in the economic relations of life which his avocation predestined him to occupy the front rank—a leader among the advance guard. Long faces have been succeeded by smiling countenances and mortgaged homes and farms are soon to become happy firesides and productive fields of pleasure. Hard times have been vanquished and prosperity is victorious.

Contentment, peace and plenty are knocking at every door.

We are now entering upon an era of commercial development never heretofore anticipated; a season of rich rewards for honest toil is now dawning and will soon burst with noonday splendor upon our people.

The farmers are happy as they should be, for mother earth has yielded them rich trophies for their plucking; prices are soaring amid the radiant beauty of the stars; his products are in demand as never before.

Cotton is again King and corn is the Prince Imperial. What more could the planter desire to make his cup of gladness overflow?

Desiring to have you make our place headquarters, we have arranged to pay the very top notch for every pound of the fleecy staple brought to our store.

We want to have a hand in your prosperity; we wish to be remembered in your rejoicing.

Come to us with your sample, we will top the market on every occasion; call upon us for your wants, our large and varied stock enables us to meet your every requirement and at prices that will make glad for the visit.

We hate the chronic croker, we despise the knocker and the pessimist. The old world is bright with hope, buoyant with success, happy in plentcous abundance. We want you to know that we rejoice at your season of success, you desire it and we hope you will enjoy it to the fullest extent.

Come to see us your happy faces make us glad indeed.

Come whether you want to buy or sell, both or either or neither. We will be glad to greet you.

We are going to set the gait this year and those who would keep up with us must clip it off at a merry chase.

Cordially yours,

Farmers of Chilton County, we greet you as the two fold keepers and producers of our prosperity. You are they who have produced the wealth of our Country and upon your heads we pour our praises in unstinted measure. You have earned your reward and should enjoy the fruits of your labors.

The Merchant who has bought wisely and well rejoices at your success,

The cotton buyer whose heart beats in unison with your own delight in the oportunity afforded him to give you good prices for your staple; he who would with hold from you the best and highest the market affords is neither a friend to the farmer nor a wise man of business.

We want you to succeed, because in your success we also shall share.

We have bought not stingily but well; we have purchased in keeping with your position and your desire; you want the best, therefore we supplied ourselves with the best that we might accommodate both your taste and your demands.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Slights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not

We are sorry to say we are late with this issue of the Banner and it is quite unavoidable. It is easy for any one to write a piece of stuff and mail it to Birmingham where it is put into type at the same printing office—Kellar can, Democrat or Socialist—are treated alike, so long as the cash is for the coming to pay for it, but a county printing office with limited help can do so much and no more, and sometimes gets behind, as we are this week.

We are obliged to omit the list of election officers until next week and a number of communications. There is no political significance in this—no selling out but it simply cannot be helped.

Among other things left out is a reply to an artile in the Clanton Press (printed in Birmingham) in which he speaks of other people selling out, and he does not know the price paid. Well bless your soul, there is a whole lot he does not know, although he has claimed to know much about running a newspaper than any other man since the days of Adam, he says he knows more law than all the Judges that have ever lived; and in short, what he knows and what he does not know would fill many volumes.

We know that about eight months ago he was boasting to some people in Clanton that he was going to start a Democratic paper with the support of all the Democratic leaders, and would run The Banner out of town in two months. We waited to find out how much truth there was in his boasting, and finding that without one solitary exception the Democratic "leaders" had abandoned The Banner and gone to the hero from the black hills we decided it was time to test our faith in old friends and there is no question but that our faith was justified. There is no buying and no selling. If the Record published last fall by the editor of The Press, did not sell itself to the cause of the amendment for the price of the puplication of the governor's proclamation we are much mistaken, at any events the Record ceased about the time the amount was exhausted, but we have no time to talk more now; the first side of The Banner is just printed and we have to go to work to get the second side off.

We have simply expressed our belief in the victory of the Republicans in this county and in less than two weeks that belief will be justified.

NOTICE

I have compared the poll with the list of registrated voters as best I could, but I am sure that there are some names that ought to be on the list that are not on. Hence I make this statement, intending to get those who are qualified on the list, all who have registered and have paid poll tax in any other beat, all who have paid their poll tax, using sometimes their own name, and sometimes their initials.

In fact, if there is any difference in any of your poll tax receipts you will write me, or come to my office, I will take pleasure in putting your name on the list, if you are entitled to be on it.

If you have paid a poll tax in any other county, the law requires you to get a certificate from the Judge of Probate in that county and file with the Probate Judge here, in order to get on the list.

However, if you are not on the poll list, and are challenged on the day of election, as the law requires you can take the affidavit and

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositer. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

PEOPLES SAVINGS BANK
CLANTON, ALA.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but these who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Clanton, Ala., Oct. 24, 1910

Mr. F. M. Wood,
Publisher Clanton Press.
Clanton, Ala,

Dear Sir:—I have read an article in your paper of Oct. 20, in which Mr. Porter says that he met me in the hall of the Court House and that I asked him to support me. This is not true, neither have I ever seen Mr. Porter and Mr. Middleton together, nor did I ask Mr. Porter to support me

In regard to the letter puplished by you I wish to say that my information is, Mr. Porter never saw the letter until it appeared in print in your paper. That Mr. Arkie Mahan carried this letter to Mr. Porter and tried to get Mr. Porter to sign it and Mr. Porter refused to sign the letter. I have not seen Mr. Porter about this letter but several good men have told me that Mr. Porter says that this letter does not speak the truth and that he did not sign it.

I would like to see some one get Mr. Porter to swear to this letter, or to even get Mr. Arkie Mahan to swear that Mr. Porter ever signed such a letter. It appears that this letter was written here in Clanton and carried to Mr. Porter for his signature—but Mr. Porter refused to sign it. The same set that wrote this letter was after another man who could not read nor write to let them fix up another letter for him to sign. Now Mr. Wood, will you say that the above is not true?

Well, I have had some experience in public affairs, but I must say that the Clanton Peees went lower down in the mire last week than I ever knew any one to go, and I am very sorry that I am called upon to answer such rot.

You say that I can not spell correctly, unfortunately for me this is true, and it is to be regreted that I did not have the chance to go to school when I was a boy. I was but a child at the close of the war. My father who served in this war returned to his humble home carrying a leapen ball weighing about two and a half ounces embeded in his eye. This heavy ball of lead he carried for over forty-eight years and until it was removed by Dr. Thigpen at Montgomery a short while since. Those who knew my father knew that he has been practically an invalid since his return from the war. I being the oldest child it was necessary for me to remain at home work and help support our family. Some how I did get to go to school for about six months, and have tried to do the best that I could under the circumstances, and while I can not spell correctly like you—Mr. Wood—yet I do manage to get my words down so that they can be understood.

Again the publisher of the Clanton Press says that I did not meet the preacher when he came, meaning himself. No I did not get a brass band and go to meet Brother Wood when he first arrived in Clanton. He also says that I did not attend his church and conferences as I aught to have done. Well I have had all kind of charges brought against me, but when I am charged with not meeting the preacher at the train, this is the limit—I presume they must have hit the bottom.

Now Brother Wood, if you should decide to try preaching again after your failure in politics and you were to be our preacher—I

CRIPPEN HAS BEEN SENTENCED TO DEATH

But Ray of Hope Dawns For Condemned Man.

TRIAL LASTED FOR FIVE DAYS

Believed Jury Secretly Recommended Life Sentence—Strong Prejudice in England Against Hanging on Circumstantial Evidence.

Dr Hawley Harvey Crippen, after a trial extending over five days, and thirty minutes' deliberation by the jury, was found guilty, at London, of the murder of his wife, an American woman, known on the stage as Belle Elmore. Lord Chief Justice Alverstone, who presided at the trial, sentenced Crippen to be hanged on November 15th.

There is, however, the strongest prejudice in England against executing a man on purely circumstantial evidence, and an incident at the close of Crippen's trial has caused the impression that the jury may have recommended a life sentence. After Crippen was sentenced to death the foreman of the jury handed to the lord chief justice a note, after looking at which the justice said:

"That shall be forwarded to the proper quarter."

"The proper quarter" might mean the home secretary, who has jurisdiction in such matters. The jurors refused to discuss the incident.

The jury was out just thirty minutes. When it returned and announced that it had found the defendant guilty, Lord Chief Justice Alverstone asked the physician if he had anything to say. Crippen replied in a low voice:

"I still protest my innocence."

The chief justice then donned the black cap and pronounced the sentence of death.

ASK LOWER FREIGHT RATES.

South Carolina Railroad Commission Will Hear Important Case.

One of the most important matters ever coming up before the South Carolina railroad commission is that of deciding whether the port of Charleston has been "bottled up" by the railroads.

One hundred and thirteen cotton mills of South Carolina have filed a petition asking for a reduction of freight rates from Columbia, Spartanburg and Greenville sections to the port of Charleston. The petitioners ask for a commodity rate of 20 cents on carload lots and 22 cents on all other shipments of cotton goods from the South Carolina mill points embraced: the Greenville group and the Spartanburg group to Charleston, and a commodity rate of 16 cents on carload lots and a like rate of 18 cents on all other shipments of cotton goods from the Columbia mills to Charleston, making a tariff of rates from the other mill points in the state to Charleston, upon that basis.

The railroads claim that with the increased demands for efficiency of service a reduction would do great harm.

ATLANTA'S NEW P. O.

Great Building Opened for Business—Complete in Every Particular.

Postmaster Hugh L. McKee and his men were settled Monday in the new post office and custom house building. All deliveries Monday were made from the new building and all letters received were mailed there.

Every department of the postoffice has moved into the new building and is open for business.

One of the busiest persons in the new building Monday was the clerk who has charge of the letter boxes. Throughout Monday morning he was kept hard at it distributing keys to the boxes.

An inspection of the new building, or as much of it as could be seen was made Sunday by quite a crowd. The verdict of every one was that the new building could not be handsomer.

Several are claiming the honor of having mailed the first letter at the new building. Among these are R. F. Shedden.

Only United States Judge Newman, the United States clerks, district attorney and marshal now remain in the old building.

AWARDED $5,000 DAMAGES.

Unique Suit Tried in City Court of Gadsden.

One of the most unique damage suits ever tried in Gadsden, Ala., was decided in the city court when Mrs. Lela Ashley was awarded a verdict of $5,000 against K. K. McMahan, who is now serving a life sentence in the penitentiary for the murder of Mrs. Ashley's husband, Sam Ashley. The crime was committed the night of January 23, 1909, after the two men left a dance hall together. Ashley's body was found the next day on the side of the road leading to his home.

At the trial McMahan testified that the two had entered into a suicide pact and that Ashley accidentally shot himself while handing a pistol to McMahan. The court charged the jury in the case that the survivor in a suicide pact, when one party already had committed the act, was guilty of murder.

HEALTH OF THE ARMY.

Annual Report of Surgeon General Torney.

According to the annual report of Surgeon General Torney, the general health of the United States army has shown a steady improvement for several years. The non-effective rate, which is regarded as the true measure of the loss in efficiency from sickness and injury, was 41.48 per 1,000 during the past fiscal year, as compared with 42.63 for 1908, 46.17 for 1907, and 49.79 for 1906.

The total number of deaths from all causes during the past year was 370, of which 228 were due to disease and 142 to external causes. The admission rate for disease for 1909 was 865.92 per 1,000 men of strength, a constant improvement since 1899.

General Torney reports that the health of the American troops in the Philippines continues to improve year by year.

Considerable progress has been made during the year in the campaign for the protection of the army against typhoid fever by means of vaccination.

PROMINENT GEORGIAN CLAIMED BY DEATH

Solicitor Charles D. Hill Has Answered Last Call.

WAN NOTED AS A LAWYER

While Addressing a Jury in the Superior Court of Fulton County Well Known Georgian Was Stricken with Fatal Illness.

After lingering for three days between life and death, Solicitor General Charles Dougherty Hill, a prominent Georgian, an able jurist, a faithful citizen, came to his end at his home, 664 Piedmont avenue, Atlanta, Ga., on Friday morning.

It was while making a speech to a jury in the superior court room on Tuesday morning that Mr. Hill was seized with an attack of indigestion. He was taken immediately to his residence and sank into an unconscious state, remaining that way until Thursday morning, when he appeared to be improving. He seemed to know his friends and talked a few moments to Miss Ridley, of LaGrange.

In the afternoon he again lapsed into a comatose condition and continued to sink lower and lower until life departed.

At the bedside during the last moments were Judge Benjamin H. Hill, of the court of appeals, his brother; Mrs. Benjamin H. Hill, Harvey Hill, his son, and the attending physicians, Drs. Ellis and Goldsmith, and Ridley, of LaGrange.

Seldom has Georgia produced a more brilliant speaker, a harder student of law, a more successful criminal practitioner, a more conscientious public prosecutor than Charles Dougherty Hill, the youngest son of the Hon. Benjamin Harvey Hill, one of Georgia's greatest statesmen—whose oratory carried his hearers off their feet and whose logic convinced all who heard him.

"Like father, like son," is an old proverb, but true in his case.

BELIEVED SHIP LOST.

Total Loss of Sixty-Four Lives Is Reported.

That two steamers plying between New Orleans and Central and South American ports sank probably in the Yucatan channel during the recent severe storm, with a total loss of sixty-four lives, is the belief in shipping circles at New Orleans.

The vessels believed to have been wrecked are the British steamer Crown Prince, Captain R. Kirkwood, with a crew of thirty-five, and the Bluefields, of Norwegian register, Captain C. M. Lange, with twenty-nine souls aboard, including, beside the crew, Captain Lange's wife.

The Crown Prince, which sailed from Santos, with a cargo of 75,000 bags of coffee, was last reported on October 7 at Barbados. She was due here Sunday. She is of 2,535 tons gross register, 325 feet long, and is owned by the Prince line, limited, Newcastle.

The Bluefields sailed from Ceiba, Spanish Honduras, on Friday of last week, with a cargo of bananas valued at $14,000. She is of 1,002 tons gross register, and was chartered by Haccarro Brothers, of New Orleans.

The steamer Crib, which was ahead of the Bluefields when the storm struck her, was blown 300 miles out of her course. The Crib had the open sea in which to make her fight for safety, whereas the Bluefields undoubtedly was struck by the full force of the hurricane before she reached the open.

The Missouri Pacific Railroad Company has been fined from $10 to $25 each on twenty-four counts for violating the sixteen-hour law by Judge D. P. Dyer in the federal court at Jefferson City, Mo. These were the first cases in this court under the new law. The evidence indicated that employees were working overtime from ten minutes to one hour.

The state of Massachusetts has a population of 3,366,416, according to the enumeration made in the thirteenth census, as announced by the director of the census today. This is an increase of 561,070, or 20 per cent, over the population of 1900, when the total was 2,805,346. The increase from 1890 to 1900 was 566,402, or 25.2 per cent.

DAVID B. HILL HAS PASSED AWAY

Had Been Prominent In New York Politics.

FORMER GOVERNOR OF STATE

Deceased Statesman Had Been Ill for Three Weeks, but His Condition Was Not Regarded as Critical, and the End Came Quite Suddenly.

Former Governor of New York and ex-Senator David B. Hill died at his home, Wolfert's Roost, near Albany, N. Y., on Thursday.

He had been ill nearly three weeks with a cold and a bilious attack, but his condition had not been considered serious. He was sitting up in bed to take a drink of water when he was seized with an acute dilation of the heart. Death quickly followed, with no one but a nurse at his bedside.

Hill a Sufferer for Years.

Mr. Hill had long been a sufferer from Bright's disease, which primarily brought upon him the condition that ended in his death.

Although he retired from active participation in politics following the presidential election of 1904, Senator Hill was deeply interested in the progress of the present campaign. As late as Friday of last week he discussed the situation with Judge Parker, who was then preparing to make a tour of the state in the interest of the democratic ticket.

Senator Hill had entertained many men distinguished in state and national politics at Wolfert's Roost and his guests always found him a most hospitable host.

Flags at Half-Mast.

Governor White issued a proclamation requesting that all the flags on public buildings be displayed half-mast until sundown on the day of Senator Hill's funeral, and that the citizens of the state unite in appropriate marks of respect to his memory.

JULIA WARD HOWE DEAD.

Noted Philanthropist and Author Passes Away at 91.

Julia Ward Howe is dead. Bowed under the weight of her 91 years, the noted philanthropist and author succumbed, at Middleton, R. I., to an attack of pneumonia. The end came peacefully in her summer home here. Her three daughters were at the bedside, when Mrs. Howe passed away, but her son was absent. The funeral will be held at the Church of the Disciples, Unitarian, in Boston, Thursday.

Those who knew her intimately said that Mrs. Howe's unfailing optimism was the general source and support of her manifold activities. Born in a cultured home in New York city and educated with care, she showed early a remarkable avidity for study and superior literary tastes.

She was but twenty-two years of age when she came to Boston and met Dr. Samuel Gridley Howe, the great philanthropist, and two years after they were married. From that time until Dr. Howe's death, in 1876, this remarkable couple showed a never tiring co-partnership of activity in all things making for the uplift of mankind.

BIG CONFLAGRATION.

Oil Tank Catches Fire—Blaze Spreads to Buildings.

A fire which started in the Chicago and Alton freight houses on the river front and which spread rapidly to neighboring structures of like character, caused a loss of more than $500,000 at East St. Louis, Ill.

The blaze was of no significance when discovered, but it soon spread to ten tank cars of oil, which exploded, hurling blazing fluid in all directions.

The oil set fire to the Baltimore and Ohio freight warehouses, covering a block. A score of oil tanks in it exploded with a roar that was heard for miles.

A hotel and row of boarding houses were also destroyed. No loss of life has been reported.

A SAD TRAGEDY.

Little Son Kissed Dead Mother and Wept in Silence.

Cuddled close to the body of his murdered mother, three-year-old Johnny Bothwell, 2621 Titan street, Philadelphia, slept fitfully. All day long he had kissed her upturned face and smoothed her hair. Though he was hungry, he was careful to make no noise. He thought she was ill and sleeping.

When the neighbors broke into the house little Johnny was crying under the bed on which the body of his mother lay. "Mamma is sick and I am hungry," he told them. They examined the upturned face and saw a bullet had found its way through the temple of Mrs. Bothwell.

In the kitchen was her husband, John Bothwell, with a bullet in his brain. Under a book in the dining room was this note, signed by the husband and father:

"I have lived and endured just as long as I can. Mary was running around at night, neglecting me and the child. I am sorry that I have to do this, but it looks to me to be the only way out of it. Get the shame of this over as soon as you can. I know people will talk and blame me, but I had good provocation for all that I did."

FRAUDS IN CENSUS.

Government Secures Evidence in Regard to Number of Cities.

A Washington dispatch says:

Staggered by the enormous growth shown by the returns of the new census for a number of western cities, Director Durand, of the census bureau, ordered an investigation, the result of which appeared in the announcement that gross frauds had been perpetrated. Mr. Durand gave out also a letter from President Taft, directing that persons implicated in the alleged frauds should be prosecuted.

Cities specifically mentioned as being affected by the frauds are: Tacoma, Seattle and Aberdeen, Wash.; Portland, Ore.; Minneapolis, Minn., and Boise, Idaho, and Fort Smith, Ark., but it is stated that there are many others.

The result of a second enumeration of Tacoma, Wash., was announced. The city shows a population of 82,972, an increase of 45,258, or 120 per cent over the population of 1900.

The first figures turned in for Tacoma were 116,248. In other words, the actual population was padded to the extent of 34,296, which would have meant a further addition of 40 per cent.

WORLD'S LARGEST SHIP.

Olympic Is 100 Feet Larger Than the Largest Vessel Now in Service.

The first of the two mammoth White Star liners, the Olympic, was launched successfully amid scenes of much enthusiasm at Belfast, Ireland. In accordance with the custom of the White Star, there was no christening ceremonies.

The new vessel is of 45,000 tons. She has been building for 22 months and it will be eight months longer before she is ready for her trial trip. The Olympic is a triple screw steamer, her principal dimensions being length over-all 882 1-2 feet; breadth over-all 92 1-2 feet; height from bottom to keel to top of captain's house 105 1-2 feet. She exceeds by nearly 100 feet in length and by 13,000 tons any other ship afloat, and if stood on end would over-top the Metropolitan tower in New York by 182 feet. This is four times as long as Bunker Hill monument is high.

The Olympic will accommodate 2,500 passengers and a crew of 860.

2,500 WALK OUT.

Strike on Missouri Pacific-Iron Mountain System.

Approximately 2,500 men employed in the mechanical trades on the Missouri Pacific-Iron Mountain system walked out in sympathy with the striking machinists. The order to quit work was telegraphed to the boiler makers, blacksmiths and pipemen by the heads of their international union after the machinists had failed to settle their trouble with General Manager Sullivan, of the Missouri Pacific.

The principal shops of the roads are located at Sedalia, Mo., and Little Rock, Ark. Shops are also maintained at many other points, including Texarkana, Paragould, Van Buren and McGhee, Ark.; Lake Charles and Ferriday, La.

The union men say that the road will not be able to operate their locomotives more than a week without the men who quit work.

Falconio, the apostolic delegate to the United States, will be raised to the cardinalate at the next meeting of the consistory. While the Vatican refuses to deny or confirm the report, it is generally regarded as a fact that America will be given a larger representation in the college of cardinals than she now has. Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, is now the only American member.

During the last few days sixteen new cases of cholera have developed in Italy. Eleven deaths from the disease occurred during the same period.

An attempt was made to assassinate Major General Pino Guerra, commander of the Cuban army at Havana. General Guerra was leaving the presidential palace, when he was shot in the leg and seriously wounded. A sentry on guard at the palace gate was also shot, the bullet striking him in the breast. The assailant, who was captured, proved to be a member of the national secret police. The cause of the murderous attack is not known.

Dobbling de Crabs.

In the service of a Baltimore family is an old negro cook known as Aunt Sally, and not the least of her achievements is the preparation of sea food.

In the kitchen one day Aunt Sally's nephew, a nine-year-old lad from a point where crabs are seldom seen, was watching in breathless interest the old lady's devilling of a dish of such crustaceans.

"Aunty," asked he after much reflection upon this mysterious point, "does debbil crabs come from de debbil?"

"No, chile," promptly responded Aunt Sally, "but dey is de debbil to make."—St. Louis Republic.

"No. Through some mistake they seated me next to my husband."—Chicago Record-Herald.

After The Grippe

"I am much pleased, to be able to write and thank you for what Cardui has done for me," writes Mrs. Sarah J. Gilliland, of Siler City, N. C.

"Last February, I had the Grippe, which left me in bad shape. Before that, I had been bothered with female trouble, for ten years, and nothing seemed to cure it.

"At last, I began to take Cardui. I have taken only three bottles, but it has done me more good than all the doctors or than any other medicine I ever took."

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

For the after-effects of any serious illness, like the Grip, Cardui is the best tonic you can use.

It builds strength, steadies the nerves, improves the appetite, regulates irregularities and helps bring back the natural glow of health.

Cardui is your best friend, if you only knew it.

Think of the thousands of ladies whom Cardui has helped. What could possibly prevent it from helping you? Remember you cannot get the benefit of the Cardui ingredients in any other medicine, for they are not for sale in any drug store except in the Cardui bottle. Try Cardui.

would be shyer of you then than I was last year. I have been a member of my church for over twenty years, and confess that I have not done my duty as fully as I should have done. I have tried to be loyal and to do the best that I could. I have no wings, but when you have grown a full set and shall have flown away—mine will be sprouting some. I want to make it clear to you Brother Wood that I have not since I reached my majority, asked any one which church I might attend or if I might go to Sunday School, and if I wish to attend Sunday School Conventions and singings it is none of your business.

Mr. Wood says that he has forgotton more law than I or the one who wrote him a certain letter ever knew. I am not surprised at his forgetfulness—he even forgot to publish that letter after asking permission to do so. He seems to have read it however in the Union and the Banner. No Brother Wood I do not profess to be as smart and good as you are—I would not stay in Clanton, I would go where there was more room for my tellent.

At the outset of this campaign I requested my friends not to resort to low politics, and I want to thank them for the manly and gentlemanly in which they have acted. I want to thank my frignds and say that it affords me pleasure to know that not one word against Mr Deason has appeared in print from them and I hope there will not. I have tried to defend myself and the good people of this county against the attacks made and the efforts made by you to put us on a level with the negro simply because you claim to blong to a different party. Speaking of your party reminds me that I want to ask you a question—are you a qualified voter? Can you vote a democratic or any other ticket in the coming election? Though you may have registered in Chilton county—have you paid your poll tax each year?

A gooddeal is being said as to why you, as secretary should oppose the appointment of such men as Dr. E. A. Mathews, W. I. Mullins, Dr. V. J. Gragg, B. F. Higgins, Jr., J. M. Morgan, J. P. VanDerveer, W. H. Sattor, J. M. Potts Dr. P. I. Hopkins and others to assist in the management of the coming election. Why was Mr Wm. M. Adams accosted by you in the Post Office Mr. F. A. Gulledge of Verbena as a member of the Board? Why was it that you wanted one or two particular men appointed?

Something has been said about the Republicans not being willing to divide time with Democratic speakers. I want to say that I will divide time with any gentleman who may ask it PROVIDED he shall have written authority from Mr. E. B. Deason that he is representing him.

Now Brother Wood there was no brass band to meet you when you came to Clanton, But may be the Demorrats will escort you to the train when you go to leave and that we may hear this refrain—

"Show pity Lord, Oh Lord forgive, Let this poor man return to Dallas and live."

L. H. REYNOLDS.

DIZZINESS—DO YOU HAVE IT?

This is caused by the bile being reabsorbed into the circulation. To get rid of this trouble it is necessary to use a good liver medicine to eliminate the surplus bile from the system. St. Joseph's Liver Regulator (either liquid or powders) does it to perfection. Use it for all bilious troubles and you will soon feel better. Accept no substitute, but insist on having the genuine St. Joseph's Liver Regulator. Drug gists and dealers sell it, liquid, 50c a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25c a box, five boxes for a dollar. Preferred Life to Leg.

To save his life from an approaching train C. H. Vandecar, a Michigan Central brakeman, pulled his leg out of its socket and broke his ankle in the attempt to throw his body from the rails. Vandecar was switching at Denmark Junction the other morning when his leg became caught between the crossing plank and the rail. He could not release it and the approaching train bore down on him with just enough time to allow him to give the captured leg a tremendous wrench for freedom.

The "Sting" of Death.

The sting of death physically is nothing; a man who has lost consciousness in the water, a man who has been under an anaesthetic, a man stunned in an accident—these have been in effect dead, and yet they know nothing of death. In speaking of it the most glaring contradictions pass quite naturally for axioms. It is the "gentle hand," but it is also the "grisly terror." It is "beautiful" and "wonderful," but it is also "terrible."—London Spectator.

LOW CASTE MANGS.

Hindus Not Only Despise Them, They Fear and Hate Them.

By his fellow Hindu the Mang, one of the lowest of all Indian castes, is not only despised, but even feared and hated. A writer in the Times of India says: "To be cruel is to be 'Mang hearted;' to fly into a passion may be expressed in Marathe idiom as having a Mang within one. When on the occasion of an eclipse fears are awakened for the safety of the sun or moon, it is the Mang whose help is sought. He goes among the people claiming their propitiatory gifts, saying: 'Give your gifts that the grasp may be removed. For are not Rahu and Ketu, the enemies who have laid evil hands on the heavenly bodies, themselves Mangs?' Similarly, to their recognized relation with 'dark' worship and with subterranean and demoniac influences is to be traced the making of offerings to Mang women on Dasera day and the sinister fact that there are few great buildings erected in pre-British days in this part of India that have not—whether they be temples or forts or palaces—Mang victims built into their foundations.

"The peculiar place that these popular superstitions have given to the Mang community is seen especially in the ceremonies that are sometimes performed for the removal of disease. Frequently when some one has fallen ill a Joshi is consulted and explains the illness as due to the influence of some evil spirit. The one effective prescription in such a case is to call a Mang and give him a dinner. This is not by any means an act of friendliness toward a despised community, but has as its object apparently the propitiation of the demeniac power and the removal of the source of the disease from the sick man to its proper habitation.

"With this end in view practices of sympathetic magic, which can be paralleled in the folk lore of many peoples, are employed. Portions of the finger nails or, it may be, fragments of hair of the invalid are secretly mixed with the food to be given to the Mang, and before the sugar water of which he is to partake is given to him the sick man must see his face in it. In this way the evil is supposed to be passed back to where it properly belongs and the disease removed.

STAGE REALISM.

Why Jefferson Didn't Have a Dog Schneider In the Flesh.

It was the privilege of the writer years ago to attend a reception at which Joseph Jefferson spoke on the drama. His treatment of the subject was interesting, the utterance of a man who knew the art of which he spoke. But the most interesting part of the hour came after the completion of the formal address, when an opportunity was given to the audience to ask any questions they wished of Mr. Jefferson. Soon the familiar topic was introduced, the effect of the modern elaboration and realism in stage setting. Mr. Jefferson at once rose to the question. He spoke somewhat rapidly, with a quaint humor and sympathetic charm that were irresistible. He characterized the modern fashion of stage setting as "a tribute to the weakness of the human imagination." "I am often asked," he went on, "why I do not have a real dog Schneider. But if I did none of you would be satisfied. You would go home saying, 'Well, Schneider never looked like that dog!' You love Schneider because you have made him out of a piece of your own heart. And then," meditatively, "if I had a real Schneider some one in the gallery would probably whistle to him at the critical moment, and he would bark and spoil the play, while if he knew his part perfectly and did just what Schneider ought to do"—pausing and with his delightful smile—"Schneider would be the hero and not Rip!" Then, with a twinkle of the eye, he summed up the whole matter with the quiet remark, "Realism with a tail to wag in the wrong place is a dangerous thing."—New York Post.

A Servile House of Lords.

When King Henry VIII.'s name was spoken in his presence in the house of lords every peer prostrated himself with Asiatic servility. An entry in the records of the house gives the substance of a speech delivered by the chancellor on Jan. 16, 1541, in which the king's goodness and wisdom are extolled, and it tells us that whenever his majesty was mentioned, "which happened often," all the lords prostrated themselves, bowing to the ground as one man.

FOOLED HIM BADLY.

Now He Kicks on Letters Written in the Third Person.

In one of the Paris restaurants a party of literary men were discussing the merits of various epistolary styles. One of them, Monsieur A., made a fierce attack on letters written in the third person, such as "Monsieur X. has the honor to inform"—and so on. Another of the party defended them, maintaining that they were not only more ceremonious, but that they were more polite.

"That's a good idea," replied Monsieur A. "The foundation of all politeness in letter writing is to express clearly what you mean to say. Now, nothing can be more ambiguous than these confounded notes in the third person. I will just tell you what happened to myself. I received from my friend D., the chief of division, a billet doux, which I will show you."

Taking the note from his pocket, Monsieur A. read as follows:

"Monsieur D., chief of division at the war office, hastens to inform his friend, Monsieur A., that he has just been named chevalier of the Legion of Honor."

"You can fancy my delight at reading this note," continued Monsieur A. "I was the happiest man in the world. I ran to an engraver and ordered him to make the flattering addition to my cards, 'Monsieur A., Chevalier of the Legion of Honor.' I ran to a mercer's and bought a piece of the richest red ribbon for my buttonhole. I ran to the houses of my friends for the pleasure of receiving their congratulations. At last I ran to my friend D.'s. As soon as I caught sight of him I threw myself into his arms. 'Ah, my dear fellow,' I exclaimed, 'you have no idea what pleasure you have given. How shall I ever thank you sufficiently?'

"'You are an excellent fellow, my worthy A., to sympathize thus with my happiness.'

"'Thank you for that expression; the decoration is mine, and the happiness is yours.'

"'How is that? Have you received the order?'

"'Certainly; have I not?'

"'No, my good friend; 'tis I who am now made chevalier.'

"'You?'

"'Yes. You deserve the honor more than I do, but, nevertheless, it has been conferred on me.'

"'But you wrote me word that I had received the cross.' I took his letter out of my pocket and showed it him. Alas! I now understood clearly what meaning I ought to assign to the ambiguous phrase. 'The deuce take you and your note,' I said to D. 'Instead of your affected and formal announcement in the third person, why could you not write to me simply and plainly, "My dear friend, I have the pleasure of informing you that I now am décore chevalier?"'"

Quakers Never "Nervous."

It is not in my memory that a professing Quaker ever came into my hands to be treated for nervousness. If the opinion I have already stated so often is correct, namely, that want of control of the emotions and the overexpression of the feelings are prime causes of nervousness, then the fact that discipline of the emotions is a lesson early and constantly taught by Friends would help to account for the infrequency of this disorder among them and add emphasis to the belief in such causation.—From "Self Help For Nervous Women," by Dr. Kearsley Mitchell.

A Remarkable Man.

John Ziska, the great Hussite leader of the fifteenth century, was one of the most remarkable men that ever lived. His life story reads like a romance. Nothing in history is more interesting, more thrilling, than the account of his heroic deeds. Though blind and always greatly outnumbered, Ziska invariably beat his enemies and established for himself a fame that will last forever. He was never beaten in a battle. His very name was a terror to his enemies. He died in 1424, while besieging Prazabislaw, at the age of sixty-four.—New York American.

Forced to leave home.

Every year a large number of poor sufferers whose lungs are sore and racked with coughs are urged to go to another climate. But this is costly and not always sure. There is a better way. Let Dr. King's new Discovery cure you at home.

PEACH LEAF CURL.

Causes and Remedies Discussed in Cornell University Bulletin.

Bulletin 270 of the Cornell university agricultural experiment station gives the distribution, cause and control of that common disease known as the peach curl.

No peach seems immune to the disease, and most growers report that the Elberta is the most susceptible to it.

The symptoms are easily recognized. The leaves become not only almost badly swollen, thickened and distorted, but curl and become sickly yellow in color, often tinted with red. After a few weeks these leaves fall from the trees, in severe cases leaving them nearly or quite denuded of foliage and that at a time of the year when the tree can ill afford to lose them. It is true that a new crop of leaves is soon produced, but this effort of nature to repair the loss is a heavy drain on the vitality of the tree. The disease often affects the shoots, causing them to swell and cease growth and even in some cases kills them.

This disease is caused by a fungus that lives as a parasite in the affected parts. It enters the young leaves and shoots very early in the development and opening of the bud in the spring.

[Illustration showing the rolled leaves upon a young peach tree in late summer as a result of previous winter injury to the bark of the main root just below the collar. This same appearance may be brought about by yellows, borers and severe mechanical injury or girdling.—Photograph From Bulletin New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station.]

For this reason all efforts to control it are most effective if made before the buds begin to swell in the spring.

The important factors in the control of this disease seem to be (1) time of application, (2) thoroughness and (3) the fungicide used. This statement represents also the order of importance of these three factors.

The time of the application is any time within a month before the buds begin to swell and before rain periods, not after.

The test of thorough work is to find no buds on the trees that are entirely covered with an evenly distributed coat of the spray mixture.

The fungicide may be one of several. Repeated experiments have shown that Bordeaux mixture 5-5-50 to 3-4-50 will control peach leaf curl. Lime sulphur, home boiled, or commercial concentrate of almost any brand is also equally effective.

In the orchards where there is San Jose scale it has been found that spraying for the scale with the lime sulphur also controls the peach leaf curl. This result has been verified at the Georgia experiment station, for before winter spraying became necessary to control the San Jose scale, some leaf curl was discovered in the orchards. However, as soon as regular winter spraying was practiced the leaf curl disappeared.

Spoons.

The origin of the spoon is uncertain. It must have been invented at a very ancient date, for it is found among people that have never come into contact with civilization. The necessity of having some implement for dipping water seems to have led first to the invention of the calabash or the use of the cocoanut shell and later on to the spoon.

The Important Passenger.

"Are you the owner of this place?" asked the book agent.

"I am," replied Farmer Cumrox. "Anything I can do for you?"

"No. The chances are that you are too hard worked to have time to read anything and that you haven't any spare change anyhow. Let me talk to the hired man."—Washington Star.

Beat 14, Pleasant Grove, Thursday, October 27th, 7 p.m.
Beat 6, Huett's Schoolhouse Friday, October 28th, 7 p. m.
Beat 2, Mars Hill, Monday, October 31st, 11 a. m.
Beat 2, Irvin's Schoolhouse, Monday, Oct. 31st, 7 p. m.
Beat 6, Bethsalem, Tuesday Nov. 1st, 7 p. m.
Beat 4. Poplar Springs, Wednesday, Nov. 2nd, 7 p. m.

Saturday, Oct. 29, there will be a joint discussion at the Court House Clanton between Hon. E. E. Calloway and Hon. L. B. Pounds.

Everybody, regardless of political creed, is cordially invited to attend these appointments and hear the issues of the day discussed. The ladies are especially invited.

J. Osmond Middleton,
Chairman Republican Campaign Committee of Chilton county.

"LET THE PEOPLE RULE."

The one great question confronting the people of Alabama to day, and more particularly the people of Chilton County, is embodied in the motto of The Banner "Let the People Rule," and so long as a majority of the people control their own affairs all will be content, the minority gracefully accepting the inevitable.

To this end the wisdom of the dominant parties has established the primary system of nominating candidates to fill the several offices, and in the Democratic party it has become an established fact in nearly every case that a nomination is equivalent to an election.

But every rule has its exception, and in the case of Chilton county the rule won't work, and the reason is not hard to explain. "Let the people rule" and in order to do this they must be able to express their choice in the selection of their officials—their servants.

Where a party is in a hopeless minority it is almost an impossibility to get men to present themselves for the empty honor of a nomination—and it is an honor to become the nominee of a party, although it stops there and goes no further.

Recognizing this fact the Democrats of Chilton had no choice in the selection of the nominees of their party—one man presented himself for each office and was of necessity made the standard bearer, and no matter what your opinion may be you are expected to support him and to vote for him, simply because he is the nominee of the party. But is he in reality? What else could be done? There was no choosing the best man for the position—the aim and object of a primary election—every voter but one might as well have saved himself the trouble of going to the primary, one vote would have made the nomination and we would have been expected to stand by the "nominee of the party."

A primary election, with the best men of the party as candidates from which the intelligent voter may choose for himself, is perhaps the ideal means of securing to the people the best men for the offices, but when there is no choice the voter has every right to make his selection at the general election.

Half a century ago there was reason for a combination of the white people of the south; with a host of newly emancipated negroes filled with gratitude to the Republican party for their emancipation, it was only right and natural for the white people to enroll themselves under the Democratic banner in order to counteract the influence of the newly enfranchised voters; but we are not living fifty years ago, but in this good year of grace 1910, when Democratic ingenuity has found a way to eradicate this evil, and the negro vote has no place today in the Southern States—in some of the Northern States, however, the negro vote has considerable influence and both the Democratic party and the Republican party make the most of it wherever they can.

But we are diverging somewhat from our subject: "Let the people rule" in Chilton county—let them choose for themselves those whom they wish to serve them—leave it to the voters of the county to select their own county officers; it is home rule, and whether the men they elect are Republicans or Democrats what we want is a thorough and correct administration, first of county affairs, then to take our part in state and national business, whether that part be large or small does not affect us in the same manner that our home affairs do.

Chilton has had an excellent administration of its business under Judge Reynolds and there is every reason to abide by the democratic doctrine of a renewed term of office to a faithful servant—with a good Judge of Probate, an efficient Sheriff, a capable Clerk of the Circuit court and a faithful board of Commissioners the people of Chilton county will have good reason to be satisfied.

Oct. 25, 1910

Hon. Wm. M. Adams, Chairman Democratic Executive Committee of Chilton County.

Dear Sir:—Your favor, 24th inst., inviting the Republican party of this county to have its representatives at the times and places named in said letter for speaking:

We have appointed out for our local speakers for every night up to and including the night of November 2nd, which you must have known as those appointments have been published in papers for more than a week, and in addition they have been advertised by hand-bills.

Although your first appointment is to-night at Jackson's Chapel, yet you only gave me the notice at five o'clock yesterday afternoon, and you might have known that owing to the arrangements which we had already made that the notice was insufficient.

I note that you say you have extended a similar invitation to the represenatives of the Socialist party and that they have accepted. I am surprised at this, for it has been apparent for some time to all observers that the so called fight between the leaders of the Socialist and Democratic parties in this county is merely a sham-battle each working in the interest of the Democratic ticket.

It seems a little strange that you seek a joint discussion with us at this late day of the campaign. When you gave your barbecue here in Clanton, and got out your biggest crowd, you did not invite us to have our represenatives present; you have had speakers billed in this county since that time, and we were not offered a division of time. Can it be that your inability to obtain an audience for your speakers has prompted you to extend to us this invitation? It seems so to me.

We do not case to furnish an audience for the farce-comedy between the Socialist and Democratic leaders, and therefore, we respectfully decline your invitation.

Will state however, that there are two or three days the latter part of next week that we have no appointmenti for, and will gladly arrange with you for a joint-discussion between Judge Reynolds and Mr. Deason, and also between Mr. Curry and Mr. Alexander, but we will not divide time with the Socialists.

J. Osmond Middleton,
Cuairman Republican Campaign Committee of Chilton County.

The President's Oath.

The oath of office taken by the incoming president of the United States is the shortest and the simplest required of any ruler on earth. It is prescribed by the constitution and is as follows:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of president of the United States, and, to the best of my ability, protect, preserve and defend the constitution of the United States."

Her Cooking.

The Doctor—How is your appetite? The Patient—Wretched. The best meal my wife cooks doesn't tempt me. The Doctor—Um—er—er—do you ever try a meal in a restaurant?—Chillicothe Herald.

CHILDREN

In disorders and diseases of children drugs seldom do good and often do harm.

Careful feeding and bathing are the babies' remedies.

Scott's Emulsion

is the food-medicine that not only nourishes them most, but also regulates their digestion. It is a wonderful tonic for children of all ages. They rapidly gain weight and health on small doses.

Dr. L. E. Ray & Co.

Our well-known townsman, Mr. J. M. Curlee, deputy sheriff, who has been badly cross-eyed from burth and totally blind in one eye, and who has been a great sufferer with his eyes from childhood, called on Dr. L. E. Ray & Co., celebrated speciallist of Louisville, Ky, Wednesday morning at their office and had his eye straightened in a few minutes. Mr. Curlee said to a friend after the operation that he felt no pain and that the Doctor was not over two minutes doing the work and that he could see much better and felt better than he had done in years. Mr. Curlee is 49 years old and has suffered all his life with his eyes. He says that he would advise all his friends who are cross-eyed or have any eye, ear or throat trouble to be sure to call and see the Doctors while they are in Clanton.

The Doctors treat all chronic diseases and make no change for examination. They will remain at Clanton until November 1st.

Didn't Know "the Uncle."

Aunt Jane—I guess Mr. Spender must be a very neat person. Edith—And what leads you to that opinion? Aunt Jane—He told your Uncle George all his clothes but those upon his back were hung up. Some men, you know, throw their things round anywhere.—Boston Transcript.

Mistook the Punctuation.

The Young Woman (surprised and indignant)—How dared you kiss me, sir! Penitent Young Man—Why, you said you'd like to see me do it. The Young Woman—But you know as well as I do that I said it with an exclamation point at the end!—Chicago Tribune.

The Assent Sarcastic.

He (at the end of a fishing story)—My word, it was a monster! 'Pon my word, I never saw such a fish in my life! She—I don't believe you ever did!—London Mail.

Riches are able to solder up an abundance of flaws.—Cervantes.

Hugging a Delusion.

Willie—Father, what does hugging a delusion mean? Father—Well, my boy, young Mr. Strong is an instance. He thinks your sister Clara is only twenty-two!

'Tis far better to love and be poor than be rich with an empty heart.—Lewis Morris.

One Doctor—Only One

No sense in running from one doctor to another! Select the best one, then stand by him. No sense either in trying this thing, that thing, for your cough. Carefully, deliberately select the best cough medicine, then take it. Stick to it. Ask your doctor about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for throat and lung troubles. Sold for nearly seventy years. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J.C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Why try this thing, that thing, for your constipation? Why not stick to the good old reliable family laxative—Ayer's Pills? Ask your doctor if he approves this advice.

IF YOU HAVE A SICKLY YOUNGSTER TRY THIS FREE

The family with young children that is without sickness in the house now and then is rare, and so it is important that the head of the house should know what to do in the little emergencies that arise. A child with a serious ailment needs a doctor, it is true, but in the majority of instances, as any doctor knows, the child suffers from some intestinal trouble, usually constipation.

There is no sense in giving it a pill or a remedy containing an opiate, nor is flushing of the bowels to be always recommended. Rather give it a small dose of a mild, gentle laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which, by cleaning out the bowels and strengthening the little stomach muscles, will immediately correct the trouble.

This is not alone our opinion but that of Mrs. N. H. Mead of Freeport, Kan., whose granddaughter has been taking it successfully and of Mrs. J. R. Whiting of Lena, Wis., who gives it to her children and takes it herself. It is sold in fifty cent and one dollar bottles at every drug store, but if you want to test it in your family before you buy it send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will forward a supply free of charge.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specialized in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 452 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

THE TWO ROSETTES.

And the Falsehood That the Maker Told About Them.

By AGNES G. BROGAN.

[Copyright, 1898, by American Press Association.]

As I walked up the garden path between the stiff rows of flaming hollyhocks I saw Gertrude's grandfather sitting on the veranda. He greeted me with his delightful air of old time gallantry, and I changed my purpose of joining the gay throng in the old fashioned drawing room and dropped into a chair at his side. I was still wearing my quaint little automobile bonnet, and my face flushed with pleasure at the admiring light in his fine old eyes, but I was soon to learn that it was not my face or my bonnet which had evoked his approval, but an awakened memory from the long ago.

And then the old soldier told this simple story:

"The girl who had worn the flower wreathed bonnet must have been beautiful indeed, with her rosy cheeks and bright dark eyes and the black curls, which bobbed coquettishly just above the two rosettes which were placed upon either side of the bonnet. They were fashioned of forgetmenots—these rosettes—with a rosebud center in each, and when her youthful lover bade her farewell as he went to answer his country's call it was the forgetmenot rosette which he begged as a keepsake to carry away to war.

"When I look upon it I shall seem to see your face," he said. And the girl clung to him.

"Bring it safely back to me," she besought him. "I shall always be waiting for you."

It was this promise which gave him courage through all the privation and unspeakable horror of war. Far away in a peaceful little village the one girl would always be waiting hopefully for his return and when he could look into her eyes again.

Well, he was wounded at last and lay suffering upon the battlefield, trying to endure silently the racking pain until the doctor and nurses might come to his relief.

He wondered dully if they would be in time, and then the one girl's face seemed suddenly to appear before him, laughing from the depths of her bonnet. She had been gay and happy always, he remembered. Would it grieve her now to learn that he would never come back. Yet she must know.

"IT IS YOU I WANT, LITTLE NURSE."

He aroused himself with a great effort and turned blindly toward a man who lay half reclining upon the ground.

"There's a little keepsake in my pocket," he said haltingly, "and if all should be up with me I'd like you to send it to a girl in Hampton town—with a message."

The other young man leaned forward and with swift and gentle fingers drew forth the crumpled knot of forgetmenots. He stared at it unbelievingly for a moment and then laughed. It was not a pleasant laugh to hear. A nurse working near by looked up, startled at the sound, and then waited, listening:

"See here," the man said presently. "A girl in Hampton gave you this at parting—promised to be faithful and true, waiting for you at the end, eh? You see, I happen to know all about it, for there were two 'true lover knots' upon that bonnet of hers, and I guess I can match you."

With an exclamation he threw a second rosette upon the ground, where the incongruous bits of blue and pink so exactly alike lay between them.

The wounded lad grew white to the lips. "You mean that she"— he whispered. Then the little nurse approached. With steady gray eyes she regarded the injured men and sank upon her knees before the one whose strength was fast falling.

"Well," she asked in a crisp, businesslike manner, "what can I do for you?"

"The best thing you can do now, nurse," he whispered hopelessly, "is just to let me die."

"Nonsense!" the girl replied. "Would you surrender so easily, general?" She smiled as she bestowed the name upon him and was already at work with her bandages. Her gaze fell apparently for the first time upon the rosettes, and she gave a start of surprise.

"Why, I declare," she said—"to think that I should find in this dreadful place pieces of my own handiwork!"

"Your work?" cried the man who had tossed them there.

"I will tell you about it," she explained, "if you promise not to speak one word." She looked anxiously down at the pale face beneath her own and then flashed a warning glance at the man who had spoken.

"I have often seen you both in Hampton," she said, "the general here as he went to and fro each day, and you, Mr. Merrill, when you visited in town. My aunt keeps the little millinery store at the crossroads, so I am also acquainted with your sweethearts. I am not sure they would have been pleased, however, had they known that I duplicated the rosettes upon their bonnets. It was almost the last work I did before volunteering as a nurse. If I ever have a sweetheart," she added, "I hope that he will not be so ready to doubt me. And now," she asked of her patient, "are you more comfortable?"

His eyes were shining. "Yes," he answered, "thanks to you."

And as they bore him away the nurse smilingly slipped the rosette back into the blue coat pocket. The other man rather shamefacedly replaced his own.

"Guess I'm about ready to fight again," he said.

"You soon will be," she replied, bending over him.

As she passed through the rows of cot beds in the rudely constructed hospital a few days afterward a weak voice called to her:

"Little milliner," it said, "would you write a letter for me to—to the girl at Hampton?"

She turned quickly. "Yes, general," she answered in her brisk way.

The sick man watched eagerly for her coming each day, and the steady light of her clear gray eyes seemed to calm and sooth as she bent over the cot with a cheering word.

"I am discharged, little milliner," he said one morning. "It is to be home—on a furlough."

The nurse laughed unsteadily. "And you will see the face in the bonnet?" she said.

He left the place one moonlit evening and turned to look back at the slight figure of the nurse framed in the doorway. Her face gleamed with a white radiance beneath its muslin cap.

The picture remained with him throughout the joyous welcome which followed his arrival at home. Ellen was there to meet him. She had grown even lovelier, he thought, but as he lingered en idly at her side he was conscious of a growing disappointment in the girl he had loved.

He reproached himself at the realization that he was eager to be away, then squared his shoulders and drew a long free breath.

"I am going back," he told her. "I must be in the midst of this fight."

He prepared for departure in a fever of impatience, and then at the last moment came the glad news, heralded from tongue to tongue, that the war was ended.

The young soldier listened dazedly to the rejoicing of his companions, and as the train which was to bear him away clanged noisily into the station he swung himself on to the platform and waved a goodby.

He must find the little gray eyed nurse. He must see her just once more. As he ascended the hill leading up to the camp hospital all was bustle and confusion, and at last, with a great sigh of relief, he espied a white clad figure coming alone down the pathway.

"Oh, little milliner," he cried, "I feared that you had gone!"

She drew back, startled at the sound of his voice, then smiled. "Do you not know that the war is over, general," she asked, "and our work here is finished?"

"I knew," he answered, "but I had to see you again, if only to say goodby."

The gray eyes regarded him seriously. "And the face in the bonnet?" she questioned.

"I have given my word," he said sadly. "I must return to her."

Then the nurse motioned him to a seat at her side. "I have a confession to make," she began. "Remember that 'all is fair in love and war,' so when I found you and Robert Merrill side by side upon the battlefield—you fatally wounded, as I supposed—well, I told a lie about the two rosettes, hoping to make it easier for you to die, easier for him to live. The bits of forgetmenot were fashioned by my hands, it is true, but both were sewed upon Ellen Richmond's bonnet."

She paused. "Will it grieve you now to learn that Robert Merrill hastened back to marry her the moment that peace was declared?"

But it was certainly not grief that shone from the young man's eyes as he leaned toward her.

"It is you I want, little nurse," he begged. "Will you go home with me?"

She sat white and smiling in the golden light of the setting sun, and then— The old soldier threw back his white head as though he were listening to marshaling music.

"Did she marry him?" I insisted.

His laughter rang out like that of a boy. "You shall see," he answered and raised his voice to call "Mother!"

A little old lady who had been sitting at the farther end of the lawn arose in answer and came toward us. Her gray eyes shone undimmed through the fifty years.

"Yes, general," she said.

An Irish Grand Prix.

There was once an Irish Grand Prix. The horse that lowered the French colors was the property of an eccentric Irishman named Conolly and was a big, bony roan, not much to look at in the way of horseflesh, so it was a great surprise to everybody but his owner when he came in first. His previous record at the English Derby the preceding year had not been brilliant enough for anybody to lay any large bets on him, with the sole exception of Conolly himself, whose faith in his entry was so great that he mortgaged his lands and put every cent on the horse. Up to the very end of the race everybody looked on Conolly as a ruined man, but when the roan shot first under the wire he not only carried the British colors to victory, but won a great fortune for his master. This happened in the time of Napoleon III., and Conolly was so proud of his triumph that he insisted on walking ahead of the emperor and empress, cheering and waving his hat.—New York Press.

We, the People.

The phrase "We, the people of the United States," in the preamble of the constitution read in the first draft of the constitution as follows: "We, the people of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, do ordain, declare and establish," etc. Though unanimously adopted by the convention, the wording had to be changed to "We, the people," simply because the constitution, which had not as yet been ratified, was to go into effect when ratified by nine states, and, not knowing which states were to ratify, the naming of the states was, of course, out of the question.—New York American.

The Chinese Gong.

The bugle does not sound the call to meals on the Pacific liners, as is the Atlantic habit. Instead a Chinaman pats a gong gently, and its booming echoes find the ear, no matter how remotely located. The gong is the quintessence of vibration. It sets waves of sound into motion that reverberate from every barrier. It moans or defies according to the strength with which it is struck. No wonder the Chinese used it in battle to scare the foe!—New York World.

His First Voyage.

The old sailor came along with a bucket of tar.

"What are you doing?" gasped the seasick passenger feebly.

"Pitching the deck, sor," responded the salt, with a deep sea salute.

"Pitching the deck? Great Scott! Isn't it pitching enough already?"—Chicago News.

Best Stomach Remedy Free

It is an old saying that if the stomach is sound the whole body is safe, because so much depends upon the proper working of the stomach. Many persons find themselves with a disorder of the stomach which produces dyspepsia or a peculiar state of biliousness.

If you suffer from both stomach trouble and constipation you are on the way to a very serious disease. From just such conditions come appendicitis, rheumatism, skin diseases and similar disorders, because the waste matter that should have been dispelled from the system through the bowels has found its way into the blood and vitiated it. What is needed at this point is not simply a violent cathartic tablet or salt, which usually does more harm than good, but a gentle laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which people have been using for these ailments for nearly a quarter of a century. It cured J. C. Lanham, of Warrensburg, Mo., of stomach trouble of long standing, also William Voll, of 903 Ellisson St., Louisville, Ky., who had the trouble for fifteen years.

However, if you have stomach trouble you want to know from personal experience what Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will do for you. If so, send your name to the doctor and a free trial bottle will be sent you. You are urged to send for the free bottle, as the results from it will be the best recommendation of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Then you will do as over two million people did last year—go to your druggist and buy a regular bottle at 50 cents or $1, according to the size you prefer. We could mention hundreds and hundreds of families who are never without it. You can never tell when some member of the family will need a laxative, and then no time should be lost taking Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 500 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Belts by the Pound.

A western senator of ample physical proportions was endeavoring to obtain a belt at a Washington haberdashery. He was having a difficult time in selecting a belt whose design struck his fancy as well as of proper requirements for his girth.

"How much is that one?" he demanded of the clerk, who was entirely unaware of the distinguished character of the patron.

"That is $4," said the salesman.

"Four dollars!" exclaimed the senator. "Isn't that an awful price for a belt?"

"Yes, sir," admitted the man behind the counter; "but, you see, sir, after they get into the regular surcingle size we charge for 'em by the pound."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Very Brief.

A record of brevity in a holiday correspondence was established by a Frenchman in the eighteenth century. Voltaire and Piton, the epigrammatist, exchanged challenges to write the shortest possible letter. So, when Voltaire was starting on a journey, he wrote to Piton, "Eo rus," which is the complete Latin for "I am going to the country." Piton's answer was just "I"—complete Latin for "Go."

In business correspondence the record is divided between Victor Hugo, who, anxious to know how his "Les Miserables" was going, wrote to the publisher, "?" and the publisher, who triumphantly replied, "!"

SPREAD MANURE IN FALL.

...Creation of Keeping Until Spring Generally Abandoned.

The old method of keeping all the manure produced upon the farm and spreading it in the spring is practiced by little of present, says a correspondent of the American Cultivator. There is a time perhaps during the month of October when the average farmer is too busy hauling corn and getting ready for winter to stop to haul manure out every day or every few days. But after this rush period the manure should be hauled out every few days and spread broadcast. This method is very advantageous in that it will give the horses exercise through the winter. It does not take very much day and cuts out the trouble of hauling manure continually for two or three weeks in the busy spring season. By hauling out as soon as it is made all danger from heating is done away with and the valuable constituents of the manure are saved. Nitrogen, one of the most valuable elements of manure, is often lost by heating when in piles.

Carefully conducted experiments at the Massachusetts experiment station seem to show there is no loss in fertility when the manure is spread broadcast in the winter. A different method is always noted for the better in this case over the other way of waiting until spring and spreading.

Even though the humus of manure may be while in the field, it has been shown that this is just what the ma... land needs. The action of the weather on the various constituents is just what is needed to make the manure more available as a plant food.

The possibility of washing is practically the only objection against winter spreading, but applies only to hilly land. With the exception of these very rolling lands it is found advisable to spread during the winter in practically all cases. It is beneficial both as a saving of time and as a benefit to the land.

The great farm cry now is not more land, but more fertile land, and the only solution in successful future farming is in the increased fertility of the soil. It must be made more fertile. Future human food supply depends upon it.

For the Children

Comic Faced Rattles Used by the Haidas.

Recently there was placed in the collection of the British museum the queer looking object shown in the above illustration. It is a dancing rattler and is used by a tribe known as the Haidas, who live in the Queen Charlotte islands. These people carve the rattles from wood, and they are usually cut to show funny faces. They are generally so comical that they would make the most serious laugh. The Haidas use them in their dances, beating time as they whirl and caper. The specimen brought to England excited no end of curiosity and laughter. Those who have witnessed the dance of the Haidas say the effect is ludicrous almost beyond description.

Clever Spiders.

A naturalist took a large spider from his web under the basement of a mill, put him on a chip of wood and set him afloat on the quiet waters of the pond. He walked all about the sides of his bark, surveying the situation very carefully, and when the fact that he was really afloat and about a yard from shore seemed to be fully comprehended he looked out for the nearest land.

This point fairly settled upon, he immediately began to cast a web for it. He threw it as far as possible in the air and with the wind. It soon reached the shore and made fast to the spires of grass. Then he turned himself about and in true sailor fashion began to haul in hand over hand on his cable. Carefully he drew upon it until his bark began to move toward shore. As it moved the faster, he the faster drew upon it to keep his hawser taut and from touching the water. Very soon he reached the shore and, quickly leaping to terra firma, sped his way homeward.

Thinking that he might be a special expert in that line of boatmanship to the rest of his companions, the naturalist tried several spiders. They all came to shore in like manner.

The First Writing Pen.

The reed, which was the first pen in use, was a sort of bulrush growing in many parts of the east. These reeds were cut in the manner of a quill and are still used in lands where the people write the Arabic characters. Nations which have adopted the Chinese characters use a camel's hair pencil, which is held perpendicularly in the hand. This would seem little adapted for rapid writing, yet the Chinese write their complicated characters by means of these implements with a rapidity seldom equaled by European writers.

The quill appears to have been first in use about the year 600. The word "penna," meaning a quill, is not found in any work older than that period. Previous to that we find usually the word "calamus," a reed. The quill is finer and more lasting than the pen, the same quill often serving for weeks and months. It is said that Pliny wrote his work with a single pen and celebrated his achievement in this verse:

With one sole pen I wrote this book,
Made of a gray goose quill;
A pen it was when I it took;
A pen I leave it still.

A Serious Predicament.

Capt. Bogardus again hits the Bull's Eye

This world famous rifle shot who holds championship record of 100 pigeons in 100 consecutive shots is living at Lincoln, Ill. Recently interviewed, he says, "I suffered a long time with kidney and bladder trouble and used several well known kidney medicines, all of which gave me no relief until I started taking Foley's kidney Pills. Before I used Foley's Kidney Pills I had severe backaches and pains in my kidneys with suppression and a cloudy voiding. On arising in the morning I would get dull headaches. Now I have taken three bottles of Foley's Kidney Pills and feel 100 percent better. I am never bothered with my kidneys or bladder and again feel like my own self. Upchurch Drug co.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VII.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 13, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xxiv, 32-51. Memory Verse, 44—Golden Text, Matt. xxvi, 41 — Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The greater part of this great discourse is recorded by both Mark and Luke as well as by Matthew. As they left the temple one day His disciples called His attention to the great buildings with the goodly stones and gifts, and they were evidently greatly surprised by His remark that all would be thrown down and not one stone left upon another. Four of them came to Him privately as He sat upon the Mount of Olives and asked Him a question which was really threefold, though they probably thought it one. The destruction of the temple. His coming again and the end of the age were two, if not three, distinct events. In His discourse he covered the reply to all. The whole age until He shall come again will be characterized by wars, famines, pestilences and earthquakes, with increasing wickedness until it shall be as it was in the days of Noah.

In Luke xxi. 24, He very plainly referred to the approaching destruction of Jerusalem and covered this present age by the words, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles until the times of the gentiles be fulfilled." With this verse we should associate Rom. xi. 25, 26. Many of the circumstances connected with the destruction of Jerusalem were foreshadowings of those at the end of the age, and the warnings are therefore similar.

Verses 27-31 of our lesson chapter speak plainly of His coming in power and glory immediately after the great tribulation at the end of this age. The destruction of Jerusalem was in no sense His coming, for it is written in Psalm cii. 16, that when He shall appear in His glory He will build up Zion, not destroy it. He is coming again to restore all things of which the prophets have spoken (Acts iii. 21).

The events in the east today are most startling if considered in the light of verses 32-35 of our lesson and compel us to believe that the kingdom of God is again at hand after the long interval of its postponement during this age. The zeal and aim of Zionism, the new regime in Turkey, her favor to the Jews, a large part of the land given to Abraham (Mesopotamia) being now offered to them, and the unrest among the nations generally, all point to the approaching end of the age and the coming of the kingdom. How marvelously has the generation or race or nation of Israel been preserved for the fulfillment of all things (verse 34), and soon now shall they be recognized as a nation, perhaps under the suzerainty of Turkey, with Jerusalem as their capital. That will, however, mean for them the beginning of their great trouble (Jer. xxx. 7) ere Jerusalem shall become the throne of the Lord at His coming in glory to set up His kingdom. That Israel is God's fig tree as well as His vine, see Joel i. 7, and note the events of Joel iii in their order. The utter ungodliness of the days of Noah cannot be fully manifest until after the church is taken, but the manifestations already on every hand in church and state are most unmistakable. The war craze of nations, the unrighteousness of government in cities and states, the infidelity in the seminaries and in the pulpits, the disregard of God and His word everywhere, should compel us to cry, "Come, Lord Jesus." At the coming of Christ to the air for His saints the true church shall be taken, all others left, but at the coming to the earth with His saints at the end of the age the tares shall first be gathered in bundles for the burning. "Ready" is the great word for us all, as we saw in a recent lesson. No unsaved person, whether moral or immoral, sober or drunken, drunken according to Isa. xxviii, 7, or xxix, 9, is ready except for the burning, the weeping and gnashing of teeth (verse 51; xxv, 41). The readiness necessary has been provided in Jesus Christ by His great atonement, His pure life, His death in our stead, suffering for our sins, His resurrection from the dead, and any who will not plead guilty and accept Him and His righteousness must perish and be separated from Him.

If we are redeemed and thus ready to meet Him we must never cease to watch and pray, lest the world, the flesh or the devil cause our light to fail or even to flicker, and we thus dishonor Him. "Faithful and wise" is the only motto that will enable us to be approved of Him (45). We must beware of saying or even of thinking, "My Lord delayeth His coming" (48), lest we be found careless and conformed in some measure to this present evil age. The oil of the next chapter must fill our lamps, and the light must so shine that men may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven (Matt. v. 16). The only proper attitude of a child of God is "waiting for His Son from heaven," "looking for that blessed hope" (I Thess. i. 10; Titus ii. 13), and while thus expectantly waiting, aiming in all things to serve the living and true God. Ever ready to do whatever our Lord the King shall appoint (II Sam. xv. 15). "Ready to every good work" (Tit. iii. 1). "Ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear."

The Simple Life

aims for its basis PERFECT HEALTH. The clear brain, the healthy stomach, the bodily organs everything in harmony, are the first essentials of a Simple Life—

A LIFE OF PEACE AND SATISFACTION.

No one can know the pure delight of simple living whose nervous system is kept in a state of tension by Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Biliousness and other diseases due to inaction of the liver.

The Simple Way to seek the Simple Life is to seek the remedy for these conditions. This remedy has been found in our great product—

ST. JOSEPH'S
Liver Regulator
(In Both Liquid and Powder Form.)

It has made life brighter and happiness and peace possible when all was dark and distressed. It reaches the centers of life and purifies them. It encourages the liver, stomach and bowels to a freer and more natural activity.

It is the Simple Way to a Simple Life of Health, Peace, Contentment.

Many persons attest this fact who have realized its truth by actual experience.

St. Joseph's Liquid Liver Regulator is prompt in action, exceedingly palatable and pleasant to the taste. It is sold by druggists and dealers at 50 cents a bottle.

St. Joseph's Liver Regulator in powder form is put up in tablet tin boxes and retails at 25 cents a box, five boxes for a dollar. It may be taken dry or made into a tea or bitters. Full directions accompany every bottle and box.

A Suggestion to Women

What is the best remedy to use when girls are changing into womanhood. What is the best to use when you are low spirited, distressed with evil forebodings, together with pains in the side, with your nerves unstrung and life is a burden. If you also have lassitude and debility, turn to VINO-VITÆ, the great female remedy. As its name implies, it is a "wine of life" for ailing women, giving strength of the weak, hope to the despondent and comfort to life. It assists and makes child birth easy, corrects the monthly period and insures good health. Druggists sell it at $1.00 per bottle. If your druggist can not supply you, write to the Granger Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

The Review of Reviews

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

-GOOD NEWS FOR THE FARMERS.

The much talked of season of hard times and business depression has failed to arrive; the prophecies of the chronic knocker are wanting in the fulfillment and the dire misfortunes predicted by the ever present calamity howler have died in the borning. Alabama, Chilton county and Clanton, instead of going to the bow-wows, as forecasted by would-be-wise actes, has gone steadily onward upon the road of material development that leads to certain success and abundant prosperity.

We are enjoying the fruits of our labors as never before; the cry of poverty is hushed throughout this heaven-blessed section; on every side is heard the tuneful tones of thrift and prosperity. The frugal farmer will not have to draw upon the store house of the West for his corn supply, for the harvest within our own fields is abundant in the extreme.

The cotton producer is satisfied with the results of his labors and the shining coin which high prices for his staple enables him to secure and jingle in his jeans, not only makes a gladsome sound to his ears, but fills his heart with joyful anticipations of a happy Christmas-tide. All things conspire to make his lot a pleasant one indeed.

The Chilton County Farmer is fast assuming that place in the economic relations of life which his avocation predestined him to occupy the front rank—a leader among the advance guard. Long faces have been succeeded by smiling countenances and mortgaged homes and farms are soon to become happy firesides and productive fields of pleasure. Hard times have been vanquished and prosperity is victorious.

Contentment, peace and plenty are knocking at every door.

We are now entering upon an era of commercial development never heretofore anticipated; a season of rich rewards for honest toil is now dawning and will soon burst with noonday splendor upon our people.

The farmers are happy as they should be, for mother earth has yielded them rich trophies for their plucking; prices are soaring amid the radiant beauty of the stars; his products are in demand as never before.

Cotton is again King and corn is the Prince Imperial. What more could the planter desire to make his cup of gladness overflow?

Farmers of Chilton County, we greet you as the two fold backbone and producers of our prosperity. You are they who have poured the wealth of our Country and upon your heads we pour our praises in unstinted measure. You have earned your reward and should enjoy the fruits of your labors.

The Merchant who has bought wisely and well rejoices at your success.

The cotton buyer whose heart beats in unison with your own, sees light in the oportunity afforded him to give you good prices for your staple; he who would with hold from you the best and highest that the market affords is neither a friend to the farmer nor a wise man of business.

We want you to succeed, because in your success we also shall succeed.

We have bought not stingily but well; we have purchased in keeping with your position and your desire; you want the best, therefore we have supplied ourselves with the best that we might accommodate you to your taste and your demands.

Desiring to have you make our place headquarters, we have arranged to pay the very top notch for every pound of the fleecy staple brought to our store.

We want to have a hand in your prosperity; we wish to be remembered in your rejoicing.

Come to us with your sample, we will top the market on every occasion; call upon us for your wants, our large and varied stock enables us to meet your every requirement and at prices that will make glad for the visit.

We hate the chronic croker, we despise the knocker and the pessimist. The old world is bright with hope, buoyant with success, happy in plenteous abundance. We want you to know that we rejoice at your season of success, you desire it and we hope you will enjoy it to the fullest extent.

Come to see us, your happy faces make us glad indeed.

Come whether you want to buy or sell, both or either or neither. We will be glad to greet you.

We are going to set the gait this year and those who would keep up with us must clip it off at a merry chase.

Cordially yours,

W. KANTER & BRO.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

Generally, before an election candidates call around and cheerfully interview the voters, but during the last three or four months but one solitary candidate has shown himself at The Banner office until we were almost inclined to think the election was over and done with, but upon reflection we suppose they must have gone in another direction.

The one solitary exception was an old time friend whom we had not seen lately and in a pleasant manner he called in and most emphatically announced his belief that he would be elected the next Sheriff of Chilton county and we believe his optimism well founded. It will be remembered that at the last election the Republican candidate received a substantial majority and there every reason to believe that C. Foshee, the only candidate who has made a friendly call at the office since the primaries, will be elected by a handsome majority.

There is one thing at least for which Judge Reynolds is to be commended, he never hesitates to state his views on any public question, and whether you agree with him or not you can always tell where he stands. If some of the other candidates before the people would do likewise it would help to clear up matters. The people have a right to know the opinions of all candidates on all public questions, it helps them to a correct choice.

After the election is over we will all get down to every day work again, and The Banner will be able to devote some of its time to the contest which is getting quite exciting

Regular Term of County Court Postponed to Monday November 14th.

As a great many parties and witnesses will desire to make returns on monday, to attend the Election on Tuesday, November 8th, there will not be any County Court held on monday, November 7th. All parties and witnesses are hereby ordered and directed to be present at Court on monday, November 14th, 1910, at 9:30 a. m. as the regular term of Court will be adjourned to November 14th.

This the 1st day of November 1910.

NOTICE

I have compared the poll list with the list of registrated voters as best I could, but I am sure that there are some names that ought to be on the list that are not on. Therefore I make this statement, trying to get those who are qualified on the list, all who have registered and have paid poll tax in the other beat, all who have paid their poll tax, using sometimes their own name, and sometimes their initials.

In fact, if there is any difference in any of your poll tax receipts you will write me, or come to my office, I will take pleasure in putting your name on the list, if you are entitled to be on it.

If you have paid a poll tax in any other county, the law requires you to get a certificate from the Judge of Probate in that county and file with the Probate Judge here, in order to get on the list.

However, if you are not on the poll list, and are challenged on day of election, as the law requires you can take the affidavit and

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

PEOPLES SAVINGS BANK
CLANTON, ALA.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

The steady use of Foley Kidney Pills rid me entirely of all my former troubles. They have my highest recommendation." Upchurch Drug Co.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Mountain Springs.

Editor Banner:—Please allow me a small space in your paper to say a few words. The Sunday school at this place is still getting along nicely, and I hope it will continue that way. Several from near this place attended the speaking at Jackson's chapel Saturday night and reported a nice time.

I will close wishing the Banner and its many readers much success and if this escapes the waste basket I may come again.

THE SAME ONE.

Clanton, Oct. 31, 1910

Editor Banner:—Recently it has been my pleasure to note in your excellent paper the reasons give for your support of the ticket nominated by the Repuplicans of Chilton county, but the liberal views expressed by you extend as well as I can understand to those of the opposite faith and way of Kicking.

Nor while I have nothing to say of your commendation of Judge Reynolds and the ticket supported by him, I wish as a republicans to commend a young man, liberal in his views, born and raised in our midst—a self-made man, and a good one. Mr. Hugh M. Simpson, candidate for Clerk of the Circuit Court. Mr. Simpson since his appointment as Register in Chancery has discharged the duties of the office in such a manner as to bring about, only praise and words of commendation from those having business with his office.

As there seems to be a year of independent thought and movement, I beg to commend Mr. Simpson to the voters as one well worthy of the trust of Clerk of the Circuit Court.

REPUBLICAN.

Editor Banner:—The campaign is about over, and I have made clean efforts to be elected sheriff, and I want to say to my friends that if they will go to the polls and do their duty we have won the greatest victory of our lives, our majority will be larger than we have ever had.

I want to thank the people for their kind treatment to me during the canvass, and especially do I want to thank The Banner for the support it has so lovely given our ticket. I appreciate the support some Democrats have given me, and our ticket.

I promise the people of this county that if I am elected sheriff I will do my duty as I see it without fear or favor. Respectfully,

C. D. FOSHEE.

S. S. CONVENTION.

The District Sunday School convention, held with Pleasant Grove Sunday school, was a glorious success. The subjects were feelingly and ably discussed by the following esteamed Sunday School workers: Miss Mary Carr Gibson, Prof. Henson of Thorsby Institute, Rev. Trosper of Thorsby, Dr. Horn of Thorsby, the President, Mr. Bice, Rev. W. C. Crumpton o Pleasant Grove Mr. W. E. Thomas, Supt. of Pleasant Grove and the Pastor, Rev. J. E. Champion.

The schools were all reported except Cocoa Boards. We regret this very much, and sincerely hope it will not occur again in our district. Let us strive for a banner district. Collins Chapel report their school not what it should be, but that interest is growing. Thorsby Bap ist reports a good school, no organized classes yet, but expect to organize soon. Thorsby United Protestants report a good school with three organized classes. Mt Camel not in very active condition but hopes of better work soon. Macadonia report a good school and Pleasant Grove a good school with three organized classes.

The singing conducted by Prof. Franklin was a great help by lending brilliancy to the day. Mr. Bice is still held as president. Onward, shall be our motto.

DULCIE CHAMPION, Secretary.

Another Customs Scandal Reported From New York.

COINS INTO THE MILLIONS

Collector Loeb Finds That Certain Importers Have Been Getting Rebates and Thereby Robbing United States Government of Large Sums

Another alleged leak in the customs service, whereby it is estimated that duties have been paid on [illegible] Rons have been diverted from the federal treasury, is being investigated by William Loeb, collector of the port of New York. The inquiry deals with rebates alleged to have been made on shipments of fruits on which duty had been paid as decayed or unfit for consumption.

Owing to the fact that a large number of inspectors were unable to permit examination of the goods, it is said an agreement was made some time ago between importers and the customs officials whereby, if an allowance for decay was claimed, an inspection of only five per cent of the cargo was made, but percentage of the decay found in this portion alone applied to the entire cargo. It is now claimed that frequently the rebates thus allowed were excessive.

Rebates on lemons are said to represent the greatest loss and unofficial estimates of the amount turned from the treasury on this item alone since the McKinley tariff law became effective, range from $1,500 to $3,000,000. The duty paid on lemons since 1898 exceeds $12,000,000.

ALLEN D. CANDLER'S DEATH.

Former Governor of Georgia, Congressman and Historian.

Allen D. Candler, former governor of Georgia, brave soldier of the civil war, and for years representative in congress from the ninth congressional district, died Wednesday at his home, 657 Edgewood avenue, Atlanta, Ga., in the 76th year of his age.

Former Governor Candler, known affectionately to hundreds of thousands of Georgians as the "One-Eyed Plowboy of Pigeon Roost" was a member of the famous Georgian family of that name. He was a cousin of Bishop Candler, Asa G. Candler, and Judge John S. Candler. He comes from a stock that has reflected signal honor upon Georgia in widely different fields.

Since his retirement from the office of Governor, which he filled with signal ability and fearlessness, the patriot son of Georgia who breathed his last on Wednesday morning, has been compiling and publishing the official records of colonial, revolutionary and civil war times in this state. He was engaged in that work when overtaken by his last illness.

NINETEEN MEN LOST.

Steamer Regulus, Caught In Storm, Becomes a Total Wreck.

News of the wreck of the steamer Regulus, bound from Belle Island to Sydney, with the loss of nineteen men of the crew, was received at St. Johns, N. F.

The wreck occurred at Shoal Bay. The Regulus was owned in St. Johns, and the crew consisted almost wholly of New Foundlanders.

The Regulus has been running between New Foundland ports, Sydney, C. B., New York and Philadelphia.

She broke her tail shaft off Bay of Bulls, 36 miles from St. John, while on her way from Belle Island to Sydney, and a tug picked her up. The storm increased, however; four hawsers were parted, and the Regulus became lost in the fog and darkness. At daylight the steamer was found to be a total wreck on a point of land at the entrance of Shoal Bay. Nineteen members of the crew had been swept into the sea and drowned.

SINGULAR PHENOMENON.

Alabama County Reports a Remarkable Occurance.

Reports were brought to Anniston, Ala., of a singular phenomenon of nature at Heflin, Cleburne county, which has attracted the attention of the population of the entire countryside.

According to the reports an incessant rain has been falling on a plot of land at Heflin no larger than a sheet square for the last week, while everywhere around the atmosphere was perfectly dry.

Residents of Heflin have been unable to give any explanation of the phenomenon.

A BLOODY CHAPTER.

Many Crimes and Casualties Occur in Houston, Texas.

A Houston, Texas, dispatch says: Another bloody chapter was added to Houston's record for the past week when E. L. Wohermann, a well known confectioner, sent a bullet through his heart in his home here, dying instantly. His wife, who witnessed the suicide, swallowed poison and laid down beside him and soon expired. Business reverses is assigned as the reason for Wohermann's act.

This makes seven deaths from violence in Houston within the past few days.

SLEW HIS SWEETHEART.

Jealous Rage Seized Young Farmer Near LaFayette, Ind.

Jealousy at the attentions being paid his sweetheart by another man is said to have prompted Martin Robinson, a prominent young farmer, to shoot and kill Miss Grace Eller, 17 years old, and to fire one shot at Willard Southworth, who was spending the evening with her.

Southworth ran, and it is not known if he was injured. The tragedy occurred at Montmorencie, 10 miles north of Lafayette, Ind. Robinson, who has not been found, is said to have told a neighbor after the shooting that he intended to commit suicide.

FLAMES DESTROYED PRISON BUILDING

Main Building at Georgia State Farm Burned.

SEVEN PRISONERS ESCAPE

Explosion of Oil Lamp in Prisoner's Cell Caused Fire—Intense Excitement Followed—Coolness of Guards Prevented Holocaust.

Fire Thursday night destroyed the main building of the state prison farm at Milledgeville, Ga. Two hundred and six male prisoners were confined in the building. None were injured. Seven male prisoners escaped in the excitement.

The fire was caused by the explosion of an oil lamp in the cell of a prisoner.

The flames spread quickly and a mad rush for exits followed. With coolness the guards let the prisoners into the corridors, the majority of them being confined in their cells.

The convicts exhibited great courage and those awake when the conflagration broke out materially assisted the guards in waking others and assisting them to places of safety.

Despite the confusion and terror incident to the spreading flames, the prisoners obeyed orders splendidly and the management was surprised to find but seven men missing when the roll call was made after the fire.

The main building was valued at $15,000. The clothing of prisoners, bedding, furniture and fixtures of the building was a total loss. Most of the convicts were driven from their beds in their night clothes.

RICH GIFT TO NEW YORK.

Ten Thousand Acres of Land and a Check for $1,000,000.

In accordance with the plan outlined by her husband, the late E. H. Harriman, Mrs. Mary W. Harriman has presented to the state of New York 10,000 acres of land, a part of the Arden estate, to be incorporated in the State Palisades park.

At the same time a gift of $1,000,000 was made by Mrs. Harriman for the development of the park, and the preserve was further increased by the transfer to the park commission of 700 acres which had been intended for the new state prison on Bear Mountain, but which, by act of the last legislature, was ceded to the park.

Presentation of the great Harriman gift was made to George W. Perkins, president of the Palisades Park commission, by Averill W. Harriman, son of the late financier, who handed the deeds and $1,000,000 check to Mr. Perkins.

PREDICTS A LANDSLIDE

Chairman Mack Takes Optimistic View.

A DEMOCRATIC VICTORY

Chairman of Democratic National Committee Believes That the Party Will Be Successful in the Coming Elections—People Sore on High Cost of Living.

Norman E. Mack, chairman of the Democratic national committee, predicts a Democratic landslide in the coming elections.

"One of the principal reasons for Democratic success this year," he is reported to have said, "is the high cost of living. That is one of the real fundamental issues of the campaign. There is hardly a man whose wife has not asked him for a 25 per cent increase in her allowance for household expenses.

"Everywhere you go you find the conditions just like those of 1896, but this time indicating a Democratic landslide—in fact, a double landslide. There are 50,000 people in New York state who are disgusted with Roosevelt because of his actions in this campaign. They think he has belittled the great office he held, and they put him on a par with an ordinary spellbinder. The people are against the Republican party, and are tired of it. I can not give you all of the reasons, but the high cost of living and Theodore Roosevelt are two of the main things which prompt the people to elect the Democratic ticket this year. Even the friends of President Taft are opposed to Roosevelt and want none of him."

ETHEL LENEVE GOES FREE.

Jury Finds That Pretty Typist Was Innocent of Killing Mrs. Crippen.

After a trial lasting only a few hours, in the new Bailey criminal court at London, a jury found Ethel Claire Leneve not guilty as an accessory after the fact in the murder of Cora Belle Crippen, for whose death her husband, Dr. Crippen, will die on the gallows on November 8.

Miss Leneve was in love, it is said, with Dr. Crippen and slept in his house on the night of the day following the day upon which the doctor murdered his wife and buried the dismembered parts in the cellar of his Hildrop Crescent home. She accompanied Crippen in his flight to Canada, and with him was arrested and indicted.

From the first she has maintained innocence of any knowledge of the crime, but the crown alleged that her behavior subsequent to the disappearance of Mrs. Crippen, or Belle Elmore, as she was known on the stage, was such as to betray a guilty knowledge of the murder. When arranged Miss Leneve pleaded not guilty, and witnesses were introduced by the prosecution to show that she had experienced great mental distress following Belle Elmore's death. The crown prosecutor introduced only such testimony as has been brought out in the earlier hearings.

FACED BY STARVATION.

Men Engaged In Construction Work May Suffer.

Starvation faces 5,000 men engaged in railway construction work on the new National Transcontinental railway, north of Lake Nipigon. The steamer Ombabika, which has been carrying supplies to these men, has been wrecked, and as the ony other means of getting supplies into this region is over ice, it will be some time before this can be done. The situation becomes very serious, as the other boat employed in the same capacity was wrecked some time ago, and the supplies were running very short, but hopes were entertained that the lake would soon be frozen over and teams could be engaged in hauling in a sufficient amount to last through the winter months.

DISASTER AT SEA.

British Vessel Reported Wrecked on Cuban Coast by Storm.

A cablegram from Cuba says that the liner Crown Prince has been wrecked on the coast near Havana.

The Crown Prince, bound for Liverpool, Eng., was caught in the great Cuban storm and was long overdue. The Crown Prince, an English ship, was bound to Liverpool from Colon. The vessel is of modern construction, being built in Newcastle, England, six years ago.

An official report was received from the captain of the Crown Prince. He stated that the vessel had gone ashore off Rhodes Point on October 16. The ship broke in two amidships and the stern was completely broken by the pounding of the waves. The fore holds filled with water. The captain indicated that all hands had been saved.

WORKED CLEVER THEFT.

Woman Feigned Illness and Robbed Man of $6,000 in Notes.

Julius Paulin, a salesman [illegible] Broadway, New York, was robbed of $6,000 in notes by a woman who entered his room at a down town hotel and assimilated illness. "Quick, give me a glass of water, I'm fainting," said the woman as she tottered toward a couch in the room.

Mr. Paulin gave her the water and asked if he should call the house physician. The woman said not to call a doctor, as she was subject to "these fainting spells" and would soon be all right.

"Please let me lie on the couch a few minutes," she pleaded, "and I will go when I am stronger."

A long wallet protruded from the hip pocket of Paulin's trousers. In it were five notes for $6,000. After the woman had gone Paulin discovered that he had been robbed. He reported the theft at detective headquarters.

A great Remedy

A. R. Silas, Pocahontas, Ark., says: "I want you to allow me to recommend U-RA-CURA. My wife had been sick ever since we were married with kidney and liver troubles, and I had just about broken myself paying doctors' bills and could get no relief. We decided to try U-RA-CURA, although we had lost all hopes, as we had been fooled so much with patent medicines. We gave her a dose and she began improving. She took three bottles and is now doing her work singing like a bird. I think a man can spend more money and have better results in his family by keeping U-RA-CURA than any other medicine on earth. Druggists sell it at 50c and $1.00 per bottle.

A great Remedy

A. R. Silas, Pocahontas, Ala., says: "I want you to allow me to recommend U-RA-CURA. My wife had been sick ever since we were married with kidney and liver trouble, and I had just about broke myself paying doctors' bills and she would get no relief. We decided to try U-RA-CURA, although we had lost all hopes, as we had been faked so much with patent medicines. I gave her a dose and she began improving. She took three bottles and is now doing her work singing like a bird. I think a man can save more money and have better health in his family by keeping U-RA-CURA than any other medicine on earth." Druggists sell it at 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

Saved an Iowa Man's life.

The very grave seemed to yawn before Robert Nielsen, of West Burlington, Iowa, when after seven weeks in the hospital, four of the best physicians gave him up. Then was shown the marvelous curative power of Electric Bitters. For a year eight months of frightful suffering from liver trouble and yellow jaundice, getting no help from other remedies or doctors, five bottles of this matchless medicine completely cured him. Its positively guaranteed for stomach, liver or kidney trouble and never disappoints. Only 50c. at Upchurch Drug Co.

Ready With His Tongue.

James T. Brady, a prominent member of the New York bar in the last century, was noted for his ready wit. Quick as Mr. Brady was with the readiness of his race for repartee, he sometimes met his match among his own countrymen. He was once examining an unwilling witness who persistently called him Mr. O'Brady. At length, even his proverbial good nature being a little ruffled, he said to the witness: "You need not call me Mr. O'Brady. I've mended my name since I came here and dropped the O." "Have ye, now?" retorted the witness. "'Pon my sowl, it's a pity ye didn't mend yer manners at the same time!"

Why He Was on Time.

Beranger was one day complimented by a lady on the punctuality with which he kept his engagements. "It is a pleasure," said she, "to invite you to dinner, for you never make us wait."

"I am no longer young, madam," replied the poet, "and experience has taught me one thing—it is dangerous not to arrive at the precise hour, for the guests who are waiting for you will pass the time in discussing your faults."

Pale-Faced Women

You ladies, who have pale faces, sallow complexions, dark circles under eyes, drawn features and tired, worn-out expressions, you need a tonic.

The tonic you need is Cardui, the woman's tonic.

It is the best tonic for women, because its ingredients are specifically adapted for women's needs. They act on the womanly organs and help to give needed strength and vitality to the worn-out womanly frame.

Cardui is a vegetable medicine. It contains no minerals, no iron, no potassium, no lime, no glycerin, no dangerous, or habit-forming drugs of any kind.

It is perfectly harmless and safe, for young and old to use.

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

"After my doctor had done all he said he could for me," writes Mrs. Wm. Hilliard, of Mountainburg, Ark., "I took Cardui on the advice of a friend, and it helped me so much. Before taking Cardui, I had suffered from female troubles for five years, but since taking it, I am in good health. I think there is some of the best advice in your book that I ever saw." Your druggist sells Cardui. Try it.

SUCH A PRETTY GOWN.

Worn by Miss De Sousa in "The Commuter."

OF ROSE MARQUISETTE OVER SHADED MAUVE SATIN.

This delightful model is charming either for a simple evening dress or for a house frock and is developed from marquisette in a lovely shade of rose hung over shaded mauve satin. The skirt is slightly gathered from a normal waist line and weighted at the bottom with an embroidered band picked out in rose, mauve shades and dull gold thread. About the low, round neck and short sleeves of the peasant waist is a like banding in a narrow width. The crushed belt is of mauve satin.

The gown is worn by Miss De Sousa in "The Commuter," one of the successful New York plays of the season.

New Curtain Materials.

As colonial and mission furnishings are those approved just now, the window draperies that accompany them are of a simple nature—expensive material may be used, but the effect must be that of simplicity; otherwise there is a jarring note. For these colonial rooms the sash curtain coming even with the window ledge is used.

The designs in the cut will give the housewife seeking for curtains an excellent idea of what is new in this line. The fillet design at the top of the illustration is a decided novelty. Swans and birds are the unique features of this design. It comes in white, ivory or beige, is forty-eight inches wide and 35 cents a yard.

Another pattern in fish net simulates beaded glass, and this triangular mesh wears very well—a wonderfully good fabric for the low price of 75 cents a yard.

A touch of color and warmth is appreciated in cold weather at the window, and in no way can this touch be better used than with the colored scrim curtain. The illustration shows a floral design with gold; browns, reds, greens or blues predominating. There is a border on each side. This material may be purchased for 22 cents a yard and is good value.

A Halloween Witches' Race.

Two lively tissue paper witches are made of black paper and broom straws. For making each witch four straws four inches in length are needed. These straws are tied securely together one inch from their tops. The straws are then bent out below the place where they are tied and are fastened at equal intervals from each other by thin picture wire, which is wound around the lower end of each straw. The picture wire, thus holding the four straws apart, thus forms a square foundation for the witch to stand upon. When the four straws are so arranged the skeleton is complete. The costume consists of a balloonlike skirt and a little knoblike hood, all made of one piece of black paper tied over the skeleton and tucked up around the wire at the bottom of the little figure. Two of these little ladies are now placed on opposite sides of the room and are fanned across a hardwood or linoleum covered floor to meet each other. They must touch in passing at least once, as if to strike each other, a wisp of straw having been tucked into their waists to serve as broomsticks. The first to reach the opposite wall is victor. The old fashioned palm leaf fan is best suited for this blowing contest, and held close to the floor as it is flapped it will drive the witch along. The witches may dance across the dining room table if there is no smooth floor.

History of Halloween.

Halloween is the eve of Allhallows or All Saints' day and comes down from the last of three festivals observed by the Druids.

The Druids were a tribe of ancient days who were scattered over northern Europe, and their three great festivals occurred on May 1, the season for sowing; June 21, the time for ripening, and Oct. 31, the harvest season.

On the 31st of October the Druid priests met at their sacred altars, dressed in their white robes, to extinguish the fires and kindle new ones that were to insure prosperity for the coming year. Amid mighty shouting and much ceremony this rite was carried out, as the fires were believed to protect the homesteads from peril so long as they remained burning. As the Druidic faith faded with the advent of Christianity, the ceremony took on a different character. Gradually what was once a serious performance grew into our present mode of celebration, a time for merrymaking.

The simple minded country folk began to believe that on Halloween the fairies forsook their hiding places to dance in the forests, while goblins and witches held sway over deserted ruins and dark byways.

Game of Days.

This is a good game for seven players. As each one is named for a day of the week, one player calls himself Monday, another Tuesday, another Wednesday, and so on until all seven players are named. All stand in a line opposite a high wall or a high fence. The leader throws a ball to the wall and then calls the name of any player he wishes to catch it. If Monday is called that player must have the ball safe in his hands by the time the leader counts ten out loud. If Monday is not quick enough or if he misses the ball he loses his turn and the leader throws the ball again. Then he calls for another catcher. When twelve children wish to play the game might be called the game of months, for each child would then be named for one of the months of the year.

The Tyrant in the Field.

There have been few commanders so tyrannous as Lopez, the dictator of Paraguay, when, in the war of 1865-70, it fought single handed the neighboring countries of Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay. Lopez says Mr. W. H. Koebel in his "Argentina," was wont to carry the theory of victory or death to an uncomfortable point. "Officers were executed for mere remarks whose tone fell beneath the standard of confidence that Lopez had set up for himself. One, for instance, was shot for having announced in the course of his duty that the enemy was strongly intrenched. Another met his end on account of an unguarded speech to the effect that the Paraguayan army was accustomed to count the enemy's losses and forget its own."

THE SOLAR SYSTEM.

Its Flight Through Space Toward the Constellation Lyra.

In what direction are you moving? If you are going toward the Battery you will answer "south;" if up Broadway you will answer "north;" toward the Hudson you will say "west," and if in the direction of the East river you will reply "east."

These answers might be correct as regards the surface of the earth, but they may be far from answering the question, for the earth is turning eastwardly at the rate of about a thousand miles an hour, which carries you in that direction very much faster than you can move over the ground.

But that rotating motion, constantly changing your direction in relation to all outside the earth, is quite subordinate to another far more rapid motion that is carrying you and the earth around the sun eastwardly on an entirely different curve at the rate of about nine miles a second, ever changing your direction in relation to the stars in a circular path 270,000,000 miles long.

Yet that isn't a key to your direction, for little you, your tiny earth and your third rate sun, with all of its planets, are traveling as a united group in one direction, differing from all those mentioned. Find the large first magnitude bluish white star Vega, in the constellation of Lyra, and you will be looking in the direction of the flight that our system is taking through space. If you will observe the stars around Vega for a few hundred years you will find that they are apparently slowly separating, while the stars at the opposite pole of the heavens are slowly drawing together. That means we are moving toward Vega and away from the opposite point. This motion is in a circle that cannot be exactly measured, but there is evidence to show that it will require 18,200,000 years for our system to complete it.

Then can you answer, "I am moving toward Vega." Perhaps so, but more likely perhaps not, for it is far from unlikely that you and your solar system, with Vega and all of the galaxy of stars that eye can see on the clearest night, are moving in the same general direction around some great common center yet unknown. Who can tell? No one now, but the possibility is presented to the human mind from what we know of the motions of the great universal clock of space that marks off the seconds of eternity.—New York Herald.

A MAN'S GLOVE.

In the Old Days It Served as Proxy For Its Owner.

In the early days everything was not regulated for the people as it is now by the government and the law courts. Europe was still young then, and people had rough and ready means of dealing with one another, of buying and selling or giving goods and property and settling disputes. A glove, as it was very close indeed to a man's hand, came in course of time to be looked upon as taking the place of the hand itself, and sometimes took the man's place and was made to represent him.

For example, to open a fair it was necessary then to have the consent and protection of the great lord in whose country it was going to be held. Those who wished to open the fair would come to the nobleman and petition him to be present. He might be very busy or bored at the idea of having to go, yet he would know that it must be opened or his people would be discontented. So he would say to the leaders of the people: "No, my trusty fellows, I can't open the fair in person, but I will send my glove to do it. You all know my glove. Nobody has one like it in the country. It is the one my lady mother embroidered for me in colored silks and silver wire, and it has a deep violet fringe. You can hang it above the entrance of your fair grounds as a sign that you are acting with my permission. If any one disputes your right or touches his master's glove I will attend to him. That's all." So the glove would travel in state to open the fair.—Westminster Gazette.

Not Sorry For Blunder.

"If my friends hadn't blundered in thinking I was a doomed victim of consumption, I might not be now," writes D. T. It stopped the cough and I am now in better health than I have had for years. HINTS FOR THE BUSY HOUSEWIFE

Attractive Jardinieres Made of Water Casks.

This pair of attractive porch ornaments can be easily duplicated by any handy person who can find a couple of small kegs and some bits of boards.

The ones shown in the above illustration are little oaken water casks with oval heads which set on a little rack, such as are used on shipboard. The bunghole was enlarged with a keyhole saw to a diameter of five inches; then the improvised flowerpots were filled with earth and plants set in. A couple of coats of paint add to their appearance.—Popular Mechanics.

Cold Catchup.

Cut four quarts of tomatoes fine, add one cupful of chopped onion, one cupful of nasturtium seeds that have been cut fine, one cupful of freshly grated horseradish, three large stalks of celery, chopped; one cupful of whole mustard seed, one-half cupful of salt, one rounding tablespoonful each of black pepper, cloves and cinnamon, a level tablespoonful of mace, one-half cupful of sugar and four quarts of vinegar. Mix all well together and put into jars or bottles. It needs no cooking, but must stand several weeks to ripen.

Cleaning Clothes.

To clean clothes yourself quite as successfully as the professional cleaner and without any injury of unpleasantness to the hands fill a large dishpan with water, bring it to a boil, remove from the fire, fill a smaller pan with gasoline, placing it in the one containing the hot water; the gasoline takes the heat very quickly. When warm use it with white soap, just as you would water. When thoroughly cleaned rinse well in clean, clear gasoline, not necessarily warm.

Liver Dumplings.

One pound of beef liver, two good sized onions, pepper and salt to taste. Chop the liver and onions fine, then add two eggs and flour enough to make a stiff dough. Have ready two quarts of boiling water to which one tablespoonful of salt has been added. Drop in the dough about the size of a walnut. Let boil about ten minutes, then pour the dumplings into a colander and drain well. Brown one-half cupful of butter in frying pan and pour over the dumplings.

Salt Pork With Milk Gravy.

Cut salt pork into thin slices. If very salty cover with water and let it stand ten minutes. Cut the rind of the slices and fry slowly until they are crisp and a rich golden brown. Make a milk gravy by heating flour in the fat in pan, allowing two tablespoonfuls of fat and two of flour to each cup of milk. Skimmilk is as good as any for this. Cook gravy thoroughly and serve on pork very hot. Serve it with baked potatoes. You can use bacon instead of pork.

Steamed Apple Pudding.

Half fill a deep baking dish with sliced apples, sprinkle with grated nutmeg and steam ten minutes. Sift two cupfuls of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt, chop in one rounded tablespoonful of butter and moisten with about one cupful of milk. Place the dough over the apple and steam one-half hour, then turn from the dish, sprinkle generously with sugar and serve with liquid sauce.

Chipped Pears.

Eight pounds pears stemmed and sliced thin, four pounds sugar, a quarter pound Canton ginger, three lemons. Cover pears with sugar and the ginger cut in small pieces. Let stand overnight. In the morning cut the lemons in small pieces and put with the rest and cook very slowly for three hours. Put in jars.

Buttered Breadcrumbs.

To butter breadcrumbs for the top of scalloped dishes, melt the butter required and stir the bread or cracker crumbs into it, adding salt and pepper to taste. The butter is more evenly divided than by the old method of putting little "dabs" of butter on the breadcrumbs, and it takes less time.

We cannot help ourselves, the rules of the post office are not to be trifled with.

There was a good meeting last Saturday at the court house, at which we were unable to be present, but we understand Mr. E. E. Calloway, representing the Republican party, everlastingly flayed the representative of the Socialists.

The election next Tuesday brings to a close a warmly contested campaign, on the whole fairly conducted, with few personalities. In our county affairs both sets of conditions are equally well known to the people and it remains with the voters to pronounce their virdict. Let every voter exercise his own judgment and we will have county officers satisfactory to all. The larger majority the better for all.

The Sunday School convention of District No. 1 held with Oak Grove Sunday School Saturday, Oct. 29 was a very interesting one. We having our District fourteen Sunday Schools, eight of which reported very good Schools with interest growing.

Samaria

There will be a debate at Samaria school house Nov. 5. Subject: Resolved, that a law prohibiting all Sunday employments should be passed. Affirmitive H. G. Willis, W. C. Scarbough and W. E. Robinson, Negative T. E. Williams, M. C. Raper R.A. Smith. Everybody come I am sure that it will be interesting.

VOTERS OF CHILTON WHICH SHALL IT BE?

And now we come to the final test, and it remains with the voters to decide the question, each man for himself, as to whom he will vote for. The situation is well worth the careful consideration of every man, and before he marks his ballot next Tuesday every voter should satisfy himself that the men he votes for are able and willing to do their best as the servants of the people in the administration of the affairs of the state and county, for upon a proper administration of all public affairs our continued prosperity depends.

Assuming that all the nominees of the different parties are equally good men, yet it does not follow they would make good public servants if elected—a public official needs to be first a good man and secondly one in touch with the aspirations of the masses of the people. A good man may be honestly mistaken in his convictions but if his actions are contrary to the desires of the people he must of necessity be a poor servant.

With the state ticket we need hardly concern ourselves, for however the voters of Chilton may vote it is tolerably certain that Emmett O'Neal will be our next governor and the rest of the state Democratic ticket will be elected, and as practical men every vote cast against them can only be considered as a protest—good enough in its way but not of sufficient strength to be effective.

With county affairs, however, the case is entirely different. For several years past a majority of the people of Chilton have declared their pronounced opposition to the rule of the Democratic party—first as Populists and next as Republicans, and we have good reason to believe that that opposition is more pronounced than ever, and there is ample cause to justify them in their confidence in their present administration. Let us take a glance at the condition of Chilton county to day.

Has Chilton county made any advance in prosperity under Populist and Republican administration? There is not a man in the entire county who will deny that the county is in better shape to day than at any previous time in its history. The finances of the county have been admirably looked after until now we have an established credit second to none of our sister counties; our roads and highways have been vastly improved, our bridges perfected, our means of intercommunication accelerated; justice is fairly administered to all alike. Is it possible to do any better?

And now we come to a few personalities. Judge Reynolds has made an excellent Judge of Probate, as good if no better than any hitherto known to the county; clean and fearless in the administration of justice; a good financier; a helper of the weak; a defender of the oppressed; an aid to the afflicted. Cast your vote for L. H. Reynolds.

For Clerk of the Circuit Court M. D. Foshee is admirably qualified—well educated and gentlemanly in his demeanor he will be a credit to Chilton. Vote for M. D. Foshee.

The county sadly needs an efficient Sheriff and that can be gained by the election of C. D. Foshee. Vote for C. D. Foshee.

Our late Representative in the Legislature, J. Osmond Middleton, made his presence felt in that assembly and did good work for his county. Walter L. Popwell will follow in his footsteps. Vote for Walter L. Popwell.

For Commissioners to look after the interests of their constituents, vote for W. H. Shaw and S. E. Waldrup.

In casting your vote for state Senator remember that Peyton Alexander is a gentleman of character and ability and that he will worthily represent you in the upper chamber. Vote for P. E. Alexander.

For Congressman a vote for H. M. Atkins will help to swell his majority—a capable representative he will add renown to the Fourth district of Alabama. Vote for H. M. Atkins.

Voters of Chilton, do your best, vote for the men you think will most worthily represent you. Having done that you will have performed your duty to yourself and to your country. No man can do more.

Jemison, Ala., Nov., 1st, 1910

Editor Banner:—This is the first time that I have had anything to say in public print during the present campaign, but as we are right now on the virge of the electon I wish to say something to the people. in the first place I desire to thank the people of this county for the way in which they have honored me by twice electing me to the important anb honored position of County Commissioner,- one of the most important offices in county. I now have only a few days more of service, and I am glad to render some accounting of my stwardship. I can truthfully state that I have given the county my very best and most conscientious service, striving at all times to promote the interest of the people of this county. I am proud to tell you that the administration of the county's affairs at the hands of the Republican party has been a signal success. There is not a county in Alabama that is in as good a financial condition as our own grand old county of Chilton. We don't owe a dollar in the world; we are foregoing to the front along the lines of material development; we are improving our highways; we are constructing lasting improvements in the way of steel bridges and we are paying the lowes tax rates of any county in Alabama.

In winding up my officials duties, it gives me pleasure to say that I am now of the same political conviction that I had when I was elected and I expect to continue that way. I believe that the policies advocated by the Republican party are the best for the whole country. I am glad to see the party growing in the south, and here in our own county.

I congratulate our people on the clean ticket which we have nominated; that are each brave and courageous men who will discharged their whole duty to the people and their conduct of their official duties will be an honor to the county.

Recently I have been in every portion of the county. I have sounded the political pulse of the people, and I koow that Republicanism has never been so strong. Our entire ticket will be elected by an overwhelming majority. Faithfully yours,

W. H. CONWAY.

SCOTT & BOWNE, 409 Pearl St., New York

To the Voters of Chilton County.

The election is drawing near, the 8th day of November is about at hand, and the voters of this county will decide who they want for their officers for the next six years.

It affords me such much pleasure to say to the people who have so loyally stood by me in the past that the opposition to me, while very vindictive and bitter, has not been able to point to a single act of mine in which I have been untrue to the people and confidence they placed in me, though I have represented this county three times in the Legislature, was a member of the Constitutional Convention, yet not a single vote cast by me has been questioned.

Not an official act since I have been your Probate Judge has been criticised in the newspaper, and if I had not done my duty those who oppose me would certainly have called your attention to my failure. The records as well as the conduct of my office has been examined each year by an official public examiner and have never heard of any complaint that they have made.

Six years ago I promised the people of this county that if they elected me Probate Judge that I would run the office myself, and that if I found out that I could not run it that I would resign. So far I have had no boss except the voice of the people who put me in office. I further promised you that I would not forsake the people who put me in office just as soon as I was elected, but that if I lived to the end of my term of office that you would find me with the same political faith that I went in with. I have kept my promises and feel very grateful to the people of this county for their support in the past.

I have been very busy since the opening of this campaign, both in and out of the office, a portion of the time having been ill, but have had the pleasure of meeting many of the voters at the various speakings over this county, and I want to say that we have always had good crowds at these speakings, and I have tried to avoid saying anything that would offend any citizen. I feel that I now come to you at the close of this campaign with clean hands, and that I am perfectly willing to trust my cause in your hands—if you see fit to elect Mr. Deason Judge of Probate I will not complain.

It is the duty of every voter to consider well what is to the best interest of his county and to cast his vote accordingly, and not to overlook the fact that if he makes an error in this matter that it will be six years before it can be corrected. We have done the very best in our power for the public roads of the county, we have tried to build substantial steel bridges and at the same time to keep the county from being in debt.

I am frank to say that I can do more for the county than it is possible for Mr. Deason to do. I have had six years experience and am in touch with the present Board of County Commissioners. I have always been honest with the people of my county, I have never refused to state my position upon any public question, for I believe that the voters of a county have a right to know how every officer stands upon any and every public question that may effect they interest.

In conclusion I want to notify you to be on the look out for false statements and untruths that may be reported and circulated over this county just a day or two before the election. Be on your guard and do not be deceived by any such trickery. I hope that my supporters will be at the polls early and not only look after my interests but the interests of the entire ticket.

Respectfully,
L. H. REYNOLDS.

BEWARE OF CONSTIPATION

It is the first or primal cause of many of our diseases. St. Joseph's Liver Regulator is an ideal treatment for constipation. It acts in a natural and easy manner (not by violent purging) and gently loosens the bowels thus forestalling the long train of evils which result from the clogging of the system with offensive refuse. This remedy is a wonderful stimulator of liver, stomach and bowels, inducing and maintaining healthy, natural action. Price liquid 50c. a bottle; powder 25c a box, five boxes one dollar.

Vote for L. H. Reynolds!

It will be welcome news to dyspeptics to learn of a remedy that, in the opinion of thousands, is an absolute cure for indigestion and all forms of stomach trouble, and, better still, it is guaranteed to do so. The remedy is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

We all know the value of pure pepsin in indigestion, and add to this some exceptional laxative ingredients and you have a truly wonderful remedy. Mr. T. W. Worthy of Forsythe, Ga., got to the point where he could not even eat of digest vegetables and after many years of cooking he found the cure in Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Mr. Henry Kaiser of Moline, Ill., was in the same bad predicament with his stomach, took Syrup Pepsin and is now cured. Hundreds of others would gladly testify.

It is a guaranteed cure for indigestion, constipation, biliousness, headaches, gas on the stomach and similar complaints. A bottle can be had at any drug store for fifty cents or a dollar, but if you wish to make a test of it first send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will supply a free sample bottle, sent direct to your address. You will soon admit that you have found something to replace salts, cathartics, brash purgatives and other temporary reliefs. Syrup Pepsin will cure you permanently.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specialized in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the benefit of his advice to the sufferer free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Neither for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 40 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

JOTHAM'S MESSENGER.

It Brought Him an Answer That He Appreciated.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1905, by American Press Association.]

Mr. Jotham Reed, bachelor, tiptoed into his lonely house as if fearful of being caught in some nefarious act. As a matter of fact, there was never a man quite so utterly alone in the world as Jotham, so free to go and come, with no questions asked, for there was no one to ask questions. Jotham was master and mistress, chief cook and bottle washer of the snug, white painted house on the hill.

Carefully he trod through the spotless kitchen into the sitting room, where he placed a mysterious package on the table and drew a chair close beside it. Then he unwrapped the package, disclosing a large box kite made of stiff red paper, pliant reeds and wire.

"I think," said Jotham gleefully, "that kite will do the job. I'll have to wait a day or two till the wind comes up. It'll need a pretty brisk gale to git it into the next county. I don't want any Little River folks to get hold of it. First I'll put on the teakettle, and while I'm waiting for it I can write the letter!"

"WHAT 'D YOU COME FOR, THEN?"

He lighted the oil cook stove, and, filling the shining teakettle at the pump, he placed it to boil and returned to the sitting room. From a narrow cupboard in the chimney he brought writing materials and spread them forth on the table. Pink tinted note paper, purchased at the same city shop where he had bought the kite, and a fresh bottle of purple ink were other results of that secret expedition.

Jotham put on his glasses, thrust his pen in the ink and tightly linked one foot around the other. He wrote with cramped fingers, and his sun burned forehead was knotted in an anxious frown:

To the Lady That Captures This Kite:

Dear Madam—The writer of this letter is an unmarried man who wants a wife. I've got a nice forty acre farm and a nine room house all paid for and a thousand dollars in the bank, two cows and a horse that any lady can drive; also two pigs and no end of chickens and flowers. No widows need apply. What I want is a good, neat looking wife that knows how to cook and will appreciate a loving husband. For further particulars address P. O. Box 36, Little River. Strictly confidential. JOTHAM REED.

The teakettle was bobbing erratically about the stove when Jotham finished his letter. Before preparing his supper, however, he reread his letter, nodded grave approval and slipped it in an envelope, which he addressed to "The Lady That Finds This Kite." Slipping the flap of the envelope around the reed frame inside the kite, Jotham gummed it securely in place and laid the kite carefully in the closet.

As he puttered around the rooms, preparing the meal, eating it and afterward washing the dishes, Jotham mused on the few amatory privileges that had been his. Once when he was quite young he had fallen in love with two girls at the same time, Mary Gray and Sophie Trenton. Uncertain which one he really desired, Jotham had resorted to the simple method of his childhood—he wrote their names on a slip of paper and then recited, "My mother told me to take this one," and his finger had fallen on the name of Sophie Trenton.

He asked Sophie to be his wife, and she had scorned him—not simply refused him, but laughed in his face. Then it was that he discovered that Mary Gray was really his heart's desire, and he marveled that he should have hesitated. But Sophie had confided the proposal to Mary Gray, and when Jotham tried his fortune there he was coldly sent about his business, while Mary Gray married somebody else and moved away from Little River. Sophie hadn't married anybody. She was the village milliner and was especially pleasant to Jotham Reed.

In spite of this unhappy result of trusting to the god of chance, Jotham in his middle life once more placed his affairs in the hands of the deity. He had thought of the kite the night before, and the idea appealed to him. It was romantic; it was thrillingly uncertain.

Two days passed by before the wind

Shrinkage in Glaciers.

Scientists aver that, save over a small area, the glaciers of the world are retreating to the mountains. The glacier on Mount Sarmiento, in South America, which descended to the sea when Darwin found it in 1830, is now separated from the shore by a vigorous growth of timber. The Jacobshaven glacier, in Greenland, has retreated four miles since 1800, and the East glacier, in Spitzbergen, is more than a mile away from its old terminal moraine. In Scandinavia the snow line is farther up the mountains, and the glaciers have withdrawn 3,000 feet from the lowlands in a century. The Arapahoe glacier, in the Rocky mountains, with characteristic American enterprise, has been melting at a rapid rate for several years. In the eastern Alps and one or two other small districts the glaciers are growing. In view of these facts we should not be too skeptical when old men assure us that winters nowadays are not to be compared with the winters of their boyhood.—Dundee Advertiser.

Not Made Up.

Pushing her way through the crowd on the ferryboat to the decrepit rig, the middle aged woman sized up the emaciated animal from every point of view, and then, turning to the owner, who had clambered out of the wagon and propped himself against the engine room, said, "You ought to be ashamed of yourself for driving a poor horse like that; it should be at home and in the stable." "What is the matter with her, lady?" was the easy response of the owner, who didn't seem a whole lot perturbed. "What is the matter with her?" demanded the S. P. C. A. lady with increasing warmth of tone. "Can't you see how skinny she is? She looks starved." "The hoss is all right, lady," calmly rejoined the expressman, as a sweet smile floated through his scant crop of whiskers. "You see, she got up so late this mornin' that she didn't hev time to put on her rats, pads an' extenders, or she would hev been as purty an' plump as ther next one."—Argonaut.

Rooks and Cholera.

The present day security of this country against all danger of a cholera epidemic is matter for thankfulness not only in human circles, but in the rookeries too. When the cholera slew nearly 60,000 people in the insanitary United Kingdom of 1831-2 the rooks appear to have suffered with them. This was stated, at any rate, to have occurred on the estate of the Marquis of Sligo, which boasted one of the largest rookeries in the west of Ireland. On the first or second day of the epidemic's appearance an observer noted that all the rooks had vanished. During the three weeks through which it raged there was no sign of them about their home, but the revenue police found immense numbers of them dead on the shore, ten miles away. When the epidemic abated the rooks returned, but some were too weak to reach their nests, and five-sixths of them had gone.—London Chronicle.

The Japanese Policeman.

Japan has a police force modeled after the French system. In various places throughout Tokyo there are small kabanoba, which resemble sentry boxes, but are larger. Three men are attached to each box daily. One remains inside resting, while another stands at the door, and the third patrols a beat, returning at regular intervals to the box. Stations are changed every eight hours. After twenty-four hours' work the three officers are given the same length of time to rest, and three other men are sent to the box. During their "off" days the men are employed in taking census returns, making reports regarding the condition of streets, bridges, embankments, drains and cemeteries. They also report weddings, births, deaths, theatrical performances and the presence of suspicious persons.—Harper's Weekly.

The Horseshoe Legend.

Here is an explanation of the old horseshoe superstition: St. Dunstan was a skilled farrier. One day while at work in his forge the devil entered in disguise and requested Dunstan to shoe his "single hoof." The saint, although he recognized his malign customer, acceded, but caused him so much pain during the operation that Satan begged him to desist. This St. Dunstan did, but only after he had made the evil one promise that neither he nor any of the lesser evil spirits, his servants, would ever molest the inmates of a house where the horseshoe was displayed.

An Inconsistency.

There is a strange inconsistency in "Hamlet." It is where Hamlet speaks of "the undiscovered country, from whose bourne no traveler returns," and yet the play hinges largely upon the fact that he has had interviews with his father's ghost, who had, of course, come back from the undiscovered country.

The Obstacle.

"Why not set your cap for that young fellow? He's single and well off."

"Yes, he's single, but he knows he's well off."

A Desperate Case.

John—I'll bring you a fork, sir. The Customer—What for? John—The Camembert, sir. The Customer—A fork's no good. Bring a revolver.—Exchange.

Well Trained.

"Mr. Jonesby never interrupts one, and he is the best listener I ever met."

"No wonder; he's been married three times."

Amply Qualified.

Proud Parent—If you would win my daughter, young man, you must prove to my satisfaction that you have fortitude, patience under discouraging circumstances, strength of character, courage, an indomitable will to succeed and, above all, an ability to bear with misfortune. Have you those qualifications? Suitor—I've known your daughter for some time, sir, and am asking you for her hand. Do you wish other assurances?

Good Cause For It.

"A friend of mine who visits that dewly married couple saw the husband the other day throwing stones at his wife."

"Good heavens! Was she hurt?"

"Not a bit of it. She was just tickled to death. They were diamonds."—Baltimore American.

Never let familiarity exclude respect. —Vanburgh.

The Eaglet's First Flight.

H. B. Macpherson gives a dramatic account of the first flight of an eaglet whose life from babyhood he had watched. One day he ventured to the edge of the cliff containing his cradle and looked about. Suddenly his mother swung past on silent wings and "tried to tempt him from his fastness." But he was unwilling or afraid. Again the mother hovered round, and a wild, weird cry rang through the glen. "For the first time I had heard the yelp of the adult eagle, the voice of the queen of birds calling to her young. The eaglet cheeped continuously until he flapped to the very edge of the abyss, listening to her call. And now he, too, changed his cry; his voice seemed to break, and the adult yell burst from his throat. The eagles called to each other, yelp answering yelp. The young eagle gazed round him, spread out his giant wings and vanished forever from my sight among the ledges below. The eaglet had left the nest and had flown."

Baboons and Water.

In Captain Drayson's "Sporting Scenes Among the Kaffirs" we find the following: "Well," said Kemp, "when I go into a country where there is not much water I always take my baboon." "You don't drink him, do you?" "No, but I make him show me water." "How do you do that?" "In this way: When water gets scarce I give the Bavian nose. If he does not seem thirsty I rub a little salt on his tongue. I then take him out with a long string or chain. At first it was difficult to make him understand what was wanted, for he always wished to go back to the wagons. Now, however, he is well trained: When I get him out some distance I let him go. He runs along a bit, scratches himself, shows his teeth at me, takes a smell up wind, looks all round, picks up a bit of grass, smells or eats it, stands up for another sniff, canters on, and so on. Wherever the nearest water is there he is sure to go."

Laxative Sent Free to Try

It may be taken for granted that there is no family of any size that goes very long without needing a laxative. If you don't know of a good laxative, or the laxative you are using is losing its effect, we want to call your attention to Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which thousands of families are using successfully.

We have scores of letters from mothers, and scores from prominent men saying they are using it personally and giving it to their families, men like Mr. C. K. Smith of the Traffic Clearing House, Pine Bluff, Ark., and Mr. George B. Turner, a lawyer of Harlan, Ky. The thousands of mothers who use it themselves and give it to their children would take too much space to mention.

The reason they prefer Syrup Pepsin is that it is a mild, gentle laxative-tonic that does not gripe—effective and yet so mild that babies can take it. Its tonic ingredients invigorate the body and strengthen the stomach and bowel muscles so that they again do their work naturally. If you have been a victim of salts, pills and strong cathartics you will discard them when you once use Syrup Pepsin.

You can buy a fifty cent or one dollar bottle of any druggist, but before doing so you may want to try it free. If so, send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will promptly forward a free sample bottle. Then, being convinced, do as others are doing and buy it in the regular way of your favorite druggist.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specialized in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 462 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

Our First Locomotives.

The first locomotives in the United States were brought over from England by Horatio Allen for New York in the fall of 1829 or the spring of 1830, and one of them was set up on the Delaware and Hudson railroad at Carbondale, Pa., but, being found too heavy for the track, its use was abandoned. The first locomotive constructed in this country was built by the West Point foundry at New York in 1830 for the South Carolina railroad and named the Phoenix. A second engine was built the same year by the same establishment and for the same road and named the West Point. In the spring of 1831 a third engine was built by the same establishment for the Mohawk & Hudson railroad from Albany to Schenectady and called the De Witt Clinton. This was the first locomotive run in the state of New York. The first Stephenson locomotive ever imported into this country was the Robert Fulton. This engine was brought out in the summer of 1831 for the Mohawk & Hudson railroad. It was subsequently rebuilt and named the John Bull.

Halloween Candle Test.

Twelve lighted candles are set on the table, and each guest has three chances to blow them out. The number left burning shows the number of years one must wait for the husband or wife desired. In another test each candle is named for a month, and each girl is blindfolded, turned around three times and told to take a candle from the row and blow it out. If the candle fails to expire after being blown three times the girl will not meet her fate before next Halloween. If it expires on the first she will meet her fate in the same year in the month for which the candle is named.

Jerboa, the Jumping Rat.

In old world countries lives a small rat called the jerboa, which is remarkable for the long leaps it is able to make by means of its hind feet and tail, after the manner of a kangaroo. Its fore legs are so small that the ancient Greeks used to call it two footed. Its tail is long and cylindrical, covered with short hair and tufted at the end. It is an exceedingly neat little animal and twists its body in all sorts of ways when making its toilet.

CROPS AMONG TREES?

Arguments For and Against Planting Crops in the Orchard.

The large majority of California orchardists do not grow marketable crops between the trees, says a recent bulletin of the United States department of agriculture. They believe in cultivation, except where legumes or grasses are used to renovate and protect the soil. From the standpoint of the large commercial orchard and the small to do proprietor this practice is hard to recommend it. The planting of such an orchard is regarded as a long time investment. Little if any profit are expected for the first few years, but when the trees approach maturity and are in full bearing the increased profits are supposed to compensate the owner for all the lean years. Any treatment, therefore, which tends to rob the soil of its plant food when the trees are young or to hinder their growth is pretty certain to lessen the yields and the consequent profits in later years. Professor H. J. Wickson, director of the California experiment station, says:

"Intercultures are a loan made to the trees to the orchardist. The loan may be long and the rate of interest low, but sooner or later the trees will need restitution to the soil of the plant food removed by intercrops."

Notwithstanding all this, the poor man's needs make the loan or his family may starve, says the bulletin. Rather than on a small tract set out to trees cannot afford, if his means permit, to wait four or five years for the first returns. He must produce between the rows, and the question for him to consider is how this may be done with the least possible injury to the trees. A plentiful supply of water and a deep, rich soil are the essentials of intercropping. In districts that depend on a meager rainfall of 15 inches per annum, or where irrigation water is both scarce and costly, cropping becomes of doubtful value under any circumstances. In most of the great districts of the west water for irrigation is still reasonably low in price, and the extra amount required for intercropping represents but a small part of the net gains from such crops.

The illustration reproduced from the New England Homestead shows two stalks of tobacco grown on F. M. Arms' farm in Southwick, Mass. One is Halladay tobacco; the other is Havana. The Halladay type of tobacco, which was originated only a few years ago, is holding true to type and is proving a profitable tobacco for those who are in position to prime their crop. It will be remembered that the Halladay type of tobacco was first found on Mr. Halladay's farm in Suffield, Conn. The presence of this sport or variety was due to the breaking in the third generation of a cross between Havana and Sumatra tobacco. The plant was saved, self pollinated and guarded.

The result of several years' selection is pictured here, a broad, rather rounded, pointed leaf, which is carried on the stalk. The veins are small, and the tobacco is prized by those who are growing it as to be a marked success.

Depth to Cultivate.

The Wisconsin experiment station says three inches deep left the soil more moist below the cultivation than cultivation one and four inches deep, and these results have been confirmed by experiments at the Utah station.

The government stations farmers are learning the best information that scientists know. It is expected of farmers to make use of publications when any farm problem arises, and they should do so for their own and their neighbors' good.

A WILY ORIENTAL SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Guile of a Tricky Native Snake Charmer in India.

GATHERED IN THE SERPENTS.

It Was No Trouble to Him to Lure the Reptiles Into His Basket, and the Supply Was In No Danger of Giving Out and Losing Him a Job.

Among the numerous objectionable and dangerous creatures peculiar to the orient none is more repulsive than the snake. One shudders involuntarily as one thinks of its wiggling body and vicious characteristics. During my residence in India I never felt safe from its presence. I had my closets, bed and even my bathtub searched every day lest one should be found coiled up in some corner, writes Eliza K. Van Bergen in the Christian Intelligencer.

I was always on the watch for the creatures and ever in mortal terror of treading on one. It never occurred to me to sleep without a light, and a stick was always near at hand lest I might find one unawares and be unprepared to meet it. I even looked upon my thin mosquito curtain as a slight protection, for it would at least break its fall should a snake tumble down suddenly from the ceiling.

The creatures have a decided preference for cool, damp places and often choose the bathroom and sometimes the tub for their habitation, much to the discomfort of its rightful habitue. It is not unalloyed bliss to live in a place infested with serpents. With such formidable enemies, one never forgets to be cautious, nor to guard against their presence and sudden attack. It makes one alert to be in the midst of danger and adds spice to life.

Well, as I started out to say, my garden was infested with snakes, and I was persuaded to have a native charmer summoned to lure them away. His hideous occupation, weird incantations and strange pets surround the snake charmer with a peculiar fascination. His magnetism and skill are considered phenomenal in the east.

This specimen was tall and lank and had deep, cavernous eyes and an abstracted air. Some of the creatures were coiled around his wrist, which made him still more repellant. He handled them as if they were perfectly harmless. About the neck he wore a chain with a flute attached. Two other jugglers accompanied him, similarly attired, but minus the snakes. One carried a closed basket on his arm.

He stopped at a respectful distance to make his "salaam," which is the customary salute of the country. Then he approached the aloe hedge which inclosed my grounds, squatted himself tailor fashion on the grass and began to produce weird, plaintive sounds on the flute, to which music the reptiles entwined themselves around him and seemed to sway their bodies to and fro.

After some time a snake appeared, gliding slowly and stealthily out from the hedge toward the spot where it heard the enchanting music. The charmer allowed it to come quite close and to wind itself around his arm. Another followed and yet another, while the other two men stood by holding a basket ready to receive them as soon as they unwound themselves. At least a half dozen appeared and were disposed of in this manner. After being captured they appeared as if in a stupor.

Horrified with his performance, I begged him to stop and bade him leave the place. He assented and, picking up the basket, departed with the snakes without ever ceasing to play his uncanny tune. His companions gathered up the rest of his belongings and followed him. I paid a certain sum for each snake thus dispatched.

He came repeatedly thereafter and went through the same performance, conjuring up more reptiles and disposing of them in the same way until I began to suspect some trickery. He refused to allow the snakes to be killed, insisting that they were sacred and must not be put to death. It looked as if he replaced the snakes in the hedge after removing them, and thus he multiplied their number and increased his gains.

I was finally forced to have him removed by the police and threatened with punishment in order to keep him away. Nothing would persuade me to permit one of the fellows to enter my premises again.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Lesson VI.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 6, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xxvi, 17-30. Memory Verses, 26-28—Golden Text, Luke xxii, 19—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

This lesson, untitled "The Last Supper," is recorded by Mark and Luke as well as by Mathew, and there is a long portion recorded by John only (chapters xiii to xvii, inclusive). It is easy to read it. How often we have done so, but who can understand it? Only by the Spirit can we in any measure grasp a little of its significance. May each one of us have a special anointing to read, to write, to meditate, to teach, and may the Spirit have full control of us, that Jesus Christ may be glorified. Luke says that He sent Peter and John, saying, "Go and prepare us the Passover, that we may eat." Then they asked Him, "Where wilt thou that we prepare?" To which He replied that they were to follow a man whom they would meet, in the city bearing a pitcher of water, and by him they would find the furnished upper room. They found as He had said and made ready the Passover. With the "Where wilt thou?" of this lesson I have in mind the "What wilt thou?" of Acts ix, 6, with Prov. iii, 5, 6, and its "Trust—lean not—acknowledge—He shall direct." We cannot learn the way of peace and His guidance in all things until we have learned that we of ourselves know nothing and can do nothing. Then see what simple, ordinary things He uses—a man, a pitcher of water and, away back in the story, a shepherd's rod, a dream many a time, a barley cake, the dew, a vine, a fig tree, a gourd, a worm, a hen and chickens, sparrows, everything? If there seems to be delay in guidance He is saying, "My time is not yet," but in due time He will say, "My time is at hand."

When evening came He sat down with the twelve and spake of His great desire for this time, but that He would never again eat the Passover with them nor drink of the fruit of the vine till the kingdom of God should come (Luke xxii, 15-18), thus pointing to a future fulfillment of the Passover, when the deliverance of Israel from all nations would so far exceed the deliverance from Egypt that the deliverance under Moses would not seem worth mentioning in comparison (Jer. xxiii, 7, 8). Then followed, still between verses 20 and 21 of our lesson, the washing of their feet, with its great lesson of humility. Those who think that He taught only literal foot washing should consider His words to Peter, "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with me" (John xiii, 8). He washed the feet of Judas as well as of the others, yet Judas had no part with Him, and He said concerning him, "It had been good for that man if he had not been born" (verse 24). If the wicked are to be annihilated, as some teach, there is no force in this saying of Jesus. Some time during the feast Jesus indicated Judas as His betrayer by dipping a sop and handing it to him. Satan having then entered into Judas, Jesus said to him, "That thou doest do quickly," and he went out immediately, and it was night (John xiii, 26-30). It has been night with him ever since, and there is no morning for him (Isa. viii, 20, R. V.).

The Passover being ended and Judas having gone out to do his devilish work, our Lord took bread, blessed, brake and gave to the disciples and said, "Take, eat; this is My body." Then He took the cup and gave thanks and gave it to them, saying, "Drink ye all of it, for this is My blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Then He added a word about not drinking it henceforth till the kingdom comes (verses 26-29). Paul in his statement of this says that Jesus added both in reference to the bread and the wine, "This do in remembrance of Me," and he added, "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death till He come" (1 Cor. xi, 23-26). Those who teach that He gave them His actual body and blood to eat and drink should explain how this could be while He sat there among them. Rather let us accept His own explanation in John vi, 47, 54, that eating His flesh and drinking His blood is just believing in Him, for everlasting life is the result in each case, and there are not two ways of obtaining this life. What we eat we receive into us and assimilate it, and it becomes part of our body. As we eat His words, which are spirit and life, we eat Himself, and He dwells in us (John vi, 63; Jer. xv, 16).

We cannot begin to consider in so brief a lesson all the words and events of that evening, but between verses 29 and 30 of our lesson we must think of the whole of John xiv and with verse 31 of that chapter compare verse 30 of our lesson, remembering that John xiv is preceded by Peter's assurance of readiness to die with Jesus. How little we know ourselves! How well He knows us! And yet with all our vain boasting hear His "Let not your heart be troubled," as if He said: "You will find out what I know already, but do not think of yourself or be discouraged."

After verse 30 of our lesson we must think of the whole of John xv, xvi and xvii. Then in verse 31 hear His quotation from Zech. xiii, 7, and let the sword of that verse point you back to the sword of Gen. iii, 24, which must find a sacrifice, the antitype of Abel's lamb, if man would approach God.

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, 'Progress of the World;' a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, 'it's a liberal education,' is the way subscribers express it.

An Old Soldier Talks Plain.

Clanton, Ala., Oct. 31, 1910

Editor Banner:—Allow me space in the Banner to say a few words.

1st. I think the Banner is consistent, and right in its support of the Democratic State ticket and also in its support of Judge L. H. Reynolds for a second term. I am with the Banner on this line. I have been a democrat "died in the wool" since the war, in 1866 I and others organized a "Southern conservative club" in Coosa county near the "Devils half acre," in opposition to what was known then as "the Union League" which was made up of deserters negros and few old men who had decided that if they did not do something to prove that they were oppose to secession and in favor of the union that the penalty for living in the south was "certain death." I am yet a member of that Southern Conservative Club and unalterably opposed to "Hell and Africa," I contend that this is the white man's country, because it was discovered by white men, and by the sheding of white men's blood our republic was established and under our constitution each citizen is guaranteed the right to think and act for himself independently. This privilege I appreciate, I am going to give Judge Reynolds my vote and support for the following reasons: Under his administration the court and jail have been improved wonderfully, the public roads and bridges improved, 6 steel bridges built already and it is claimed that the county was in debt 6 years ago about $1,500 now it is out of debt with $15,000 in the treasury. Now the question is who is entitled to credit for all this? Who has financed the affairs of our county for the last 6 years? Judge L. H. Reynolds and the Commissioners Court. Who has built up your fine and forfeiture fund, L. H. Reynolds and Wm Adams (Solicitor). Who has raised county script from 25¢ in the dollar to 100¢, Judge L. H. Reynolds and Wm Adams Solicitor.) What has Judge Reynolds done to merit criticism? Is he to be despised because he is not the scum of a Banker, a lawyer, or a millionaire, and in fact because he is the son of a common farmer, and because he is not a latin scholar, or we to despise the Judge because he differs with us in politics? Did you ever know Judge Reynolds to charge any old Soldier, or widow, or church, or school for papers fixed up and recorded in his office? Did you ever hear of the Judge turning his back on any one in distress? I have scrutinized the official and moral conduct of Judge Reynolds for the last 18 months from a critics standpoint, and I must say in justice to him, while he and I have been warm personal friends I have found no difference nor discrimination in his office shown in his acts towards friends of foe, rich or poor, Methodist or Baptist, Saint or Sinner, Republican or Democrat.

I have found him ever kind, courteous and generous in his office, and in his every-day life, and after all being considered. I think the people should vote and act independantly and not be controlled by party, nor personal prejudice against their own interest in the coming election.

Let's not stop the progress of the county by having a Commissioners Court and Judge at variance with each other. I regard Judge Reynolds as a christian gentleman and worthy of the confidence and support of the people without regard to party line, he will do to trust with the affairs of our county. The question is who can and will be the most suitable man for Probate Judge of Chilton county for the coming 6 years. In this case I am for the good of the county at large as I see it and I shall vote for the man, L. H. Reynolds. Success to The Banner.

J. W. E. GULLEDGE.

Smoking That Maddens.

Marihuana is a weed used by people of the lower class and sometimes by soldiers, but those who make larger use of it are prisoners sentenced to long terms. The use of the weed and its sale, especially in barracks and prisons, are very severely punished; yet it has many adepts, and Indian women cultivate it because they sell it at rather high prices. The dry leaves of marihuana alone or mixed with tobacco make the smoker crueler than a wild beast. It is said that immediately after the first three or four drafts of smoke smokers begin to feel a slight headache; then they see everything moving, and finally they lose all control of their mental faculties. Everything, the smokers say, takes the shape of a monster, and men look like devils. They begin to fight, and, of course, everything smashed is a monster "killed." But there are imaginary beings whom the wild man cannot kill, and these inspire fear until the man is panic stricken and runs.—Mexican Herald.

The Curse of Cowdray.

Cowdray, once the estate of the earls of Egmont and now in the possession of Lord Cowdray, better known as Sir Weetman Pearson, is the subject of a very interesting superstition. Shortly after the dissolution of the monasteries Cowdray was conferred upon Sir Anthony Browne, the father of the first Lord Montague, who had already been given Battle Abbey as a reward for his services to Henry VIII. The story goes that Sir Anthony, who had destroyed the church and the cloisters in Battle Abbey, was visited in the great hall as he was holding his first feast by one of the dispossessed monks, who after solemnly cursing him, prophesied that his family should perish by fire and water. Two centuries and a half later the prophecy was tragically fulfilled. In 1793 the house was destroyed by fire and within a week of that disaster the last Lord Montague lost his life in Germany in an unsuccessful attempt to shoot the falls of the Rhine. —London News.

Halloween.

The wind amid the dun wood stirs,
With twofold energy it's sent
Upon the mystic revelers
Assembling when October's spent
To clang on pinions high in air
Or glide on gauzelike winds of lace
Or float on broomsticks everywhere
With devil's or with fairy's face.

Beside the fire the black cat lies,
Now and again uneasily
He starts with wild and fiery eyes
And longs for horrid mystery.
Then, when he thinks himself unseen,
Black Tom goes forth in wondrous guise
And joins the dance on Halloween
Of sprites and demons in the skies.

Camels Thus Ride.

The Bedouins decorate their baggage camels in the most fantastic manner. A huge pack saddle is surmounted by a still larger pannier. Above this again is a sort of chair in which the rider sits. The long strips of leather hanging down the sides are simply for decorative purposes. I have seen camels when too young to go on long treks being carried in these panniers, and they are always used for the Bedouin children.

This tribe has many quaint and curious customs. Perhaps the most curious of these is the manner in which they show their esteem for certain strangers. One evening when a young camel had been killed for the meal I noticed the women collecting the blood in a bowl. Then, to my astonishment, they started painting my camels on the necks and flanks with the blood. Unknowingly I was the recipient of the greatest honor that can be paid a stranger. The blood dried on and remained for a long time, acting as a talisman among all the Sherarat tribe.—Douglas Carruthers in Wide World Magazine.

A Tragedy of Instinct.

The processionaries are rather strange caterpillars. A single string of them five or six yards long has just climbed down from my parasol pines and is at this moment infolding itself in the walls of my garden, carpeting the ground traversed with transparent silk, according to the custom of the race. To say nothing of the meteorological apparatus of unparalleled delicacy which they carry on their spine, these caterpillars, as everybody knows, have this remarkable quality—that they travel only in a troop, one after the other, like the blind of Breughel or those in the parable, each of them obstinately, indissolubly following her leader; so much so that our author having one morning disposed the file on the edge of a large stone vase, thus closing the circuit, for seven whole days, during an atrocious week, through cold, hunger and unspeakable weariness, the unhappy troop on its tragic round without rest, respite or mercy, pursued the pitiless circle until death arrived.—Forum.

Spoiled It For Him.

Mr. Clarke's butler had asked for a night off, for the purpose, as he explained, of attending a ball in the village. The next day Mr. Clarke asked him how he had enjoyed himself.

"Oh, pretty good, sir, thank you," was the response. "It would have been better if it hadn't a-been for the women. I can't abide women at a ball."—New York Press.

JUDGE HUNTCUTT'S LETTER

From The Union.

Jemison, Ala. Oct. 25. 1910

I notice in your issue of last week the proceedings of the populist mass meeting at Thorsby, in which I am invited to mal e some speeches on the date given. I desire to thank my friends for this expression of confidence in me, and to also say I feel very greatful for the many kindnesses shown me in the past by the people of Chilton county, and will always be found ready to help them by my advice or otherwise when I am called on in the proper way.

It is very well known that I have never been much of a party man in county politics, but preferred to vote always for the man rather than the party, and I have not yet seen any good reason for changing my views on this subject. As I see the situation in this county now, the only issue is who shall hold the offices? I consider it a sacred duty every man owes his county to camly and deliberately study the fitness and qualifications of the different men seeking their votes, considering the influence that would control them after their election, and then cast their ballots for the best man for the place.

The office we are all mostly interested in is that of the Probate Judge, as it more directly concerning all of us. I feel deeply interested in the selection of a man for this place, and I feel that I have a right to know, and do know as well as any one in the county, the kind of a man best suited for this office.

I have had a long personal acquaintance with both the candidates for this office, and I believe that in point of fitness and ability Mr. Reynolds is far ahead of Mr. Deason, and if elected would discharge the duties of the office in a much more satisfactoty manner to the people of the county than would Mr. Deason. Should Mr. Deason be elected he would owe his election to the party machinery and methods, and would, in my opinion, be under the influence and control of a small set of lawyers and politicians around Clanton, while if Mr. Reynolds is elected he will owe his election to the plain, common people of the county, and will be left free to discharge the duties of the office as he understands those duties, and believe he will do this without partiality to any set, class or [illegible].

Mr. Deason is a nice young man and I would be proud to see him succeed in any worthy undertaking, but I consider it will be a great mistake for the people of this county to elect him to the most important office in the county at this time.

I do not feel that it will be right or proper for me to accept the invitation extended to me to make speeches mentioned at this time. I have never made any political speeches yet, and I do not see the necessity for it now, so I will ask the people to excuse me, and accept this explanation of my position as above.

Respectfully,
R. M. Huntcutt

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

The election is over, the voters have spoken and from the unofficial returns it seems the Democratic ticket has swept the country, and so far as Chilton is concerned a majority have voted for the Democrats—the county having given a majority of somewhere about fifty in favor of the Democrats.

There is one exception, apparently, however, it appears probable that Marion Foshee, the Republican nominee, has been elected Clerk of the Circuit Court by a small majority.

The State ticket, headed by Emmett O'Neal has been elected throughout by a majority of about fifty thousand. In Emmett O'Neal we feel assured the state has secured an excellent governor who will faithfully devote himself to the welfare of the people.

In the county the men elected are all good men and doubtless Chilton will continue to prosper under the new administration.

Incomplete returns fromnearly every county in the state received by The Advertiser indicate that 70,000 or more votes were cast in the election Tuesday, and that Mr. Emmet O'Neal has received 60,000 or more of these. His majority over J. O. Thompson, the black and tan Repuplican, is 50-[illegible], Scott the progressive Republican, polled a small and insignificant vote.

It was a triumphant victory for Mr. O'Neal and for the Democratic party. The expected scratching of the head of the ticket did not materialize to any considerable extent anywhere in the state, and in few cases did even the extreme prohibitionists fail to vote for him.

Thompson's vote was much smaller than he and his supporters believed it would be. If he carried a single county in the state, the returns do not show it. The few counties that have had the habit of going Republican in recent years fell out of this habit for a time and went Democratic This indicated how strongly the Democracy of the state was aroused. Even Chilton, which has not gone Demodratic in 20 years, cast its vote for the Democratic ticket, and Deason, a Democrat, was elected probate Judge over Judge Reynolds, Republican, who has been the master of the country for a score of years, and who tastes defeat for the first time in his long career of office holding.

Everything comes to him who waits is an old adage, and for some time I have been waiting for a big [illegible], when on Tuesday night some kind friends delivered at my door an excellent big box, the very thing I was looking for. It will make a splendid coal bin. Thank you, gentlemen, your favor is appreciated.

A display of the Stars and Stripes is always pleasing, and Will Garrison has been patriotically inclined to spreade the star spangled banner to the breeze at his store. Long may it wave, Will.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositer. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

NOTICE

FOR THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

Everything comes to him who waits in an old adage, and for some time I have been waiting for a big coal, when on Tuesday night some kind friends delivered at my door an excellent big box, the very thing I was looking for. It will make a splendid coal bin. Thank you, gentlemen, your favor is appreciated.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Banner: Please allow me space in your valuable paper to say a few words in regard to the Sunday School Convention held at Chestnut Creek. First: I wish to thank the people of that place for their kindness, every one seemed to enjoy it so much. Every Sunday-school in in the District was represented. The Sunday schools seemed to be improving. It is the request of the Convention that each School have the organized classes, the Home Department and Cradle Roll. Miss Gibson asks that the Sunday-school pledge be paid with in the next month. The Convention adjourned promising to meet with the people of Evergreene next time. Thanking the people again for their kindness.

I am yours,
AGNES FARR. Sec.

Oak Grove

The address made by Rev. H. M. Gray on "As Christians and Sunday-school workers, what should be our position on the temperance question" was great, and we hope the results of his talk will be farreaching and accomplish much good. The Sunday-school convention held with Oak Grove Sunday school will not only be remembered for the many good and interesting talks made in the convention, but also for the kind and hospitable manner in which they entertained the convention.

PATTILLO BROS.

BOY'S CORN CLUBS.

The question of how to hold young men of progressive ideas to the farm has long been one of our most serious problems, and the inability to solve it has been the chief cause of the deterioration of our lands. The matter has been reactive; ambitious boys have left the farm because it promised but little, and the farm has promised less because ambitious boys have left it. The final consequence in many cases has been that both boy and land have come to naught. Attaching the boy to the soil means the redemption of both boy and land. Dr. Knapp's idea is this: If young men can be made to see that farming is a scientific study as interesting as any other branch of productive knowledge, that it can be robbed of its old-time drudgery and hardships, that it can be made to pay more than even successful boys can expect for many years in competitive city employments, and that an easy income in early life will the sooner fit them for future influence and power, the problem will be solved, and the result of his work with the boys proves the truth of his conclusions.

This branch of the work is under Prof. O. B. Martin. The plan is to interest boys between ten and eighteen years of age in one thing on the farm, and corn-raising has been selected, partly because it has become necessary for farmers to pay more attention to feed crops. Corn clubs are organized by agents of the Government in conjunction with superintendents of education and teachers, the boys elect their own officers, the Government furnishes the instructions, parents furnish land, teams and implements, merchants and bankers offer prizes, newspapers keep the matter before the public, and the boys begin their career as farmers upon an acre each after the plan adopted for adult demonstrators. The boys have so many interests in them that they feel bound to succeed, and they do. Each boy keeps a strict account and makes a yearly report to the Bureau of Plant Industry. He must know the exact cost of his crop and how his profits have come to him, and he soon begins to realize to what extent success depends upon a knowledge of the work in hand and business methods applied to it.—From "Making Good Farmers Out of Poor Ones," by Rose Pendleton Chiles, in the American Review of Reviews for November.

ROMAN ARENAS.

They Were Not Mere Rings as Those of the Modern Circus.

The arenas of ancient Rome were not, as some people suppose, mere rings or ovals, such as may be seen in the modern circus. They were broken up and varied in character according to the nature of the fighting to be done or to the caprices of those in authority.

On one occasion an arena might resemble the Numidian desert, on another the garden of Hesperides, thick set with groves of trees and rising mounds, while again it pictured the great rocks and caves of Thrace.

With these surroundings the combatants advanced, retreated, encircled their adversaries or kept wild beasts at bay as occasion offered or as their courage or fear suggested. Men combated not only with the more common brutes, but with such monsters as elephants, rhinoceroses, hippopotamuses and crocodiles.

On other occasions flocks of game, such as deer and war ostriches, were abandoned to the multitude, and in some cases the arenas could be turned into lakes, filled with monsters of the deep, and upon the surface of which naval engagements took place.—London Saturday Review.

Hints to Swimmers.

An expert swimmer is authority for the assertion that a vast majority of the drowning casualties which are attributed to cramps are in all probability the result of cardiac exhaustion. Nearly all experienced swimmers, he says, know that cramps when in the water are of comparatively infrequent occurrence. It is commonly in the calf of the leg, and the swimmer by lying quietly upon his back without undue alarm and stretching out the leg may overcome this somewhat painful involuntary muscular contraction. The exertion of swimming, however, is fully equal to the exertion of running, with the additional tax upon the system of a gradual lowering of the bodily temperature. It is one thing to know how to swim and quite another to be in a physical condition to do the swimming.—London Globe.

BEHIND A SCREEN.

It was all settled between Tom Baxter and myself, and nothing remained except for him to ask papa. I did not expect that any opposition would be raised to our marriage, because Tom and papa were the best of friends. If Tom was about to engage in any business venture he would not do so until papa had expressed his opinion. If Tom proposed to buy an automobile, papa must recommend the car before the bargain was closed. And as for horses, neither would put one into his stable without consulting the other. Therefore I felt no concern as to the result of an interview with respect to an alliance which would draw the two only closer. One thing troubled me. Tom was so prone to consult my father about everything that it occurred to me he would scarcely scruple to ask him whether I would make a good wife. Of course this was a silly notion that had got into my head, but once there I could not get it out.

On the morning appointed for the momentous conference I espied papa and Tom on the piazza engaged doubtless in discussing the matter so near my heart. I would have been content to watch and hear the result from Tom had it not been for the ridiculous dread that he would talk me over as he would any article which he was about to purchase and upon which he wanted his friend's opinion. My pride told me to keep out of earshot. My woman's (call it curiosity) desire to be sure drove me into the parlor, where, through a window, only the blinds of which were closed, I could overhear every word spoken. The first sentence uttered by my lover convinced me that his habit had led him to act as I feared. He and papa were both smoking. Tom, taking his cigar from his mouth deliberately, asked with provoking coolness:

"Do you consider her pretty?"

"Not exactly," was the reply, "but you know that for what you want her she doesn't need to be showy."

"Never sick, is she?"

"Never—at least not to my knowledge. You know I have been abroad a great deal during the past ten years and at such times have not kept informed about her."

"Tom Baxter," I muttered, shaking my fist at him, "you may drop that conversation for all me. I will never be the wife of a man with so little sentiment."

Doubtless more of his business methods would appear in this affair of the heart. I must know the worst.

"The most important matter of all," Tom continued, "is her disposition. Knowing, as you do, what I want her for, I am quite sure you would never advise me to take her unless she is kind and gentle. I'm going to rely in this entirely upon your testimony. If she has any temper whatever I don't want her."

Upon my word, what impudence! If I have any temper whatever he doesn't want me! I should like to see him get me! He is to rave and swear and smash the furniture, while I, poor girl, am to be meek and lowly! I shall show my temper whenever I choose, but not to him. To him I am supremely indifferent, the impudent, self assuming, overbearing creature!

"Oh, as to that," said papa, "you'll have to drive with a tight rein. She frets occasionally, but she's very easily kept under."

Oh, papa, to think that you should speak so about your own daughter! I have heard that men always stand together against women, but I never believed my father and my lover would talk like this.

"On the whole, you think she'll do?"

"What do you think yourself?"

"I? Oh, there are several things about her I don't like at all."

"Such as"—

"In the first place her gait is very bad." Oh, you villain! "In the second her ears are altogether too large to indicate good breeding." You scoundrel! "Then that large head at the end of a long neck"—

I threw open the shutter with a bang and stood confronting Mr. Thomas Baxter with flashing eyes. Papa's back was turned, or I should have annihilated him too.

"If you want to know, sir, whether I have a temper, you may apply to me personally. I will show you my disposition at first hand."

He sat looking at me, stupefied. Papa turned and also surveyed me with a troubled countenance.

"Daughter, are you ill?"

"Ill? No—insulted, every feeling outraged. Temper! Bad gait! Big head at the end of a long neck! And you," turning to Tom, "are the man to whom but for this revelation I might have been tied for life!"

"Happy escape!" muttered Tom.

"What's the matter, Kit?" asked papa.

"Matter? Matter enough! And you, papa"—my voice trembled—"how could you describe your own Kate as you would a horse?"

"I have described a horse. Tom wished to know whether he had better buy Martin's bay mare for you to drive after you are married."

I collapsed. The first thing I did was to cover my burning cheeks with my hands, the second to rush upstairs to my room, the third to bury my face in a pillow.

The next day Tom Baxter went abroad. When six months after the lamentable occurrence I swallowed my pride and wrote him that I would forgive him for his inattention if he would come back, he wrote me in reply:

"Too skittish. Only the kind and gentle will do for family use.

I am forty and an old maid.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Eddie Collins, Leading Base Runner of American League.

Eddie Collins, second baseman of the Philadelphia Athletics, will probably carry off the base running honors in his league, with Tyrus Cobb second. Collins is one of the greatest ball players developed in the last few years. This is the true story of Collins' discovery: He had just finished a campaign with the Columbia varsity nine when Thomas F. McAvoy, former deputy police commissioner of New York, took him in tow. Mr. McAvoy, a veteran baseball fan and a competent judge of talent, saw in Collins a coming star. So he took the young collegian to the American league park one day and introduced him to Clark Griffith, then manager of the Highlanders, who was asked to try Collins in a regular game. Griffith, however, didn't enthuse and said, "Oh, let him come around some morning and I'll look him over." Collins, who wanted to be a Highlander, didn't relish Griffith's attitude and lost no time hunting up Connie Mack. "I'll sign you now," said the Athletics' manager, "and try you out later." And Collins became a star almost from the first jump. Griffith still remembers the incident too.

Boxing Game Wide Open In Berlin.

Professional boxing made its Berlin debut recently in the club at Charlottenburg. It was a most amiable affair of thirteen rounds between Jim Kalish and Hans Roschak. For twelve rounds it was a walking match, not fast walking, simply a stroll.

Kalish was clad in a well fitting dark blue combination that came up to his ears and down to his knees. Roschak was in a natty bathing costume. The referee introduced the men in a carefully prepared lecture, in the course of which he begged the spectators not to be alarmed if blood were accidentally drawn, as it would not hurt. "In fact, they rather like it," he added cheerily.

In what by mutual agreement was accepted as the thirteenth Roschak saw an opening, sailed in and walloped Kalish around the ring to the alarm of the referee, scolding Kalish finally to the floor, where he remained until the timekeeper, the referee, bottle holders, seconds, spectators and all counted ten. Then Kalish arose and walked to his corner.

Coach Warner Likes New Rules.

Football Coach Glen S. Warner of the Carlisle Indian school is pleased with the new rules. He believes that they will result in giving a more spectacular game and will consequently be more interesting to the public and less dangerous for the players than the code governing the game in former years. Coach Warner last year did some experimenting along the very lines that have been covered by the football rules committee. He said that he thought the forward pass would be used more than ever and believes that open and fresh formations will be greatly in vogue during the 1910 season.

International Horse Show.

Reports from London state that the fifth international horse show will be held at Olympia from June 14 to June 24 next. Prizes offered for competition will aggregate $50,000.

The secretary of the show is now in Russia, and it is hoped that several Russian entries will be made next year and that Russian officers will compete in the jumping contests as a result of his visit to the Moscow show. Italian entries are also expected. British officers' chargers are to be the show soon to be given in Rome.

A Joke on the King.

Sir Ernest Cassel was persona grata with King Edward VII. As a matter of fact there was a curious and striking resemblance between the back view of the late king and that of Sir Ernest. It was so pronounced that the great financier was known among his friends as "Windsor Castle."

There is a good story and a true one told in connection with this. It happened at a garden party at Windsor castle. A well known peer of the realm was strolling about when, as he thought, he spotted Sir Ernest sitting in a chair. Going toward him on tiptoe, he gave him a resounding smack on the shoulder.

"Hello, old Windsor Castle!" he cried. "How are you?"

The occupant of the chair, startled, turned around. It was King Edward, who, unaware of Sir Ernest's nickname, was for a time exceedingly vexed at this undue liberty. However, when the circumstances were explained to him he enjoyed the joke hugely.—London M. A. P.

The Bull Snake.

The bull snake, a species of pine snake, inhabits the shady pine woods along the Atlantic coast from New Jersey to Florida, but other species are found almost everywhere except in New England. The bull snake is quite harmless, but is a powerful constrictor. It lays eggs and feeds upon birds, rodents and eggs. It swallows an egg whole, and after the egg has passed a few inches down the throat—where it forms a large swelling—the serpent lifts its head, elevates its back and exerts a downward pressure until the shell breaks. Owing to a curious constriction of its epiglottis its hiss is so loud and so well sustained as to resemble the sound of redhot iron being plunged in water. The maximum length of these snakes is seven and a half feet. Their color is white, with the exception of the head and back, the former being spotted black and the latter brown.—Wide World Magazine.

Oyster Recipes.

A girl who cooks oysters a dozen ways in her chafing dish often prepares them quickly by heating a pint of them with a couple of tablespoonfuls of butter until the edges curl and then seasoning them with salt, paprika and a teaspoonful of lemon juice and stirring in the well beaten yolks of two eggs.

To pan oysters deliciously plump a pint of them first in a couple of tablespoonfuls of butter and then turn in half a cupful of rich cream and a tablespoonful of sherry with salt and paprika.

Pompadour Pudding.

Mix two tablespoonfuls cornstarch in a little cold milk and add yolks of three eggs, three-quarters cup of sugar and a little salt. Pour this into one quart of nearly boiling milk and cook in a double boiler until it thickens. Flavor with vanilla and beat well, then pour into a pudding dish. While warm cover with the following frosting: Beat whites of the three eggs stiff, add a half cup sugar, three tablespoons of cocoa or grated chocolate melted over hot water. Put into oven to stiffen. Serve very cold.

Novel Place Cards.

Instead of place cards, lettuce heads made of green tissue paper with tiny mirrors at the bottom were used for a girls' luncheon the other day. The guests were told upon entering the dining room that each must find the clew which told her her seat, and there was great fun and excitement until one girl looked inside of a lettuce head, saw her own reflection and dropped into the chair in front of it.

Free Remedy Helps Children

Many a mother has learned of a way of avoiding sickness in her family, especially among the children, by the use of a free sample bottle of the famous laxative, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This offer of the doctor's to send a free sample bottle has been responded to by thousands of women in all parts of America.

This Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a truly wonderful laxative and especially adapted to the needs of babies and children because it is pleasant to taste and no child will refuse it. Then, it is mild and never gripes. It is all that a child's remedy should be, though it is a good laxative for the whole family because it is effective at all ages. It is simply not dynamic like salts, pills and powerful cathartics, which should not be given to children anyway.

Nine times out of ten when a child complains and you don't know exactly what is the matter with it, it needs a laxative—its bowles are constipated. Syrup Pepsin will correct the trouble, tone up the child and soon it will be well again—over night wonderful results have been secured with Syrup Pepsin.

You can buy it of any druggist at fifty cents or a dollar a bottle, the latter being the family size, but you are invited to make a test of it first at the doctor's expense. Send him your address today and he will send you a free sample bottle direct to your home. Then when satisfied buy it of your favorite druggist.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specialized in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 462 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

Poultry Pointers.

Dark pin feathers give a dirty appearance to a dressed carcass.

A hen's appetite bears directly upon her egg production. Exercise gives it zest.

Shift your henyard about every year or two. The chicks will do better and keep healthier.

Two kinds of chickens will do to kill—those that haven't begun to lay and those that have quit.

Let farmers take more interest in exhibiting poultry at the county and state fairs. Pure bred fowls will advertise your farm.

If you wish your hens to lay well next spring it will be advisable to provide range for them. This can be done by planting a winter crop for their benefit.

Turn the poultry into the garden, if possible, during the last fall days. If the ground is plowed let them run over it before seeding. They will destroy quantities of insects.

Sow a small piece of rye or wheat near the poultry house to give your fowls late and early greens. In very stormy weather feed equal parts of corn, wheat, oats and beef meal ground together as a mash.

Teach the boy that it is better to be a man and a farmer than to be a hand or an arm or a wheel in somebody's factory.

PRODUCTION OF BROILERS.

...ing in These Choice Poultry Products if Well Handled.

The production of broiler chickens is the most when they are supposed to be the cheapest and most correct article on the menu is a very special branch of the poultry industry, says Farm Progress.

The "spring chicken" of the same age and of the same weight does not rank with the high priced "broiler" of the midwinter months, and the rearing of the latter requires especial conveniences and special care.

It is not a branch of the business adapted for general following, and before making arrangements to engage in it the market should be secured in one or more of the large cities, and the production to be profitable must be in very considerable numbers.

Broiler chickens are between three and four months old and must each weigh from one to one and a half pounds, live weight, and at this age should be plump and symmetrical with white flesh when dressed. For this purpose the white or buff breeds of the American or English races are

Southern Ruralist
OF ATLANTA, GA.

Is the Greatest Agricultural Paper in the South to-day. It covers every department of the farm and home. We have examined it carefully, and consider THE SOUTHERN RURALIST the most valuable premium we can offer our readers. It comes twice a month, 24 issues a year. A sample copy will be mailed free to any one on request.

The most valuable thing about the Southern Ruralist is the Prize Specials, which are published on the first of each month. The RURALIST pays $100 each month for the best articles from its subscribers on special subjects, such as Fall Plowing, Poultry, Fertilizers, Farm Tools, Gardening, Fruit Growing, Stock Raising, Dairying, etc. These articles come from every part of the country. They are written by men who do the work and give actual experience. They will help you as nothing else will.

PRODUCTION OF BROILERS.

Some Things in These Choice Poultry Products Must Be Well Handled.

The production of broiler chickens for the season when they are supposed to be the choicest and most correct article on the menu is a very special branch of the poultry industry, says Farm Progress.

The "spring chicken" at the same time and of the same weight does not compete with the high priced "broiler" of the midwinter months, and the rearing of the latter requires especial conveniences and special care.

It is not a branch of the business adapted for general following, and before making arrangements to engage in it the market should be secured in one or more of the large cities, and the production to be profitable must be in very considerable numbers.

Broiler chickens are between three and four months old and must each weigh from one to one and a half pounds, live weight, and at this age should be plump and symmetrical with white flesh when dressed. For this purpose the white or buff breeds of the American or English races are to be preferred to any of the Asiatics on account of their more rapid maturity.

Roomy and weather proof houses must be provided, but except in very cold climates no arrangements for artificial heating need be made in addition to those for warming the brooders.

The chickens are necessarily hatched in incubators, as during late September and October, when the eggs are laid the hens are mostly molting and, even if some show broodiness, are not in condition to be hatching and boy, caring young. Incubators and brooders, the former of the most improved pattern, are to be selected and their management experimented with and thoroughly mastered.

While a large number of brooders will be required, but some of these, designed for the chickens when quite well grown, many of the fireless sort of home construction, to be warmed by jugs of hot water which, when well wrapped, will retain their heat for many hours.

The hatched chicks become quite hardy, and when well cared for and properly fed are not subject to any of the diseases to which summer chickens are liable.

They will not need much range, but in warm, clear days may be permitted to exercise for a few hours on the ground in a wire fenced yard upon which the houses open, and on such days all the brooders ought to be opened for several hours.

Of course, the strictest cleanliness in all the appointments as well as in the food and water must be observed, and if the houses are new or have been thoroughly disinfected there will be no danger pests of any kind. The first of the chickens often sell for $1 a pound and later seldom for less than $1 per dozen.

Orchard and Garden.

Clean tillage. Everybody believes in it, but few practice it.

Blackberry plants affected with crown gall should be dug out and burned. There is no cure.

Where orchards are kept in grass, the grass should be mowed and left lying in place under the trees to rot.

A neat, clean, well painted and lettered market wagon attracts attention and helps to sell produce at good prices.

The leaves of your apple and peach trees show dark green and the growth is vigorous, you know that the soil is right.

The soil for the apple orchard must be thoroughly drained. It will not do to have the water stand about the roots of the trees.

Apple trees do best at a distance of thirty feet each way, unless it is a variety that tends to grow upward rather than outward.

Putting a small heap of rich stable manure around the base of each tree in the orchard will prove to be a little money profitably spent.

Don't lose money to step on a ladder, which the orchard owner soon finds, and all that can reasonably be done by pruning is to start the head of the trees low and keep it low is paying investment.

The good roads movement is a pleasure of moving over roads.

A TARCOOLER FUNERAL.

Weed Was Scarce, but They Managed to Rig Up a Coffin.

In most of the mining districts of South Australia there is a great scarcity of wood. Consequently, if you are so foolish as to die there you must not expect to have a coffin. Last year it became customary to be wrapped in a sack before being consigned to Mother Earth.

However, when a certain very prominent resident of a mining camp died the other people of the settlement—by the way, it was called Tarcooler, though coolness was unknown and Tarbotter would have been a more suitable name—determined that he should be buried in style. So they set about getting a coffin. They made one of a port, placed a lid on it and laid it (with the deceased inside) in an empty tent for the night.

Next morning the lid of the coffin was missing. It was afterward found that it had been stolen to make the tailboard of a butcher's cart.

However, in spite of this trifling loss the funeral was conducted with great solemnity. The coffin was much admired. It had been made out of the boxes in which the dynamite was sent to the mines. Some people might have considered that the obsequies were marred by the fact that the coffin bore in large letters on one side the legend "Keep dry," and on the other "Stow away from boilers," but that did not trouble the simple minds of the Tarcool-'uns.—London Tit-Bits.

WORSE THAN WAR.

Infernal Regions of the Buddhists and Mohammedans.

The infernal regions of Buddhism are horrible. They comprise a great hell and 136 lesser hells. In these hells, according to the sculptures of the Buddhist temples, men are ground to powder and their dust turned into ants and peas and spiders. They are pestled in a mortar. The hungry eat redhot iron balls. The thirsty drink molten iron.

Islamism says of the infernal regions: "They who believe not shall have garments of fire fitted for them. Boiling water shall be poured on their heads and on their skins, and they shall be beaten with maces of iron."

In the Scandinavian mythology, the mythology of Odin and Thor, we are told that "in Nastrond there is a vast and direful structure, with doors that face the north. It is formed entirely of the backs of serpents, wattled together like wickerwork. But the serpents' heads are turned toward the inside of the hall, and they continually send forth floods of venom, in which wade all those who commit murder or forswear themselves."

Her First Poem.

She was one of those soft eyed maidens, sweetly innocent, shy and gentle. She was unaccustomed to newspaper offices, but, being ambitious, she managed to find enough courage to try winning an editor's sympathy, sympathy to be expressed by the acceptance of her poem.

"I have here," she said demurely, "a little verse I've composed. I really don't know what you'll think of it. You may not like it at all, but it's my first—that is, the first I've ever written for a newspaper—and I'd be very pleased indeed if you honestly thought it was good."

The editor kept at his work, now and then scowling, but not at the young woman especially.

"It's about a maiden tripping o'er the lea," she continued.

"What was the trouble?" asked the man behind the paper. "Couldn't she lift her feet?"—Philadelphia Times.

Slightly Mixed.

He wasn't good at conundrums, but when his turn came to ask one at a little social party he thought he could remember a good one he had heard. It was the old riddle:

"Why is a woman like the ivy?"

The answer, of course, is the gallant explanation:

"Because the more you're ruined the closer she sticks."

But he got it mixed and asked:

"Why is the ivy like a woman?"

None of the ladies present could give an appropriate reply, so he himself ventured this maladroit solution:

"Because the closer it clings the more you're ruined."

A Beautiful Thought.

A little girl absorbed in gazing at the starry skies being asked of what she was thinking said, "I was thinking if the wrong side of heaven is so glorious what must the right side be!"

A Threat.

Immature Conductor (to clarinet player)—See here, Mr. Schlag, why don't you follow my beat? Veteran Clarinet (solemnly)—If you don't look swid I will!—Puck.

A Surprise.

Gertie—I want to give my sweetheart a surprise on his birthday. Can you suggest something? Arabel—Well, you might tell him your age.

Bad men excuse their faults; good men will leave them.—Johnson.

A Household Medicine.

To be really valuable must show equally good results from each member of the family using it. Foley's Honey and Tar does just this. Whether for children or grown persons Foley's Honey and Tar is best and safest for all coughs and colds. Uptonreh Drug Co.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VII.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 13, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xxiv, 32-51. Memory Verse, 44—Golden Text, Matt. xxvi, 41 — Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The greater part of this great discourse is recorded by both Mark and Luke as well as by Matthew. As they left the temple one day His disciples called His attention to the great buildings with the goodly stones and gifts, and they were evidently greatly surprised by His remark that all would be thrown down and not one stone left upon another. Four of them came to Him privately as He sat upon the Mount of Olives and asked Him a question which was really threefold, though they probably thought it one. The destruction of the temple. His coming again and the end of the age were two, if not three, distinct events. In His discourse he covered the reply to all. The whole age until He shall come again will be characterized by wars, famines, pestilences and earthquakes, with increasing wickedness until it shall be as it was in the days of Noah.

In Luke xxi, 24, He very plainly referred to the approaching destruction of Jerusalem and covered this present age by the words, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles until the times of the gentiles be fulfilled." With this verse we should associate Rom. xi. 25, 26. Many of the circumstances connected with the destruction of Jerusalem were foreshadowings of those at the end of the age, and the warnings are therefore similar.

Verses 27-31 of our lesson chapter speak plainly of His coming in power and glory immediately after the great tribulation at the end of this age. The destruction of Jerusalem was in no sense His coming, for it is written in Psalm cii, 16, that when He shall appear in His glory He will build up Zion, not destroy it. He is coming again to restore all things of which the prophets have spoken (Acts iii, 21).

The events in the east today are most startling if considered in the light of verses 32-35 of our lesson and compel us to believe that the kingdom of God is again at hand after the long interval of its postponement during this age. The zeal and aim of Zionism, the new regime in Turkey, her favor to the Jews, a large part of the land given to Abraham (Mesopotamia) being now offered to them, and the unrest among the nations generally, all point to the approaching end of the age and the coming of the kingdom. How marvelously has the generation or race or nation of Israel been preserved for the fulfillment of all things (verse 34), and soon now shall they be recognized as a nation, perhaps under the suzerainty of Turkey, with Jerusalem as their capital. That will, however, mean for them the beginning of their great trouble (Jer. xxx, 7) ere Jerusalem shall become the throne of the Lord at His coming in glory to set up His kingdom. That Israel is God's fig tree as well as His vine, see Joel i, 7, and note the events of Joel iii in their order. The utter ungodliness of the days of Noah cannot be fully manifest until after the church is taken, but the manifestations already on every hand in church and state are most unmistakable. The war craze of nations, the unrighteousness of government in cities and states, the infidelity in the seminaries and in the pulpits, the disregard of God and His word everywhere, should compel us to cry, "Come, Lord Jesus." At the coming of Christ to the air for His saints the true church shall be taken, all others left, but at the coming to the earth with His saints at the end of the age the tares shall first be gathered in bundles for the burning. "Ready" is the great word for us all, as we saw in a recent lesson. No unsaved person, whether moral or immoral, sober or drunken, drunken according to Isa. xxviii, 7, is ready except for the burning, the weeping and gnashing of teeth (verse 51; xxv, 41). The readiness necessary has been provided in Jesus Christ by His great atonement, His pure life, His death in our stead, suffering for our sins, His resurrection from the dead, and any who will not plead guilty and accept Him and His righteousness must perish and be separated from Him.

If we are redeemed and thus ready to meet Him we must never cease to watch and pray, lest the world, the flesh or the devil cause our light to fail or even to flicker, and we thus dishonor Him. "Faithful and wise" is the only motto that will enable us to be approved of Him (45). We must beware of saying or even of thinking, "My Lord delayeth His coming" (48), lest we be found careless and conformed in some measure to this present evil age. The oil of the next chapter must fill our lamps, and the light must so shine that men may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven (Matt. v, 16). The only proper attitude of a child of God is "waiting for His Son from heaven," "looking for that blessed hope" (I Thess. i, 10; Titus ii, 13), and while thus expectantly waiting, aiming in all things to serve the living and true God. Ever ready to do whatever our Lord the King shall appoint (II Sam. xv, 15). "Ready to every good work" (Tit. iii, 1). "Ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear."

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

We cannot help ourselves, the rules of the post office are not to be trifled with.

Commissioners Court was in session Monday and adjourned for two weeks.

The question of when to sell cotton is one to which we will not attempt to give any positive answer; but we believe that, one year with another, there is one safe rule: Begin selling early, if prices are good; stop selling when prices begin to break; sell only enough at first to get yourself free from debt; store your surplus in the dry and market gradually, keeping in touch with the markets and refusing to sell when prices break. The man who is independent can sell when he chooses; the man in debt must sell at the demand of his creditors, hence our advice first to get out of debt and then hold whenever the market is depressed.—Starkville (Miss.) Progressive Farmer and Gazette.

Estimate of Commissioner of Agriculture J. A. Wilkinson that the 1910 cotton crop is in a lamentable condition as a result of the recent frosts which visited this state last week, has had somewhat of a disquieting effect in the cotton market centers of this section of the state.

In the opinion of the commissioner, it is given out that was standing at the time of the frost is now 50 per cent short of its promice. In other words he estimates that just about 50 per cent of the standing crop was killed, and that as a consequence the entire crop of 1910 will just about aggregate the 1909 output.

BEWARE OF CONSTIPATION

It is the first or primal cause of many of our diseases. St. Joseph's Liver Regulator is an ideal treatment for constipation. It acts in a natural and easy manner (not by violent purging) and gently loosens the bowels thus forestalling the long train of evils which result from the clogging of the system with offensive refuse. This remedy is a wonderful stimulator of liver, stomach and bowels, inducing and maintaining healthy, natural action. Price liquid 50c a bottle; powder 25c a box, five boxes one dollar.

The Green Flash of Sunset.

One of the most rarely witnessed of natural phenomena, but one that has often been discussed at scientific meetings and that always awakens wonder when seen, is the so called "green flash" occasionally visible at the moment of the disappearance of the sun behind a clear horizon. The observer's eye must be fixed upon the rim of the sun as it disappears in order to catch the phenomenon. One authority tells us that he has seen the green flash, although rarely, at the instant of the setting of a bright star. Among the explanations offered is one based upon the optical principle of complementary colors. If one looks at the sun and then closes the eyes a green disk will be perceived. A sensitive eye might be similarly affected by a brilliant star.—New York Herald.

He Took the Blame.

"The guilty man always gives himself away," said a detective, "for, like the chap who bought the forty-cent bathing suit, he can't hide his guilty conscience. The chap I have in mind entered the water at Atlantic City in a forty-cent suit of blue flannel. As he splashed about he was joined by a girl friend. The girl flashed her bright eyes over the tumbling expanse of sea and then with a sigh of delight she said:

"'Isn't the water blue today?'

"'It's shameful,' said the man, with a hot blush; 'it's perfectly shameful how this cheap bathing flannel runs!'"

How to Look Pleasant.

By her gracious and cordial manner the wife of a western senator has long charmed those so fortunate as to attend her delightful "functions."

On one such occasion a close friend was alluding to the hostess' graceful method of making every one feel at home. "How on earth do you manage to do it?" the friend asked.

"Oh, it's easy enough," replied the woman with the engaging manner. "As each guest approaches to shake hands I just pretend to myself that the person I am going to speak to is some one I like."—Chicago Record-Herald.

SNAPSHOTS AT CELEBRITIES

Fred W. Plaisted, Governor Elect of Maine.

Frederick W. Plaisted, mayor of Augusta, who has just been elected governor of Maine, is the first Democrat to be so honored since 1880. In that year Harris M. Plaisted, father of the governor elect, was chosen chief executive of the Pine Tree State on a fusion Democrat Greenback ticket. Mayor Plaisted is editor and proprietor of the New Age, a Democratic weekly, and his father went from the editorial chair of that paper to the executive chamber of the statehouse.

He was elected mayor of Augusta in 1906 and re-elected in 1907 and in 1908, in each election carrying six of the eight wards. He is the first Democratic mayor with a single exception to be elected in Augusta for a period of forty years.

Under the administration of Mayor Plaisted a great deal of permanent work was done. He was defeated for mayor in 1909 and re-elected in 1910.

Governor Elect Plaisted was born in Bangor forty-five years ago and was educated in the common schools of his native city and at St. Johnsbury academy, Vermont, where he was graduated in 1884. He is prominent in Freemasonry and is also a member of the Elks.

Prominent as an Educator.

President Woodrow Wilson of Princeton university, standard bearer of the New Jersey Democrats in this fall's race for the governorship, has been prominent as an educator and political economist for many years. In his speech of acceptance before the convention that nominated him Dr. Wilson expressed confidence in his election and said:

"The time when you can play politics and fool the people has gone by. Now it is a case of put up or shut up. Parties must show that they are working not solely for offices, but for the common interest. The great issues of this campaign are a reorganization of and economy in state administration, equalization of taxes among the people and corporations and state control of corporations. To these problems and their solution I pledge myself."

Dr. Wilson is a native of Virginia and is fifty-four years old. He was graduated from Princeton in 1879 and then studied law at the University of Virginia. After practicing law at Atlanta for a few years he took the chair of history and political economy at Bryn Mawr college, going thence in the same capacity to Wesleyan university. In 1890 he went to Princeton as professor of jurisprudence and politics, continuing in that work until 1902, when he became head of the university.

"I do not believe there is any other medicine so good for whooping cough as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy," writes Mrs. Francis Turpin, Junction City, Ore. This remedy is also unsurpassed for colds and croup. For sale by all dealers.

Substance of Modern Cameos.

The substance of which a modern cameo is made is a piece of sea shell. Every one must have noticed that, while the outside of many shells is rough and unseemly, the interior is perfectly polished and often a brilliant color. If the shell be broken the way in which the two layers lie upon and pass into each other may be clearly seen. Shells are chosen on account of the thickness and hardness of the layers, of the contrast of color between them and the presence of knobs on the exterior surface, which render it possible to work in relief.

What Heads Are These?

There's a head whose mission it is to glow,
A head which often leads to woe;
There's a head that's a very unwelcome guest
And a head worn by ladies when thought well dressed;
There's a head very good for food, 'tis said,
And a head marks the resting place of the dead.
There's a head on every sailboat at sea,
And a head which means progress for you and me.

Answers.—Headlight, headstrong, headache, headdress, headcheese, headstone, headsail, headway.

Gingerbread Without Eggs.

Two cupfuls of molasses, one cupful of sour cream, two teaspoonfuls each of soda and ginger, four and one-half cupfuls of flour; bake slowly. It may fall slightly, but will still be light.

MACON, GA., HAS $100,000 FIRE LOSS

Daily Telegraph Plant Goes Up In Ch[illegible].

ONE FATALITY [illegible] REPORTED

Raymond Clay, Linotype Operator, in the Confusion Incident to the Fire, Was Cut Off From Escape and Perished—Charred Body Found.

Fire Thursday destroyed the plant of The Macon Daily Telegraph, causing the death of Raymond Clay, a linotype operator, and entailing a loss of approximately $100,000, most of the files of the paper, some of which were nearly 100 years old and very valuable, were lost.

Fanned by a high wind, flames which originated in the mailing room swept over the press room on the first floor adjoining and rapidly ate their way through into the operating room above on the second floor. With little warning, editors, linotype operators and printers were driven from the building.

The body of young Clay was found in a closet, where he had gone, apparently, in an effort to escape. He was here only a week, coming from Knoxville and Atlanta. He was said to have been unacquainted with the building, and lost his life in a futile attempt to get out.

Other operators in the make-up rooms were forced out rapidly, and no one thought to look for the man in the excitement. In the effort to locate him, fellow machine men went back into the smoking ruins and found his body burned almost beyond recognition.

A stubborn fight of the city fire department failed to stop the flames, which swept through the building from the rear. The operating force was driven from the linotype machines and the fire followed into the editorial rooms. The entire force of the paper was driven from their posts of duty, hardly realizing how rapidly the fire was spreading.

The building, owned by Miss Amelia Horne, was a two-story structure and was well insured.

The plant of The Telegraph sustained a loss of fully $75,000, the insurance being hardly sufficient to cover the amount swept by the flames. The new press recently purchased will not be a total loss, but all the new machines, with the stereotyping outfit, furniture and equipment, were destroyed.

CHARGE OF CONSPIRACY.

Alleged Attempt Made to Defraud U. S. Government.

Federal indictments charging conspiracy to defraud the government out of more than 20,000 acres of Alaska coal lands, valued at $200,000, were returned by the federal grand jury at Spokane, Wash., against six men who control three groups of coal lands in the Bayak mining district in Alaska. Each group represents 131 claims of 160 acres each.

Those indicted are Raymond Brown and William L. Dunn, of Spokane; Charles M. Doughton, formerly of Spokane, now of Seattle; former Mayor Harry White, of Seattle, now living in Los Angeles; Charles A. McKenzie, of Seattle, and Donald A. McKenzie, of Washington, D. C., Seattle and Alaska.

The indictments charge that the six men had agreements with the claimants whereby they were to have a half interest in the claims, which would give them more land than they were legally entitled to.

Among those who were assigned one or more of the claims were former Governor John H. McGraw, of Washington; Governor James N. Gillett, of California; Congressman McLachlin, of California; Henry T. Oxnard, of New York and California, president of the American Beet Sugar Company, and former Mayor Harry White, of Seattle.

FOR EDUCATION IN GEORGIA.

State to Receive Sum of $9,700 From Peabody Fund.

Georgia education is to receive $9,700 from the Peabody educational board next year.

Five thousand dollars of this amount is to be expended in an educational campaign, while the remainder is to be used for specific educational purposes.

Of the balance, $2,700 has been again appropriated for the salary and expenses of Prof. R. H. Powell to continue his work as rural school supervisor, which he has so successfully prosecuted during the past year. This is not an appropriation for a new man, but to continue the work which Professor Powell has been doing.

Another $1,000 is to be for rural school supervision under the direction of the State Normal school at Athens. The remaining $1,000 is to be used in a like manner, but under the supervision of the Georgia Normal and Industrial school at Milledgeville.

Disagreeing as to the crop settlement and domestic affairs, George and Andrew Sunday, brothers, and Jack Phillips became involved in an argument at a cotton gin near Conroe, Texas, which terminated in the killing of Phillips.

3,804 KILLED, 82,374 HURT.

Record of Railroad Casualties in U. S. for Past Year.

"Killed, 3,804; injured, 82,374"—this is the casualt, record of the railroads in the United States during the year ended June 30 last, according to the interstate commerce commission. It is an increase of 1,013 in the number killed and 18,454 in the number injured over the previous year's record.

There were 5,861 collisions, killing 433 people and injuring 7,7765, and damaging railroad property $4,629,279 In the 5,910 derailments during the year, 340 persons were killed and 4,814 injured. During the last three months of the year the total killed or injured was 20,650.

LINER KURDISTAN LOST AT SEA

Two Seamen, Sole Survivors, Tell of Disaster.

CARRIED A CREW OF FORTY

Vessel of the Anglo-Algerian Line Wrecked Off the Sicily Islands, and All But Two of the People Aboard Lost Their Lives.

Two seamen, the sole survivors, arrived at Teneriffe, Canary islands, and told of the loss of the Anglo-Algerian liner Kurdistan off Sicily October 20. The steamer carried a crew of forty. The number of passengers is not known.

The survivors reached there on the German steamer Santa Ursula. The Kurdistan was long overdue at Marseilles and the owners sent out a vessel to search for her. She sailed from Manchester on October 17, and the fact that she had foundered was the first intelligence since received.

The Kurdistan was of 1,741 tons and was commanded by Captain Manning.

A BUSY "PRINT SHOP."

Vast Amount of Work Done in Government Office.

Some idea of the vast amount of work that is done in the government printing offices annually can be gained from the figures just completed for the type composition for last year. More than 3,000 tons of type metal were used in making 1,963,899,000 ems of type of every description.

If the individual lines of type were placed end-to-end they would stretch over a distance of 31,000 miles or more than one and one-fifth times the circumference of the earth.

BOLL WEEVIL CAMPAIGN.

Pest Is Threatening the Cotton Fields of Georgia, It Is Reported.

Plans for a vigorous campaign of extermination against the boll weevil, which is threatening to invade the cotton fields of Georgia within the next year, will be laid at a boll weevil conference which will be held at the new Auditorium-Armory in Atlanta on November 22 and 23.

The conference has been called by the chamber of commerce, the state department of agriculture and the state department of entomology, and will be attended by many agriculturists from the southern states.

The approach of the boll weevil, which is moving rapidly on Georgia from Alabama, constitutes the greatest menace to the cotton industry in this state and the necessity of immediate action has resulted in the call for a conference to discuss the best methods of exterminating the pest.

Private telegrams at Helena, Mont., say that four persons were killed in a collision between a passenger train and a stock train on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway between St. Paul and Miles City, Mont. Among the dead are W. D. Hill, of Miles City, a wealthy stock man, and his son.

MAN KILLS WIFE, SON AND HIMSELF

Terrible Tragedy Enacted at Lawrenceville, Ga.

FAMILY WAS PROMINENT

Well Known Citizen of Georgia Town, While Laboring Under Temporary Insanity, As Is Supposed, Deals Death in Family Circle.

While suffering from temporary insanity, according to the statement of members of his family, but, according to statements of others, frenzied by alleged differences that may have existed between himself and his second wife, Joel D. Wallace, one of the most prominent merchants and grocerymen of Lawrenceville, Ga., and a former councilman, shot and killed his wife Monday night, turned his revolver upon Cline, his 7-year-old boy, whom he killed instantly; shot his son, Felton, 9 years old, and then fired three bullets into his own body, killing himself instantly.

The exact cause of the deed will never be known, as those who were participants are all dead with the exception of Felton, who is shot through the right shoulder, and though in all probability he will recover, he can throw no light on the story of the tragedy. The cause of the dead man's deed was evidently known only by his wife and himself.

Daughter An Eye Witness.

Cline, the boy who was shot and killed, knew nothing of the tragedy, as he was standing by his mother's side holding her hand when his father shot him to death. Felton, the boy who was wounded, heard no further reason from his father than that he had killed his mother. One daughter, Miss Lottie Bell, who reached her mother's side, saw her father shoot Cline. She saw him turn on Felton and shoot him through the shoulder, and then fall back lifeless on the floor as he placed the pistol to his own breast and sent the bullet crashing through his body that carried with him into eternity his secret of the tragedy.

Members of the family say that the tragedy was caused by their father shooting his mother while temporarily insane. Driven to distraction by what he had done, so the members of the family say, he attempted to kill every one that came within his range. The tragedy came without a word of warning to the citizens of the quiet and peace-loving town of Lawrenceville.

Had Twice Married.

Wallace had been married twice, his first wife having died 25 years ago. He married again, a Miss Minnie Mowman, of Hog Mountain district. They had to all appearances lived happily and peacefully.

Monday night, shortly after supper, Wallace left his family in the best of spirits. His family retired shortly after 9:30 o'clock. About 10 o'clock Wallace returned from the lodge room to his home. Those who had seen him at the lodge said that he was in the best of spirits. This was also the statement of those who had seen him earlier in the day. The members of the family lived peacefully without one word of apparent discord. Wallace was thought to be one of the most conservative citizens of Lawrenceville. He had recently built a new store, which was worth $10,000, and he owned other valuable property nearby. He had served as a city councilman, and was prominent in the Odd Fellows' fraternity.

A UNIQUE CAMPAIGN.

Hoosier State Furnishes Queerest Political Race on Record.

"Any gol-derned party that didn't have any more sense than to nominate me for the position of justice ought to see elected a man like Joseph Zehner, even though he is a democrat."

That is the kind of stump speech Isaiah Duddleston, republican candidate for justice of the peace in Delaware township, has been making.

He has been working hard for the election of his opponent, Joseph Zehner, and Mr. Zehner has been working just as hard to try to elect the republican candidate. The campaign has become so warm that both have been indulging in personalities, each decrying his own ability and lauding his opponent. The campaign is no joke with the two candidates, although it affords humor for the entire county, as the office pays little and would interfere wit hthe business interests of the candidates.

TEXAS EXPOSITION.

Senator Bailey Delivers Opening Address—Automobile Parade Features.

The Texas Cotton Palace and Exposition of Manufactures, Agricultural and Horticultural Products and Liberal Arts was opened at Waco, Texas, by O. B. Colquitt, the democratic nominee for governor.

Representative Maxwell, seated in a gigantic bell, with prongs several feet long, represented "King Cotton." The opening address was delivered by Senator Joseph W. Bailey. The exposition will remain open sixteen days.

An automobile parade was a feature of the opening day.

The budget for New York city for the year 1911, as finally adopted by the board of estimate, foots up to $174,079,335, nearly $11,000,000 higher than that for 1910, which amounted to $163,136,370.

DIES FROM ARSENIC DOSE.

In Fit of Despondency, Miss Crowder, of Barnesville, Takes Her Life.

Miss Georgia Crowder died at Barnesville, Ga., from the effects of a big dose of arsenic which she took, evidently with suicidal intent.

Her act was discovered soon after she took the arsenic, and physicians called, but their faithful efforts were without avail. Miss Crowder was the daughter of E. T. Crowder, an old and respected citizen of the city.

For some time she had been in bad health, and the death of a sister some months ago made her despondent.

She was a graduate of Gordon institute, and had been engaged in teaching, having successfully taught schools in different parts of Georgia.

FIVE MINERS KILLED.

Fatal Mine Explosion Occurs in Yolonde Mines in Alabama.

A gas explosion occurred in the mines of the Yolonde Coal and Coke Company and five men were killed. The mines are located at Tuscaloosa county, 30 miles south of Birmingham.

The bodies of the victims have been taken out of the mine. This is not the first explosion of gas in these mines, 45 men being killed there once before, with three men killed a few months ago and two badly burned recently.

The explosion in mine No. 1 of the Yolonde company was a local one, a pocket of gas being ignited by a naked lamp. All five victims were white men, Fred Steel, James Walker, married; George Thomas married; John Creek, Thomas' son-in-law, and Len Grant.

50,000 BALES LOST.

Georgia Cotton Crop Damaged, Declares Hudson.

That the cotton crop in Georgia was damaged 50,000 bales by the cold wave which struck the state last week, is the opinion expressed by Commissioner of Agriculture Thomas G. Hudson, who has just returned to Atlanta from a tour around the state.

"The top crop of cotton was exceedingly short this year or the crop would have been hurt much worse," declared Mr. Hudson.

Mr. Hudson figures that the total crop for the state this year will not exceed 1,300,000 bales, as against 1,900,000 last year.

STRIKE IS SETTLED.

Garment Workers and Clothing Makers Reach Agreement.

The garment workers' strike, which called out 40,000 persons in the clothing trade and which was productive of numerous small riots, has been settled at Chicago.

Announcement of the settlement of the strike came from the offices of Hart, Schaffner & Marx, whose shops have been the vortex of the trouble. Details were not given out.

Jane Addams, the settlement worker, and National President Rickert, of the garment workers, were active in the negotiations. The strike was called for the purpose of compelling recognition of the union. The matter of wages was not involved.

OFFERS $50,000 REWARD.

Dr. Munyon Believes Actress Wife of Crippen Is Alive.

To back his belief that Belle Elmore, the wife of Dr. Hawley H. Crippen, still lives, Dr. J. M. Munyon, of Philadelphia, it is said, has offered a reward of $50,000 to any one who will produce her.

"I believe," continued Dr. Munyon, who formerly employed Crippen, "that either the woman is hiding to carry out one of the most consummate revenges in the annals of jealousy, or else that she has carried an advertising game too far. I have received several letters from persons who knew Mrs. Crippen, telling me that they had seen her alive in this country within the last few weeks."

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS. Among the fifty-eight awards made by the Carnegie hero fund commission at Pittsburg, Pa., were two men from Georgia. James B. Ledbetter, of Camilla, Ga., was awarded a bronze medal for bravery. At Newton, Ga., June 11, 1909, Ledbetter rescued Miss Carrie Graham, aged 20, a school teacher, of Griffin, Ga., from drowning in the Flint river at Newton ferry. Charles C. Baxter, aged 21, a dairyman of Stone Mountain, was awarded a bronze medal for bravery for rescuing Annie B. Coker, aged 5 years, of Stone Mountain, from being killed by a railroad train May 9, 1909, at Stone Mountain.

The government's finances took a downward twist during the last three days of October and tricked experts who had been predicting a surplus for the month and hoping for an even break at worst. Exclusive of the Panama canal charges, the receipts for the month were $55,266,441, and the expenditures were $58,560,323, which left a deficit in ordinary operations of $3,293,882. Add to that sum the month's cost of the work on the canal and $5,295,038 stands on the wrong side of the ledger.

The Equities Securities Company, it was learned, has purchased the Harriman property located at North Augusta, in South Carolina, just across the Savannah river from Augusta. Mrs. Edward H. Harriman is said to have received $5,000,000 for the property, which includes an electric railroad over 50 miles in length, an electric light plant, over 3,000 acres of land and the hotel, the Hampton Terrace.

The striking expressmen gained adherents at New York when between 1,500 and 1,800 workers of Monahan's Express, the Boston Despatch and the Manhattan Delivery Company joined issue with them. The platform men of the American Express Company at the Grand Central station, and the same company's waybill clerks went out in sympathy. More than 10,000 men are now on strike demanding increased pay and shorter hours.

The war office at Berlin has acquired aeroplanes of five different types. These comprise the Wright, Sommer, Farmen and Avatik biplanes, and the Ettrick monoplane. Various tests of far-reaching character will be made with these machines and the government will then make extensive purchases for the army.

A compromise agreement was reached by the interstate commerce commission at Washington in the New England demurrage cases, whereby the railroads will reduce from four days to two days the time within which freight cars may remain loaded without demurrage charges, except as to lumber, grain and coal.

Quakers and Bandagists.

"I was in a case in which first aid to the injured was imperative, but no one knew how to unravel the bandages. Finally a bandaged beggar who had been sitting on the curb cast his recipe (provided by the woman in the crowd) for fashioned bandages, and applied them skillfully. 'Where did you acquire all that skill surgeon?' a bystander asked. 'Why, one of the first things the men in my profession learn,' was the curt response. 'Half our success depends upon arrangement of bandages so that when we look as if we had been called in. No doctor can be depended on to fix us up, so we have to do our bandaging. Johnny Roche's Tower.

A building on the banks of the river Blackwater, between Mallow and Fermoy, County Cork, Ireland, is a remarkable structure known as "Johnny Roche's Tower." The whole tower was built by the labor of one man, who subsequently resided in it. This individual, who had no education whatever, also built a mill, constructing the water wheel after a special design of his own before the introduction of the turbine. He went about the country in a covered vehicle of his own construction, propelled by foot power. His last work was to build his tomb in the middle of the river bed. John Roche died, but was not interred in the strange resting place which he selected for himself, his less original relatives following such a mode of sepulture unknown.—London Strand Magazine.

The Origin of Pyrography.

About a century ago an artist named Munch was standing one day in front of a fire in his home at Axminster. As the fireplace was an oaken mantel, and it occurred to Crauch that this expanse of wood might be improved by a little ornamentation. He picked up the poker, heated it red hot and began to sketch in a bold design. The result pleased him so much that he elaborated his work and began to attempt other fire pictures on panels of wood. These met with a ready sale, and Crauch soon gave all his time to his new art. This was the beginning of what is now known as pyrography.

Cookery Points

When a child's birthday happens to fall on a special holiday the colors appropriate to that occasion can be used in the candles, as buff and blue for the 22d of February; red, white and blue for the Independence day child and holly painted candles for the Christmas birthday cake.

Wonderful color combinations can be made with colored icings—put on with a pastry tube in designs—and candles to harmonize or form a contrast.

Every child should be given the privilege of cutting his own birthday cake.

Cunning birthday cakes of tiny proportions can be bought for babies' first birthday. The one candle is larger than those used later and sometimes can be bought with the child's first name decorating it in gilt letters.

When for any reason a child has been unable to come to the birthday party at the last minute his slice of cake, with candle attached, is wrapped in paraffin paper and sent to him.

Sponge cake or a simple cup cake batter is the best birthday cake for young children, as many mothers are fussy about their children eating rich food.

Deviled Kidneys.

Procure some lambs' kidneys, remove the skin and vein or cord and then gash with a sharp knife, rub the kidneys with a prepared seasoning, then brush with bacon fat and broil, or they may be fried with bacon over a very hot fire if a broiling fire is not to be had. Now prepare a sauce from two-thirds of a cupful of scalded milk thickened with butter and flour rubbed to a paste, using a tablespoonful of each; when thickened and smooth remove to the back of the range and stir in an egg yolk, a little salt and paprika, one-half tablespoonful of finely minced parsley and one teaspoonful of lemon juice. If the kidneys are fried with bacon fat, the gravy left in the pan may be added to the sauce if desired. Place each kidney on a round of buttered toast, dot with butter and pour the sauce around each slice of toast, placing one spoonful on top of each; and serve at once.

A Puzzle Tea.

"Everybody to make her own tea" was the puzzling addition to a verbal afternoon tea invitation issued last week from a mountain camp. Was it to be individual tea balls, or plain little messy cheesecloth bags of tea with which they were to conjure? was the question of the guests as they assembled on the wide veranda. But when a tray came around with a small parcel of green cardboard for each it fell out that this was a puzzle T which was to be put together before tea was served. The person who got her T together first was given a package of choice tea.

Failed in Health

"My mother died six years ago," writes Miss Ruth Ward, of Jerseyville, Ill., "and left me to care for six children. I had never been strong; and this, with the shock of her death, was too much for me.

"I failed in health. I was tired all the time and did not want to go anywhere, nor care for company. I had the headache all the time and such bearing-down pains.

"A very dear friend advised me to take Cardui, as it had done her so much good, so I commenced to use it and now I am in good health."

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

Women's pains are relieved or prevented and women's strength is quickly restored, by Cardui, the woman's tonic. You yourself know best if you need it, or not. If you do need it, do not delay, but commence to use it at once. Every day of delay, only lets you slide further down the hill.

Don't wait, then, but begin to take Cardui today for its help, no matter how prolonged, cannot harm you and will surely do you good.

Mlle. Helene Dutrieu, Aviator, Called the "Human Arrow."

MLLE. HELENE DUTRIEU, FRENCHWOMAN AVIATOR.

Mlle. Helene Dutrieu, a Frenchwoman, has just been officially recognized by the Aero Club of France as an aviator capable of managing an aeroplane. She celebrated the event by making a flight from Blankenberghe, in Belgium, to Bruges and back, the total distance being about fifteen miles.

The feat was the more remarkable by reason of the fact that she carried a passenger with her. For the greater part of the journey she flew at a height of about 1,250 feet. On reaching Bruges she circled the steeple of a church and then set off on the return journey.

On reaching Blankenberghe she descended without mishap and was almost overwhelmed with congratulations. All records made by women in the air have been broken by her journey.

Mlle. Dutrieu was at one time an attraction in one of the Parisian music halls. She was known as "the human arrow," her performance consisting of a leap of forty-five feet through space on a bicycle. She had been fond of cycling from an early age, and the sensational leap was her own invention. It was considered so dangerous that the prefecture of police forbade it.

Mlle. Dutrieu then turned her attention to aviation. She began practicing last year at Issy-les-Moulineaux and had a few mishaps in the course of her apprenticeship. She has now successfully gone through the tests required by the Aero club at Mourmelon, and her name has been added to the list of recognized women aviators. The three others are Mme. la Roche, Mme. Koechlin and Mme. Franck.

What Marcel Prevost Says.

Among those few men who possess the knowledge and, let it be added, the fortitude necessary to write exclusively on the subject of woman—the most elusive and baffling of all subjects—M. Marcel Prevost, the famous French author and member of the Academie, admittedly ranks first.

Feminine psychology is his domain. He has studied the woman of today, especially the woman of the upper classes, with such persistence and subtlety, and he has so many natural and precious qualifications for doing so that more than one reader of his books after perusing a few pages has exclaimed, somewhat sensationally, "The man who wrote this was a woman."

In his latest volume, aptly entitled "Feminites," which has just been published by M. Lemerre, Paris, this unique connoisseur of woman chats on his favorite subject in his own leisurely and smiling way.

"On corsets."

An awkward subject, but our French "immortal" is not embarrassed, and, dealing as he does in his book with all problems of vital interest to women, he could not have dared to avoid the subject of corsets. To merely quote, however, M. Prevost's conclusions:

"Corsets are not good for the health, but they will live.

"Woman wears them not because they are comfortable, but because she has an instinctive dislike of appearing as nature made her. In China she tortures her feet into absurdly small and distorted 'stumps.' In Africa and elsewhere she passes a ring through her nostrils. In parts of the east she blackens her teeth. In the west her taste for deformation she chiefly applies to her waist and her hair.

"On the other hand, it must be admitted—

"First.—That no husband would allow his wife to go without corsets.

"Second.—That corsets create an average type of feminine gracefulness.

"Third.—That the woman who wears corsets does not do so in order to deceive man about the size and shape of her waist, but in order to please him."

Towels Before.

Towels that have been embroidered with initials and monograms should have embroidered borders also. These may be straight or scalloped and should be embroidered in such designs as wild rose, aster, forgetmenot and conventional patterns and conventionalized wreaths, bowknots and flowers. Towels, sheets or pillowcases thus embroidered are a joy forever and a priceless gift to the particular and beauty loving housewife.

DRAWING A TOOTH

Tushmaker's Pulling Machine Was a Wonderful Invention.

KILLED HIS FIRST PATIENT.

But That Simply Couldn't Be Helped, and the Autopsy Showed Why the Victim Lifted His Right Leg Each Time the Lever Was Turned.

Mr. Tushmaker was never regularly bred as a physician or surgeon, but he possessed naturally a strong mechanical genius and a fine appetite, and, finding his teeth of great service in gratifying the latter propensity, he concluded that he could do more good in the world and create more real happiness therein by putting the teeth of its inhabitants in good order than in any other way, so Tushmaker became a dentist.

He was the man who first invented the method of placing small cog-wheels in the back teeth for the more perfect mastication of food, and he claimed to be the original discoverer of that method of filling cavities with a kind of putty which, becoming hard directly, causes the tooth to ache so grievously that it has to be pulled, thereby giving the dentist two successive fees for the same job.

Tushmaker was one day seated in his office in the city of Boston when a stout old fellow named Byles presented himself to have a back tooth drawn. The dentist seated his patient in the chair of torture and, opening his mouth, discovered there an enormous tooth on the right hand side about as large, as he afterward expressed it, "as a small polyglot Bible." "I shall have trouble with this tooth," thought Tushmaker, but he clapped on his heaviest forceps and pulled. It didn't come. Then he tried the turnscrew, exerting his utmost strength, but the tooth wouldn't stir.

"Go away from here," said Tushmaker to Byles, "and return in a week and I'll draw that tooth for you or know the reason why." Byles got up, clapped a handkerchief to his jaw and put forth.

Then the dentist went to work, and in three days he invented an instrument which he was confident would pull anything. It was a combination of the lever, pulley, wheel and axle, inclined plane, wedge and screw. The castings were made and the machine put up in the office over an iron chair rendered perfectly stationary by iron rods going down into the foundations of the granite building.

In a week old Byles returned. He was clamped into the iron chair, the forceps connected with the machine attached firmly to the tooth, and Tushmaker, stationing himself in the rear, took hold of a lever four feet in length. He turned it slightly. Old Byles gave a groan and lifted his right leg. Another turn, another groan, and up went the leg again.

"What do you raise your leg for?" asked the doctor.

"I can't help it," said the patient.

"Well," rejoined Tushmaker, "that tooth is bound to come out now."

He turned the lever clear round with a sudden jerk and snapped old Byles' head clean and clear from his shoulders, leaving a space of four inches between the severed parts. They had a postmortem examination. The roots of the tooth were found extending down the right side, through the right leg and turning up in two prongs under the sole of the right foot.

"No wonder," said Tushmaker, "he raised his right leg."

The jury thought so, too, but they found the tools much decayed, and five surgeons swearing that mortification would have ensued in a few months, Tushmaker was cleared on a verdict of "justifiable homicide."

He was a little shy of that instrument for some time afterward, but one day an old lady, feeble and flaccid, came in to have a tooth drawn, and thinking that it would come out very easy, Tushmaker concluded, just by way of variety, to try the machine. He did so and at the first turn drew the old lady's skeleton completely and entirely from her body, leaving her a mass of quivering jelly in her chair. Tushmaker took her home in a pillowcase. She lived seven years after that, and they called her the "India rubber woman." She had suffered terribly with the rheumatism, but after this occurrence never had a pain in her bones. The dentist kept them in a glass case.

After this the machine was sold to the contractor of the Boston custom house, and it was found that a child of three years of age could, by a single turn of the screw, raise a stone weighing twenty-three tons. Smaller ones were made on the same principle and sold to the keepers of hotels and restaurants. They were used for boning turkeys. There is no moral to this story whatever, and if is possible that the circumstances may have become slightly exaggerated. Of course there can be no doubt of the truth of the main incidents.—John Phoenix.

FOR THE CHILDREN

About Great Men.

Prescott, our own great historian, was blind, as were Homer and Milton, and Sir Walter Scott wrote while racked with pain.

Burns was the son of a small farmer, and at an early age showed a fondness for learning which he had few opportunities for gratifying.

Sir Isaac Newton while attending school was considered by his teachers but little better than an idiot, and Sheridan, the celebrated playwright, was presented by his mother to a tutor as a "blockhead."

Handel was nearly fifty years of age when he published the first of those musical compositions which have immortalized his name.

Andersen, the popular Danish author, was the son of a cobbler. He spent his early years on the bench and scribbled his first stories during his resting periods.

Demosthenes, the Grecian orator and "prince of eloquence," was the son of a blacksmith. In his first attempt at public speaking he displayed such a weakness of voice, imperfect articulation and awkwardness that he withdrew from the speaker's platform amid the hooting and laughter of his hearers.

Cross Questions—Crooked Answers.

This is an old game, but can be made very amusing. All sit in a circle. The first one begins by whispering some question to his left hand neighbor, such as "Do you like apples?" The second player must remember the question asked him, and he answers No. 1 by saying, "Yes: the nice, red, juicy kind." This answer belongs to No. 1, and he must remember it. No. 2 asks No. 3 a question, being careful to remember his answer, as it belongs to him. Suppose he asks, "Are you interested in comets?" and he is answered, "Yes: I look for them every night." Thus No. 2 has a question and answer that belong to him.

Every one in turn asks a question and gives an answer, remembering the question he was asked and the answer given him, which he must give together in his turn. When this has gone all around No. 1 begins by saying aloud, "I was asked, 'Do you like cats?' and the answer was, 'Yes; the nice, red, juicy kind.'" No. 2 says, "I was asked, 'Do you like apples?' and the answer was, 'Yes; I look for them every night.'" and so on.

A School of Whales.

The sailors on the schooner Ella L. Davenport had continuous shower baths while they were bringing a cargo of lumber to Philadelphia from Jacksonville. Spray flew over the schooner's decks even when the sea was perfectly calm. You see, the Ella had the fortune to run into a part of the ocean that was at that particular minute densely populated with whales, and the whales were in a playful mood. There was a great herd of them, cow whales and calves and young bulls, and one great, old bull that was as large as a mountain. There were about seventy-five of them in all, the sailors said, and they kept the ocean white all around the schooner. They tumbled about on the surface, dived under the schooner and scraped their backs on the keel and kept the air full of spray. They stayed with the Ella for four hours and then suddenly went under water. When they came to the surface again they were half a mile away and headed toward the south, as if they smelled something to eat down among the West India islands.

About Tops.

The Spanish peg-top is made of mahogany. It is shaped somewhat like a pear. Instead of a sharp iron peg, it has a small rounded knob at the end. As it spins for a much longer time than the English peg top and does not require to be thrown with any degree of force in order to set it up, it is extremely well adapted for playing on flooring or pavement.

This top is a capital sport when played by two persons. It is played by first whirling the top into motion by turning it sharply with both hands and then by flooring it till its motion becomes very rapid. When two persons play whip top the object should be for each to whip his top to a certain goal, he who reaches it first being the victor.

A Queer Country.

An explorer recently returned from the middle of Asia, where he had visited a land that no other white man had ever seen. It was a strange land. There the weather was cold in winter and warm in summer, flowers grew in the spring and snow fell in January, leaves put forth on trees and were green, and water flowed downhill. The people that he has told about this strange land will not believe that he is telling the truth.—Chicago News.

ROAR OF BIG GUNS.

The Effect Upon the Nerves and the Sense of Hearing.

One of the penalties attendant on firing off big guns is deafness. So sure is this penalty to be exacted that, it is asserted, no man can go through a long series of gunnery practice without having his hearing affected. A stranger on deck who hears a big gun speak for the first time will not soon forget the stunning report.

One gun is enough to startle a stranger, but the shattering effect of the whole armament when in action together can hardly be conceived. The strain upon nerves and senses when the rending concussion takes place is terrible.

There is not a great difference between the effect of the big guns and that of the smaller pieces, strange as it may seem. If the visitor places himself beside one of the smaller guns and then listens to the roar of the big one, the sound will not appear much louder than that of the gun by his side. The extra distance to the muzzle of the big piece discounts the sound. The only apparent difference between the two will be that the smaller piece has a sharper, higher pitched tone, and that the big guns speak with a more bellowing roar.

If one watches the firing of the gun the crash has not such a startling effect as when it comes unexpectedly. Loud as it is, nature has prepared the watcher to resist the shock which he knows is impending.—Exchange.

There is little danger from a cold or from an attack of the grip except when followed by pneumonia, and this never happens when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is used. This remedy has on its great reputation and extensive sale by its remarkable cures of colds and grip and can be relied upon with implicit confidence. For sale by all dealers.

REINDEER IN LAPLAND.

They Furnish the People With Shelter, Clothing and Food.

Some people have said that the reindeer of the northern regions is to the inhabitants of those countries what the horse, cow and sheep together are to the dwellers in southern lands, and very probably they are right. What would the Laplander be were he deprived of his favorite? How could he travel without his pair of reindeer harnessed to his sledge?

The reindeer has large black hoofs, behind which are false or secondary hoofs; the result is that when running they make a clattering sound, which may be heard a good distance away. The reindeer has much endurance and takes a long journey without seeming tired, though it is only about four and a half feet in height and not very strong. Its horns are long and slender, with branched, rounded antlers, but they are not much used in combat, like those of some other deer.

The largest reindeer are found where the weather is coldest, and their color is lighter. Usually it is brown and white, but in the case of old animals the hair is sometimes quite white. From the skin of the reindeer the Laplanders get not only their clothes, but also bedding and tents; the milk is drunk and made into cheese and the flesh is also good to eat, the tongue and haunches being particularly liked. Pemmican, an important article of food, is made by pouring fat over the pounded meat and mixing them well together.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Leech as a Barometer.

A leech confined in a glass jar of water will prove an excellent weather prophet. If the weather is to continue fine the leech lies motionless at the bottom of the vial and rolled together in a spiral form. If it is to rain, either before or after noon, it is found to have crept up to the top of its lodging and there remains till the weather is settled. If we are to have wind the prisoner struggles through his limpid habitation with amazing swiftness and seldom rests till it begins to blow hard. If a remarkable storm of thunder and rain is to succeed the leech gives itself up to violent throes and convulsive motions. In frost, as in clear summer weather, it lies constantly at the bottom, and in snow, as in rainy weather, it pitches its dwelling on the very mouth of the jar.

African Grosbecks.

The social grosbecks of South Africa live in large societies. They select a tree of considerable size and literally cover it with a grass roof, under which their common dwelling is constructed. The roof serves the double purpose of keeping off the heat and the rain, and 400 or 500 pairs of birds are known to have the same shelter. The nests in this aerial dwelling are built in regular streets and closely resemble rows of tenement houses.

A Financial Genius.

"He is a financial genius. In a restaurant the other day he spilled a cup of coffee over a fellow's gray trousers."

"And got out of paying for them, eh?"

"Why, he talked the other fellow into paying for the coffee."

The Man Behind the Message.

The value of a thing depends largely upon who says it. Words may be bullets, but character must be the powder at the back of them to give them projectile force. The man behind the message is as important as the man behind the gun.

BRAINY BABY.

John Stuart Mill Was a Genius at Three Years of Age.

At three years of age John Stuart Mill began the study of Greek, with "arithmetic as an evening relaxation."

At eight he began Latin, Euclid and algebra and had to act as tutor to the younger children. He was a stern and efficient tutor.

At twelve he began scholastic logic and political economy—the latter his main lifework.

At fourteen, while paying a long visit to Sir Samuel Bentham in southern France, he learned French as a relaxation from studying two or three hours before breakfast, five hours between breakfast and dinner and two or three in the evening. Being for the time master of his own hours and not subject to a stern father, he took lessons also in his spare hours in music, singing, dancing, fencing and riding, but never became proficient.

At sixteen Mill could speak in debate with adults with ease and freedom. At eighteen he contributed to the Westminster Review. At twenty-one he was made assistant in the India office and received a large salary for those days.

But Mill was bald at twenty-two. He did not marry until he was forty-five. He himself said: "I never was a boy. It is better to let nature have its own way."

Linked Before and After.

Having entered the church at Regensburg, in Germany, for the purpose of being married and taken his place beside the bride, a man named Wahl, who seems to have been of a somewhat nervous disposition, suddenly rushed out of the building, took a cab to the station and jumped into a moving train. We have always maintained that the bridegroom should be handcuffed to the best man until the conclusion of the ceremony. It is foolish to take unnecessary risks.—London Globe.

ARIZONA ROAD RUNNER.

A Sociable Bird That Is Said to Hate a Rattlesnake.

The road runner is one of Arizona's distinctive ornithological institutions. It is a long legged, long billed bird, slender of build and standing some ten inches high. It is not often seen in the farming districts, but is a familiar sight on the desert.

It has gained the name of road runner from its habit of taking the road in front of travelers be they on horseback or wheeled conveyance, and running swiftly or slowly, as occasion requires, showing off its neighborly spirit and running qualities. It is not uncommon for it to keep in company of the traveler for several hundred yards.

No resident of Arizona would kill a road runner. It is firmly believed that the bird is the deadly enemy of that monster of the desert, the rattlesnake. We don't know whether any of our readers ever saw a road runner kill a rattlesnake. If there is an authentic story of such a thing we would be glad to publish it. But the accepted tradition is that the road runner and the rattlesnake are deadly enemies and that the rattlesnake fears the road runner beyond anything else.

It is told that the bird drives the snake into a coil and then, darting around the serpent like lightning, pecks it to death. Whatever truth there may be in the stories of the road runner's accomplishments as a disciple of St. Patrick, it deserves the friendly protection it receives. Its quaint sociability is always a diversion for the lonesome desert traveler. —Arizona Republican.

THE MAN ON THE CORN

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some Saw Him.

The Census returns for Chilton county show a gratifying increase of population, an increase of slightly over forty per cent. In Chilton contained 16,522 people and in 1910 the number had increased to 23,187. Our vacant farm lands are gradually being filled with a most desirable class of citizens, and our towns are growing proportionately.

The official count of the election last week produced some surprises and it was declared that E. B. Pearson, democrat, for Probate Judge received 1037 votes, against 990 for L. H. Revacide, republican, majority of 47. For clerk of the Circuit Court M. D. Foshee, republican, secured 997 votes, against 984 for H. M. Simpson, democrat, a majority of 13. For Sheriff B. Jones, democrat, secured 1008 votes against 1000, for C. D. Foshee, republican a majority of 8. A petition in involuntary bankruptcy was filed in the federal court at Montgomery Tuesday, against W. A. The petitioners allege that Reynolds has been unfortunate in his speculations in cotton futures" and is unable to meet his obligations

The following recently appeared in the Des Moines Capital, at least we are so told: "Editor Farmer, Lyons, Iowa, has been called to Washington City because his subscription list is not so well paid up as the law requires. He will have to eplain to the government officials why he has not compelled his subscribers to pay up according to the postal rules. An inspector recently visited him two months previously and his list was said to be pretty thoroughly paid up, but evidently it was not sufficiently so. It seems a little tough that country editors have to be hauled up before the government under the charge of violating Federal laws just because they do not eternally keep dunning their subscribers for the small sums they owe on subscriptions; but then, like the end of the world, no one knows when it cometh, and no editor knows what day the inspector may pop in and ask to see his list. And if too many subscribers are behind on their paper it seems trouble with the government puts an editor in such shape that he is compelled to force his collections unless he has an unusually prompt paying list of subscribers.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

The Census returns for Chilton county show a gratifying increase of population, an increase of slightly over forty per cent. In 1900 Chilton contained 16,522 people, and in 1910 the number had increased to 23,187. Our vacant farming lands are gradually being filled up with a most desirable class of citizens, and our towns are growing proportionately.

The official count of the election last week produced some suprises, and it was declared that E. B. Deason, democrat, for Probate Judge received 1037 votes, against 990 for L. H. Reynolds, republican a majority of 47. For clerk of the Circuit Court M. D. Foshee, rebublican, secured 997 votes, against 984 for H. M. Simpson, democrat, a majority of 13. For Sheriff B. L. Jones, democrat, secured 1008 votes against 1000, for C. D. Foshee, republican a majority of 8. The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositer. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

Editor Banner—Please allow me a small space in your valuable Paper to say a few words from our community. Health here is very good at the present time. The school at this place is progressing nicely under the careful management of Prof. W. Z. Dennis.

Rev J. O. Williams filled his regular appointment here last Sunday, and preached an excellent sermon to a large congregation. The envincible Literary Society met at this place last Saturday night. The program was nicely rendered and was enjoyed by a large crowd.

Mr. James Roper from Mt. Nebo was a welcome visitor here Sunday.

Come again Mr. Roper we are glad to have you with us.

Prof. W. E. Robinson spent Saturday night with Prof. T.E. Williams.

Mrs. Sallie Williams and daughter, Era, from Mulbery visited relatives ere last week.

For fear this will escape the waste basket we will close hoping the Banner and its many readers much success.

C King, Walter, Willie, Oliver and Hubert Smith, Joe and Arch Traywick and Lealon Powell, Ronnie Robinson.

Guess we had better ring off for this time. Wishing the Banner mgch success.

THREE CHUMS.

Spiced Grapes.

Five pounds of grapes, three pounds of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, one of clove and one pint of vinegar. Pulp the grapes, cook pulp until the seeds separate, so you can strain them out. Cook skins until tender, then add pulp, sugar, vinegar and spice, and boil all together thoroughly. This is very fine to eat with meat. Seal while hot.

Horses in the Time of Homer.

The horses used in Homer's time were war horses. The warriors were drawn in chariots. The art of riding was known, but it is alluded to as something unusual. Ulysses at the time of his shipwreck "bestrode a plank, like a horseman on a big steed." There are reasons for believing that the practice of riding was much later than that of driving, and the myth of the centaur, where, according to Shakespeare, "man is incorpsed and demininatured with the beast," probably originated at an early period when the appearance of a man on horseback was a novel sight.

The Most Important Thing.

Commander Peary, at one of the numerous Washington dinners following his triumphant return from the pole, got the better of a senator in a war of wits.

"What is the good of your discovery?" the senator said. "I'll wager that you didn't find a single important thing at the north pole."

"Oh, yes, I did," said the explorer. "I found one very, very important thing."

"Humph! What was that?" the senator grunted.

"The way back home again," was the reply.

Hate All Around.

The famous English chief justice Holt and his wife hated each other to the limit, and when she fell dangerously ill he was so delighted that he became disgracefully tipsy. But his wife was equal to the emergency and sent for the great Dr. Radcliffe, who hated Holt, and therefore out of spite when the case was presented to him came with great promptness and saved her life.—Westminster Gazette.

"Why," chuckled the boy, "he's just yelling at the top of his voice."

SENATOR CLAY IS CALLED BY DEATH

Georgia's Junior Senator Dies Sunday Afternoon.

END CAME PEACEFULLY

Seemingly Much Better, Senator Clay Dies Suddenly a Few Moments After Talking With Hon. Herbert Clay.

United States Senator [illegible]ander Stevens Clay, who ha[illegible]nted the state of Georgia in the United States Senate for th[illegible] years, passed away at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, November 13. [illegible] Clay went to Robertson's Sanitarium about ten days ago to take the rest cure. Sunday morning found him unusually cheerful and, although it has been long known that Senator Clay's health was in a precarious condition, the suddenness of his death gave his friends a surprise and shock. Mrs. Clay was in the city during the morning, but the senator seemed so much better that she returned home about noon greatly encouraged.

No one was with the senator at the time of his death, excepting his son Herbert. They had been talking together up to about three minutes before his death. He ceased speaking, closed his eyes and gave a slight gasp and almost in a moment had passed away.

Alexander Stevens Clay was born on a farm in Cobb county and at the time of his death was 57 years old. Mr. Clay was first named senator on October 7, 1896, to succeed the Hon. John B. Gordon, after one of the most exciting contests for that office ever held in Georgia. He was opposed by Capt. Evan P. Howell, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, and Governor W. Y. Atkinson. Other contestants in the beginning of the race soon dropped out. For a long while the outcome hung in the balance with the indications favoring Atkinson, Howell and Clay alternating for second place. Finally, through the action of Capt. Howell in throwing his support to Senator Clay the latter was elected.

Mr. Clay was re-elected in 1903 and again in 1909 and his third term would have expired on March 3, 1915. He is the only man in the 121 years of Georgia's history, save his colleague, Senator Bacon, who has ever been elected to three terms in the United States Senate. As a member of the appropriation committee he was able to do effective work for Georgia in the matter of new public buildings and river and harbor appropriations. The $1,000,000 postoffice in Atlanta would never have become a concrete fact but for his indefagitable efforts. He endeared himself to every member of the Georgia delegations in the lower house through his activity in securing the senate's favorable action on bills in which they were interested.

During the last session of congress Senator Clay was one of the most active members and attending all the meetings of the numerous committees of which he was a member, carrying on this crushing work in spite of ill health which would make most other men retire.

The funeral arrangements were decided and announced in part late Sunday. The body of Senator Clay will be taken to the Methodist church at 10 o'clock on Wednesday morning and will lie in state there until 12 o'clock when the funeral services will be conducted. The interment will be in Marietta. A committee of senators have announced their intentions of attending the services and also a committee from the house of representatives.

AMERICAN MISSIONS BURNED.

Church and Hospital in Kwang Si Province Destroyed.

Refugees arriving at Canton, China, by boat from the province of Kwang Si reported that practically all the American missions had been destroyed in a revolt against foreigners which is raging here. The American Presbyterian church hospital and the American college were burned. Three battalions of troops have been sent to quell the disturbances. At Lienchou in the Kwang Si province, the mission is in charge of Drs. Machle and Ross, Mrs. Ross, Mr. Carver, Mr. Kunkle, Mr. and Mrs. Edwards and Miss Patterson.

Only by a timely warning were the missionaries able to escape from the anti-foreign rioters.

The uprising was totally unexpected by the missionaries. No disturbances have occurred in the Kwang-Si province for nearly two months, and the Americans believed themselves to be on the most friendly terms with the Chinese.

Two months ago there was an uprising which was not taken as a demonstration solely against the foreigners, but chiefly as a protest by the natives against additional taxes.

There has been considerable uneasiness among American missionaries in China, however, since the riots of last April and May when scores of buildings erected by Americans in various missionary colonies were destroyed and attempts made on the lives of the missionaries.

In a difficulty over the election at Jeffersonville, Ky., Lloyd Willoughby, it is charged, shot Will York. York will die. Willoughby was arrested.

ROBT. L. TAYLOR BEATEN BY HOOPER

Tennessee Goes Republican and Fusionist.

MAJORITY IS ABOUT 15,000

Vote Throughout the State Was Remarkably Heavy, Except in a Few Counties—Both Sides Claim State Senate.

Summed up, the result of the election appears to be B. W. Hooper, republican and fusionist, governor, by 15,000 to 18,000 majority over Senator Robert L. Taylor, democrat; B. A. Enloe, democrat and fusionist, by a like majority, and a possible small fusion majority in the legislature. Both sides claim the senate, but where the fusionists have lost in some districts, they have gained in others. The same applies to the democrats; so from present indications there is little change in the complexion of the legislature.

Most of the middle and west Tennessee democratic counties, nearly all of which went for the independent judiciary ticket in August last, returned to the regular column, but by such small majorities that they were overwhelmed by the heavy republican vote in east Tennessee counties. Barring Knox, the counties in which are located the larger cities, all went heavily democratic.

In the congressional races, R. V. Austin, republican, appears to have defeated N. W. Hale, independent republican. Sells, republican, defeated Cy H. Lyle, in the first. Z. D. Massey, republican, was elected to fill out the unexpired term of W. P. Brownlow. In the other eight districts the democrats have won, although T. W. Sims, in the eighth, had a hard fight with Murray, republican.

HOOPER'S ROMANTIC CAREER.

From Orphan Asylum to the Gubernatorial Chair.

Ben W. Hooper, the newly elected governor of Tennessee, was found on the streets of Knoxville less than 40 years ago. The waif, whose parentage is not known, it is said, was committed to the care of an orphan asylum, where he received his early training. When he was 10 years old he attracted the attention of Captain Hooper, of Newport, Tenn., who gave him an education and his name, and before he was 21 years old he had graduated in law with distinction.

While he had achieved some distinction in his home county, having been sent to the state legislature two terms, Hooper was not known generally in the state before he was nominated as the republican candidate for governor. He is a successful lawyer and is considered wealthy.

He will be the first republican governor Tennessee has had in many years, and the third in the history of the state.

Hooper's career has been romantic and spectacular, starting in an orphan asylum and finally leading to the governor's chair.

Four Women Legislators.

Four women will sit in the eighteenth general assembly of Colorado as a result of Tuesday's elections. They are Alma Lafferty, Louise U. Jones and Louise M. Kerwin, all elected representatives from Denver districts on the democratic ticket, and Agnes Riddle, republican, representing Adams, Arapahoe and Elbert counties. In the last general assembly Mrs. Lafferty, who was re-elected, was the only woman representative. There are no women senators. Figures so far compiled point to the election of practically the entire democratic state ticket and the three democratic candidates for re-election in congress.

Democrats Sweep Chicago.

Returns in Chicago and Cook county, although less than one-half the total, indicate that the democrats have swept the city and county by from 20,000 to 40,000 votes. Returns from 700 precincts show that Vogler, republican candidate for sheriff, who is leading his party ticket, will be defeated by Zimmer, democrat, by a plurality of about 15,000. Scattering returns from the state of Illinois indicate democratic gains in various counties.

Broyles Wins in Atlanta.

Judge Nash Broyles, who has for so many years filled the position of recorder in Atlanta, was again elected on Tuesday by a majority of 262 over Malvern Hill, his opponent.

SUMMARY OF THE RECENT ELECTIONS

Later Returns Only Accentuate Republican Defeat.

LARGE DEMOCRATIC GAIN

Democrats Will Have a Safe Working Majority in the National House of Representatives, but Republicans Have a Majority in the Senate.

The political upheaval of Tuesday was followed by a general survey of the field, which disclosed with greater detail and precision just what results had been accomplished.

Later calculations on the national house of representatives, based on complete, but unofficial returns, show that the democrats will have a safe working majority of thirty.

The republicans are assured of sixteen new senators, which, with the thirty-four hold-over senators, gives them a total of fifty. The democrats are assured of fifteen new senators, which, with twenty-five hold-overs, gives them a total of forty.

G. O. P. Has Senate.

These determined totals, however, leave a republican majority in the senate as follows:

Total membership, 92; necessary to majority, 47; republicans, 50; democrats, 40; doubtful, 2.

The sixteen republican senators considered assured are from California, Connecticut, Delaware, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Michigan, Nevada, North Dakota two, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

The fifteen democratic senators considered assured are from Florida, Indiana, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Mississippi and West Virginia.

For Governorships.

A summary of the contests for governorships shows the following democratic governors elected with the approximate pluralities:

New York, Dix	66,000
New Jersey, Wilson	30,000
Connecticut, Baldwin	3,500
Massachusetts, Foss	33,000
Ohio, Harmon	60,000
Oklahoma, Cruce
Oregon, West
Wyoming, Carey
Alabama, O'Neal	50,000
South Carolina, Blease	60,000

The Republican Governors.

The republican governors elected with approximate pluralities:

Pennsylvania, Tener	20,000
New Hampshire, Bass	7,000
Rhode Island, Pothier	900
Iowa, Carroll	10,000
Kansas, Stubbs	5,000

The governorships in two states are not yet reported as being beyond doubt, namely, Colorado and Idaho.

Democrats Control Next Congress.

The sixty-second congress will stand as follows:

Democrats elected, 225.
Republicans elected, 164.
Socialists elected, 1.
Doubtful districts, 1.
Total, 391.
Majority of house, 196.

Complete returns on the election of representatives in congress indicate that the democrats will have a working majority of 29 in the next house. The number of democrats elected to congress, according to the latest returns, is 225.

VICTORY IN 1912.

Senator Bacon Talks of the Late Democratic Victory.

The political revolution which upset the precedents of a generation and changed the political complexion of the house of representatives presages a democratic victory in the presidential fight two years hence. Such is the talk in Washington, where the democratic tidal wave throughout the country has been the only subject of discussion.

The people of the nation, angry because of broken promises for genuine tariff revision and resentful over the increased cost of living, have turned toward the minority party. The leaders of democracy in the nation believe the party will measure up to this responsibility.

"We must sit steady in the ship," remarked Senator Bacon, of Georgia, in commenting on this phase of the political situation. "The people of the country have turned to the democratic party because of the dissatisfaction with the tariff record of the party in power. As I interpret it the result is more than anything an expression of the dissatisfaction with the high cost of living. Now that we have the opportunity, the democrats in congress must be wise and cautious so that the positions taken with regard to public questions will merit the approval and confidence of the people. I, for one, believe that the party will measure up to its responsibility."

HARMON SWEEPS OHIO.

His Plurality in State Will Approximate 60,000.

Governor Judson Harmon, democrat, has made a clean sweep of Ohio, defeating Warren G. Harding, republican, and his plurality will likely approximate 50,000 votes. With him he has carried at least two and possibly more democratic congressional candidates in districts that have heretofore elected republicans. Ohio will send at least ten and possibly twelve democrats to congress out of the twenty-one in the delegation, instead of eight, as at present.

Scattering returns show a heavy democratic gain in the legislature, and, without definite figures, democratic leaders are claiming a majority of their party in the next legislature, which will elect a successor to Charles Dick, the republican senior senator.

In Cuyahoga county, which includes Cleveland, Harmon has increased his plurality of two years ago to 12,000 votes, according to careful estimates. In Hamilton county, which includes Cincinnati, Harmon's 1908 plurality of 18,936 will be considerably reduced, but reports say that he will retain a margin of 10,000 votes over Harding.

The country districts, counted upon by the republicans to offset the expected Harmon vote in Cleveland, Toledo and Cincinnati, increased Harmon's plurality in democratic counties and in many cases turned republican pluralities into democratic pluralities.

Albert Douglas, republican congressman from the eleventh district, and James Joyce, republican congressman from the fifteenth, were defeated.

GEORGIA ELECTIONS.

Gordon Lee Wins Over Akerman in Seventh District.

News from Athens, Ga., indicates that after the bitterest fight ever conducted in this district in a congressional election, Samuel J. Tribble has won out over the incumbent congressman, William J. Heward, by 2,410 majority. He carried nine of the twelve counties in the district, losing his home county, however.

Both were candidates in the democratic primary of August 23 and a difference of four votes in Elbert county caused a contest. The majority falling first on one side and then the other, both filed contests.

Tribble's contest was withdrawn. The district executive committee decided the contest filed with them by Howard in favor of Howard. Mr. Tribble's friends did not recognize the action and named another committee which declared Mr. Tribble the regular democratic nominee.

Hardwick Wins by Four to One.

Thomas W. Hardwick, incumbent, was reelected to congress, as the regular nominee of the democratic party, over C. E. McGregor, democratic insurgent, by a majority of approximately 2,800, in a total vote of little over 3,500. The vote all over the district was light. Richmond county gave Hardwick 1,183 and McGregor 72.

Hardwick carried Columbia county by 250 majority, Hancock by 250, Taliaferro by two to one, Wilkinson practically solid, Lincoln by 75, McDuffie by 159.

Seventh District Goes for Gordon Lee.

Returns indicate the reelection of Gordon Lee, democrat, over Walter Akerman, republican, by a majority of 2,000. Lee carried Floyd by 800, Whitfield by 400, Murray by 165, Chattooga by 500, Dade by 200, Bartow (Akerman's home county) by 100, Gordon by four to one, Haralson by 100, Paulding by three to one, Cobb by 600, Polk by 415.

FLORIDA ELECTIONS.

Defeat Is Given State-Wide Prohibition Proposal.

Reports indicate that the constitutional amendment for state-wide prohibition has been defeated by an estimated majority of between 2,000 and 3,000. Duval county, Jacksonville, returned a majority of approximately 2,000. As the Tampa vote is close, and is claimed by both factions, the local optionists polled their heaviest votes in St. Johns county, St. Augustine, and Escambia county, Pensacola, while the state vote in general was slightly in favor of the prohibitionists.

The majority of the "wets," it is claimed, is sufficient to carry the state even if later returns are against local option. Nearly half the vote of the state is counted.

The full democratic ticket was elected, with but slight opposition.

In Old Kentucky.

Eight democratic congressmen and four democratic judges of the court of appeals elected and one congressional race close with the odds favoring the democrats is the result of the election in Kentucky. In the closest race, that in the Ninth district, incomplete returns indicate the election of W. J. Fields, democrat, over J. B. Bennett the republican incumbent.

TRAGEDY OVER BOARD BILL.

George McCall, a Georgian, Shot and Killed in Illinois.

George McCall, 24 years old, of Rome, Ga., employed by the Louisville and Nashville railroad at Belleville, was shot in the head and fatally wounded by Henry Williams, section foreman of the railroad, at the Williams home in Belleville, Ill. McCall was rushed to St. Elizabeth hospital in an ambulance and died shortly afterward.

Williams, who is under arrest claims that he shot in self-defense. Williams conducts a boarding house at the Royal mine, about two miles north of Belleville. McCall had boarded with Williams for several weeks, and, according to a statement made by McCall before his death Williams had taken out a garnishment in Justice Wangelin's court for his wages upon a claim of debt for $21.50.

Eye witnesses of the shooting say that McCall picked up a stick and that Williams drew his revolver and fired. The coroner's jury returned a verdict holding Williams for the death of McCall. At the county jail Williams said that he had feared McCall intended to kill him.

EXPRESS STRIKE ENDED.

Reported That Amicable Settlement Has Been Made.

The strike at New York of drivers and helpers employed by the transcontinental express companies has been formally declared off, and it was announced at strike headquarters that the men will return to work this week.

The close of the strike was brought about by the New Jersey strikers, who voted to accept the terms upon which the companies offered to take back the men. They had rejected the terms, but a later conference of the strike leaders with Mayor Wittpenn, of Jersey City, and President Towne, of the New York Merchants' Association, cleared the way for the agreement.

The New York strikers voted to accept the companies' offer conditional upon similar action being taken by the men across the river.

GENERAL ITEMS OF INTEREST Believing that thousands of acres of public lands containing oil in California have been improperly acquired by railroads, corporations and individuals, Attorney General Wickersham, it was learned at Washington, was instructed by President Taft shortly before he left for Panama to conduct a searching inquiry into the case. Specifically, the department of justice wishes to ascertain whether 6,000 acres of oil lands were patented by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company several years ago with a knowledge on the part of certain government agents that the lands contained oil. The fact, it is said, has caused President Taft, Attorney General Wickersham and Secretary Ballinger to regard with suspicion the number of entries that have been made in the oil lands of California by individuals.

Judge William H. Thomas at Montgomery has refused the motion of the state of Alabama to dissolve an injunction preventing the enforcement of an order of the Alabama railroad commission requiring the Northern Alabama Railway Company to move its passenger station at Jasper, Ala. Concurrently he held unconstutional the state status, conferring power on the commission to issue and enforce such orders. Owing to the question of reasonableness, he rules against the state and the case is now reduced to its merits.

The properties of the Albermarle and Chesapeake Canal Company in Virginia and North Carolina, consisting of a 10¼-mile canal and several thousand acres of land, were sold under foreclosure at Portsmouth, Va., to a committee representing first mortgage bondholders for $300,000. This is a link in the proposed government intra-coastal waterway between Boston and Beaufort, N. C., and has already been recommended for such use by army engineers.

A dispatch from Lisbon, Portugal, says: Germany has followed the example of Great Britain, France, Spain and Italy and resumed negotiations with the Portuguese government. The action of these governments is regarded as a virtual recognition of the republic of Portugal and there was a large torchlight procession headed by republican leaders in celebration.

J. S. Barbour Thompson has been elected president of the Atlantic compress to succeed the late S. F. Parrott. The old board of officers was elected, as were the directors also, according to advices from Savannah, Ga.

A dispatch received at San Antonio, Tex., from Eagle Pass, Tex., says that rioting by Mexicans took place across the river at C. P. Diaz. The residences of several Americans were stoned, the dispatch states, including that of United States Consul Luther Ellsworth. No one was injured.

It was officially stated at London that the conference between the representatives of the government and the opposition looking to an agreement on the subject of the house of lords' veto power had ended in a failure.

The bond election carried in Spalding county, Ga., by a tremendous majority, only six voting against the bonds. A consolidation of the votes showed that in Griffin only two votes had been cast against the bonds, while for the bonds 1,093 ballots had been cast.

The population of the state of Alabama is 2,138,093, as announced by the thirteenth census. This is an increase of 309,396 or 14.9 per cent over 1,828,697 in 1900. The increase from 1890 to 1900 was 314,699 or 20.8 per cent. The population of the state of Florida is 751,139, an increase of 167,597 or 42.1 per cent over 539,005 in 1900. The increase from 1890 to 1900 was 137,139 or 35 per cent.

The annual convention of the American Association of Freight Traffic Officers opened at New Orleans. One of the principal subjects discussed was the long and short haul of the new railroad law passed by the last congress.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES The largest [illegible] distillery ever [illegible] unearthed in Kinchafoonee swamp by Sheriff Feagin and Deputy Fuller, who found a negro, William Neal, on the premises. Neal was captured and jailed, although it is believed white men operate the distillery. The expensive copper still of large capacity was brought to Americus and the remainder of the outfit in the swamp destroyed. A large quantity of beer and mash were dumped into the creek.

After blowing a portion of the [illegible] through the ceiling with nitroglycerin cracksmen secured $2,000 from the Selether bank, a private institution at Jersey City, Ohio, 22 miles from Toledo. The robbers, of whom there were three, escaped in an automobile. It is believed that the same men who operated in Metamora, securing $4,000, were involved in the Jersey City affair.

Twelve men are under the care of hospital physicians in Brooklyn, N. Y., as the result of a boiler explosion. The men were working on a "[illegible]" boiler in an electric lighting plant near the water front when another boiler 10 feet away exploded, covering them with scalding water and steam.

As the result of an accident at Quitman, Ga., on the Atlantic Coast Line railroad, H. H. Carter, 30 years old, of Nayior, Ga., sustained injuries from which he died several hours later. He was a flagman and had been in the road's employ but a few months. He was unmarried.

J. R. Fortner, 55 years old, a well known truck farmer, who lives at 11 Hoke street, near the waterworks in Atlanta, Ga., was thrown from his buggy against a telephone pole and received a broken neck when the horse he was driving shied at a small, noisy automobile and ran away.

A chauffeur was killed and three New York men were injured when an automobile, said to have been running at a rapid pace, turned turtle near Walden, N. Y. The dead man is Alexander Ehbel and those injured are John F. Roosevelt, a relative of Colonel Roosevelt; John T. Hill, a financier of 29 Broadway, and J. H. Robinson.

While despondent, it is believed because he had been reprimanded by his parents for not doing his best in school, Charles Freeman, 14 years old, a high school student of Philadelphia, committed suicide by swallowing carbolic acid. The boy went to the home of his aunt, where he took the poison. The aunt was attracted by the boy's cries when he felt the acid burn his throat. As she ran toward him the boy cried: "I am sorry. I don't want to die." The boy succumbed before medical aid reached him.

Clarence Bakule, formerly a football player at Creighton University, Omaha, Neb., died as a result of injuries sustained two years ago in a football game between the University of Denver and Creighton University.

Fire destroyed the country home of Miss Pearl Gordon in Montgomery county, Va. Mrs. Grace Smith, aged 30, was burned to death. It is thought Mrs. Smith accidentally knocked over a lamp in her room, thus setting the house afire. The house was a hundred years old. The loss is $1,500 with no insurance.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES The foreign warships at Amapala, Honduras, landed forces at the port to protect foreign citizens in anticipation of an uprising against General Jose Valadares. There were no disturbances, however, and the forces were withdrawn. This information was contained in a cable message received by the navy department from Commander Anderson, of the United States gunboat Yorktown. Both German and American war vessels are at Amapala.

There are now 10,000 armed revolutionists in Uruguay, who are gradually concentrating. Several skirmishes are reported, but the censors are carefully suppressing all but meager details are available owing to the censorship. An official organ, the Dia, advocates a war of extermination against the revolutionists. It is said The disturbances are due to the approaching elections for the chamber.

The appointment of Belisario Porras as minister to the United States from Panama has been officially confirmed. Dr. Porras is a distinguished lawyer and political leader, and was the representative of Panama at the Hague conference of 1907 and at the Panama-American congress at Buenos Ayres.

During the last twenty-four hours there have been eight new cases and two deaths from cholera in Italy.

A dispatch from Santiago, Chile, says that the ministry has resigned.

MEASURES ALTITUDES.

The Use of the Barograph on Aeroplanes and Balloons.

What the compass is to the mariner the barograph is to the aviator. The barograph is an instrument for measuring altitudes. The pressure of the air as it increases or decreases causes a delicate needle to trace a wavy line upon a cylinder which revolves by clockwork. This line indicates not only the exact height that is reached by the aviator, but also the speed at which he is traveling.

The barograph is kept in a weather proof box with a glass front, which is attached to a bar of the aeroplane or to a rope on the balloon. It is officially sealed before the aviator embarks, so there is no possibility of tampering with it, and the seal is taken off in the presence of witnesses at the end of the flight. In this way it is possible to establish absolutely and graphically the altitude which an aviator attains in his aeroplane or balloon. It is necessary for the aviator to watch the barograph constantly, as it indicates a change in the elevation almost to the foot. The sky pilot has to keep his eye on the indicator much as the man at the wheel of the seagoing ship watches his compass. Should the aeroplane or the balloon rise or fall ten or twenty feet the aviator would not be conscious of it unless he looked at the wavering needle tracing its permanent record on a chart before him. This tells him immediately of any changes in the nature of the air currents and gives him timely warning of aerial dangers.

These instruments are so delicate and so accurate, it is said, that a man might hang one of them about his neck in its glass case or carry it in his hand and climb a flight of stairs, the height of his ascent being graphically indicated by the inked needle on the machine.—New York Press.

Darning Tablecloths.

Tablecloths and other articles should, of course, always be mended before being laundered. The darn should be begun half an inch from the hole on every side, and if the article is worn thin it may be commenced from a larger distance around.

Old Time Railway Travel.

Third class passenger coaches in England used to be coupled on next to the engine. The travelers came in for terrible treatment when any accident occurred. At times the engine was driven tender first, in which case frozen hands could be warmed at the smokestack. The passengers were packed, seventy of them, into a truck eighteen feet in length by seven and a half in width. There was no roof and not, as a rule, proper protection at the sides.

Vigorous.

Victim—If your hair restorer is good, why is it that you are bald yourself? Barber—Well, sir, once I had a very big order for ladies' plaits, and to execute it I used some extra doses of my restorer over my hair and got half a dozen long plaits, sir. But it drew all the hair out of my constitution, sir."—London Mail.

These Place Costume That's the Smartest Thing Out.

THREE PIECE COSTUME OF GRAY DIAGONAL.

The illustration shows one of the smartest motor or rain coats of the season carried out in steel gray diagonal serge. The skirt is five gored and closes at the left side and buttons by the way of an attached girdle to the dart fitted blouse, which is fastened beneath the left arm and also across the shoulder.

In addition to the fur lined storm collar, there is an Eskimo hood with long tabs that fold across the blouse.

Young Roosevelts Live Simply.

Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., and his wife are regarded as an "ideal couple" by their California neighbors. Since their wedding they have sought to live quietly and simply in their home in Pacific avenue, San Francisco. They have a house surrounded by a large garden, and the chief diversion of the two seems to be in the cultivation of flowers. Every day Mrs. Roosevelt may be seen in the garden at work. She usually wears a broad, drooping hat and gardener's gloves. Armed with clippers and trowels, she passes hours weeding and training the flowers. She appears in the evening again, this time dragging garden hose, with which she sprinkles the flowers. Her husband usually returns from work about that time, and he follows her to the garden, where he is permitted to be a spectator only. Often he may be seen sitting under a tree reading to his wife as she picks flowers for the table.

exhibition of dogs was held at Morristown, N. J., one of the wealthiest and smartest of New Jersey towns.

The greatest interest centered in bulldog and bull terrier entries, and Miss Mary Winthrop won first prize in this class with her bull terrier Isabel Blue.

Many of the women who attended the show exhibited their own dogs in the ring, and there was keen rivalry for the ribbons.

A Unique Suggestion.

Is it true that women have worse times deciding things than men do? It often seems so. They do agonize so over which hat or which sweetheart or which invitation they want most! Now some one suggests a novel scheme. Why not stop trying to decide which chapeau you want the most when you stare in despair before the milliner's glass and try deciding which one you want the least? It gives the thing another angle, one by which you can eliminate conflicting choices and the one that's left must surely be the one you want most. At least one woman finds it so.

Begin making your next year's crop now!

By deciding that you will use the best fertilizer your money can buy. The one that will make your land do all it ought to do for you. We manufacture the fertilizer you should use, it has the crop record behind it. Make up your mind that you are going to call for ... your "Big THREE BANDS"— and your crop is half made right now. You can look for the biggest yield you have ever had, if the season is anywhere near right.

Our fertilizer runs high in AVAILABLE PHOSPHORIC ACID, AMMONIA AND POTASH.

Your merchant handles either the "JEFFERSON", or the "WARRIOR," or the "CANEBRAKE", these are just three names for the one best fertilizer, the one that will grow most cotton and corn for you. Tell him you want it and to be ready to give it to me.

OLD ENGLISH BOXERS.

Hired to Prevent Trouble at George IV.'s Coronation.

Boxing was introduced into England in the earlier part of the eighteenth century, its first practitioner being John Broughton, who kept a booth for exhibitions in Tottenham Court road, London, and rules were drawn up Aug. 10, 1743. The vogue was due to the decline of sword combat exhibitions in the reign of George I. Broughton himself was the first who stood in the position of champion, a distinction which he held for eighteen years, but eventually he was knocked out by a butcher named Slack. Broughton was a great pet of the Duke of Cumberland, who took the pugilist with him to Berlin, when he declared himself ready to take on the entire regiment of grenadier guards there "if he were only allowed a breakfast between each two battles."

The English fighter Tom Cribb once secured a very remarkable engagement. Just before the coronation of George IV. certain sympathizers with Queen Caroline bragged that on the day of the ceremonial they would make matters warm in the neighborhood of Westminster abbey, and this reached the ears of the earl marshal. That high functionary sought an interview with the pugilist "Gentleman" Jackson, who taught Lord Byron to box.

Jackson got together some two dozen bruisers. Besides Cribb, the band included John Gully, in turn fighting man, racing man, colliery proprietor and member of parliament. They were attired as king's pages and gathered about the abbey doors. There was no trouble.—Chicago News.

A VOLCANIC BEACON.

Curious Lighthouse of the Republic of San Salvador.

The republic of San Salvador, on the Pacific side of Central America, is the only government on earth that collects lighthouse fees on account of a volcano that it owns.

The volcanic beacon is about eight miles inland from the port of Acajutla and its pillar of cloud by day and its fire sky night are visible for many miles out at sea. It erupts every seven minutes and is just as accurate as any revolving light that warns mariners in any part of the world. This volcano has been keeping up this seven minute series of eruptions ever since any one can remember. It is a favorite amusement of visiting gringoes to sit by the hour during the lazy afternoons and, watch in hand, time the eruptions until they tire of the amusement and fall asleep.

Every vessel that puts in at Acajutla—and it is quite an important port of call along that part of the coast—has to pay its lighthouse fee. There is no other lighthouse than the volcano, but that is a sufficient excuse for the government of Salvador to make a charge for its services. The explosions that accompany the eruptions sound like detonations of heavy charges of dynamite, but are not sufficient to shake the ground perceptibly more than a mile or two from the summit of the crater. At night there is a spurt of fire, a muffled report and a cloud of steam. By day only the steam is visible.—New York Press.

FREE SAMPLE CURED OLD PERSON'S BOWEL TROUBLE

One of the most remarkable proofs of the unusual laxative merit contained in Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is that it is effective not only in people in the prime of life, but at the extremes of ages. As many letters are received from mothers regarding the cures of children, as from men and women of sixty, seventy and eighty years of age. It must be truly a wonderful laxative.

In the cure of constipation and bowel trouble in old people it has no equal. It corrects the constipation, dispels the headache, biliousness, gas, drowsiness after eating, etc. People advancing in years should see to it that their bowels move freely, and if they do not to take Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. You can prolong your life by healthy bowel action. Clogged bowels invite disease. Women about to pass the menstrual period cannot do better than use Syrup Pepsin several times a week until the system has settled to its future condition.

Among the strongest supporters of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin are Mr. W. G. Zorn of New Decatur, Ala. and Mr. George S. Spaulding of the National Soldiers' Home, Kansas, both elderly men. The regular size bottles can be bought of any druggist at fifty cents and one dollar, but a free sample bottle can be had by sending your address to the doctor.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specialized in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 462 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

Electrical Fires.

A New England electrical engineer discussed the important subject of the extinguishment of electrical fires, which he rightly says often call for judgment and prompt action. He warns operators against employing the stream from an extinguisher upon "live apparatus," in such cases the first precaution being to shut off the current. But there are cases where it is of first importance to fight the fire. A liberal supply of sand and dry powder is recommended, and there have been times when a wet canvas tarpaulin has been used with effect in smothering an incipient blaze.

Rubber in Fruit Skins.

A cloudy emulsion pressed from the green fruit of the Martinique banana has been found to contain ten per cent. of rubber, equivalent to 50 per cent. of the dry weight of the expressed juice. Analysis showed that the green bandna skins contain as much as 20 per cent. of rubber, while the dried skins yielded seven per cent. of rubber and seven per cent. of wax, resin and chlorophyll. Some varieties are reported to be even richer in rubber than the Martinique banana.

Not Sorry For Blunder.

"If my friends hadn't blundered in thinking I was a doomed victim of consumption, I might not be alive now," writes D. T. Sanders of Harrodsburg, Ky., "but for years they saw every attempt to cure a lung-racking cough fail. At last I tried Dr. King's New Discovery. The effect was wonderful. It soon stopped the cough and I am now in better health than I have had for years. That wonderful life saver is an unrivaled remedy for coughs, colds, la grippe, asthma, hemmorrhage whooping cough or weak lungs. 50c, $1.00. Trial bottle free. Upchurch Drug co.

A Long Wait.

At a Denver hotel a woman went into one of the telephone booths and sat down. It is not possible to get a telephone number from the booth—the girl at the board has to call it. The girl went to the booth. "Did you want a telephone number?" she asked of the woman.

"No," replied the woman. "I'm just waiting for this elevator to go up."—Argonaut.

Very Considerate.

George—Do you see that pretty girl in the hammock? Harold—Yes. What of her? George—I saved her life last summer. Harold—Indeed! At the seashore? George—No; on the front porch. I proposed to her and she said she'd die if she married me, so I excused her.—Stray Stories.

Bogey.

Stranger—I say, my lad, what is considered a good score on these links? Caddie—Well, sir, most of the gents here tries to do it in as few strokes as they can, but it generally takes a few more.—Scottish American.

A Correction.

"Now, Caroline," said the teacher of the infant class in a certain Sunday school, "it's your turn. What does your little card say?"

Caroline climbed off her chair and stood looking earnestly at the teacher while she explained: "My card is wrong, Miss Appleton. It says, 'Watch and pray,' and it should say, 'Watch and chain.'"—Judge.

With the Wallops.

"In the last ten years," snapped Mrs. Wallop, "it has probably cost you at least $25 to color that meerschaum pipe of yours, and yet at that time you kicked at giving me $20 for a new carpet."

"Well," drawled the tantalizing Waldop, "at the end of ten years I've got the pipe, while the carpet is worn out."—Boston Herald.

Making It Fit.

"I am having a play made to fit my personality," said the eminent actress.

"Is it nearly completed?"

"Yes. All it needs is taking in in the first act, a little letting out in the third and some new style trimming with morals cut rather more on the bias."—Washington Star.

The Last Man.

The last man surveyed the fading world.

"Thank heaven I don't have to conserve for posterity any more!" he cried.

Herewith he picked a piece of Alaskan coal and vanished.—New York Sun.

Not Satisfactorily.

"Did you question the gentleman's veracity?"

"No. I was afraid it wouldn't answer."—Baltimore American.

BEWARE OF CONSIPATION

It is the first or primal cause of many of our diseases. St. Joseph's Liver Regulator is an ideal treatment for constipation. It act in a natural and easy manner (not by violent purging) and gently tones the bowels thus forestalling the long train of evils which result from the clogging of the system with offensive refuse. This remedy is a wonderful stimulator of liver, stomach and bowels, inducing and maintaining healthy, natural action. Price liquid 50c. a bottle; powder 25c. a box, five boxes one dollar.

All Alabama will be the guests of Birmingham on Nov. 22 and 23 when the state reunion of the confederate veterans and the Census-Jubilee of Birmingham will be held. The Program has been announced includes four great parade. Two beghts of georgeous fireworks display. A number of bands making music constantly. The meeting of the veterats, the sons of veterans and the daughters of the Confederancy; public speaking in Capitol Park—and everything else that can be thought of to make the visitor have a good time. A great hurdde of applications are poured into the city from all sides for accommodation, and the committees which have that matter in charge have obtained abundant accomodations for all.

No matter what part of Alabama a man may be from he will find some of his neighbors and friends at the Jubilee and Reunion and everybody that comes is guaranteed a good time. The railroads are making remarkable low rates. Thus enabling everyone to reach Birmingham at a small cost.

The parades will indulge the floral parade with 100 decorated autos; the Veteran Parade with 1500 veterans in line, with sponsors and maids of honor; a millitary pogeant with regular troops and Alabama National Guard; the civic Parade with illustrative floats, the torch light prade with hundreds of people in line.

A grand Jubilee arch will be constructed in Capitol Park, where the speaking public exercises and the fireworks display will take place and the merchants will spend hundreds and hundreds of dollars decorating their stores and the city in general flags hunting electric lights and great emblematic signs will be used freely.

This is considered the ideal time of the year for the visitors to Birmingham for the city will be assuming its holiday attire on account of the trade.

The Gold Dust Was There.

North America has counted as a gold producing continent only since the late forties. But it might well have done so for about 200 years. According to the London Chronicle, in the voyage round the world which began in 1719 the privateer Captain Shelvocke found in certain California valleys "a rich black mold which, as you turn it fresh up to the sun, appears as if intermingled with gold dust. Though we were a little prejudiced," he adds, "against the thought that it could be possible that this metal should be so promiscuously and universally mingled with common earth, yet we endeavored to cleanse and wash the earth from some of it, and the more we did the more it appeared like gold. In order to be further satisfied I brought away some of it, which we lost in our confusion in China."

Ate Himself Thin.

A terribly emaciated man, about thirty-five years of age, was eating four meals a day, including a heavy breakfast. He was also taking milk between meals. I induced him to give up the milk between meals and to take only a cup of weak tea for breakfast. At once his weight began to increase. It is now normal. Obviously it was a case not only of ordinary mental worry, but also of worry and overwork of the millions of cell lives within him. He gave the cells and organs a rest and at once there was a storage of energy and weight.—Metropolitan Magazine.

D. J. McGillicuddy, Congressman Elect From Maine.

Daniel J. McGillicuddy, Democrat, whose election to congress from the Second Maine district was one of the surprises of the recent political overturn in the Pine Tree State, has been prominent in the councils of his party for many years. He made his entry into the political arena in 1884 as a member of the legislature, and since that time he has grown in power and influence.

In 1887 he was elected mayor of Lewiston, where he was born in 1859, and was twice re-elected chief executive of his native city. During his incumbency of the mayorality he inaugurated many reforms, chief of which were the extension of the waterworks system and the installation of a municipal lighting plant.

As his name indicates, Mr. McGillicuddy is of Irish descent. His father was a farmer, and his youth was spent upon a Maine farm. He was educated at Bowdoin college and later read law with the firm of which Senator William P. Frye was the head. Admitted to the bar in 1883, he has made an enviable reputation as a lawyer. On the stump Mr. McGillicuddy shines. He is a fluent and forceful speaker, and his friends predict that he will prove a worthy successor to the forensic giants from Maine that have preceded him at Washington.

Caleb Powers of Kentucky.

Three times convicted of complicity in the murder of Governor William Goebel and eight years spent in jails is the record of Caleb Powers, recently nominated for congress by the Republicans of the Eleventh Kentucky district. In 1900 Powers, a young mountaineer lawyer, was secretary of state under Governor W. S. Taylor, a Republican.

Goebel and Taylor were rival candidates. Taylor was given the certificate of election. Goebel made a contest. The legislature of Kentucky had just decided in Goebel's favor. On the morning of Jan. 30, 1900, William Goebel entered the capitol grounds at Frankfort to take the oath of office. Just as Governor Goebel reached the steps leading into the building two shots rang out, and Goebel fell, mortally wounded. The shots were fired, it is alleged, from the office of the secretary of state.

CALEB POWERS.

Caleb Powers was arrested at Lexington on his way to his home in the mountains. He had in his pocket at the time of his arrest a pardon signed by Governor W. S. Taylor. Taylor fled the state immediately. Powers was held, and $100,000 was offered by the Kentucky legislature for the apprehension and conviction of the murderer or murderers of William Goebel.

Powers was four times tried for complicity in the murder, was thrice convicted, once sentenced to suffer the death penalty, twice sentenced to imprisonment for life, once secured a disagreement and in 1908 was pardoned by Governor Augustus Willson. He regards his nomination as a vindication.

FLED FROM BOREDOM.

The Tale of a Purposely Interrupted Yachting Cruise.

A few seasons back a well known hostess chartered a splendid yacht for August and invited a large number of her friends for a three weeks' cruise. At first all went well, though the party was not specially well assorted, but after a few days they began to evince signs of being somewhat bored with each other's company.

The hostess marked these signs of incipient boredom, which became more plainly evident each day, and at last in despair she took counsel with one of her guests, an old and experienced yachtsman.

"What on earth shall I do to amuse these people?" she asked.

The yachtsman looked at the serene sky and calm, blue water and shook his head doubtfully.

"A storm would enliven them up a bit," he said, "but the weather looks quite settled. There is only one thing to be done. You must arrange a breakdown; the engineer will manage that all right for you. He has probably often done so before. Then you must make for the nearest port for repairs and let your guests have a run ashore. Some of them, I expect, will find an excuse for bidding you goodby and those who remain with you will get along all right together."

The hostess took her guest's advice and arrived at Toulon a day later, where nigh twenty of her guests bid her goodby.—London M. A. P.

A Passion For Mirrors Brings a Girl Good Luck.

By MACK CLARE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

The great square house sat desolately back in the midst of the neglected grounds and spoke eloquently of the decay that had fallen upon the Wayne fortunes.

Within the house Miss Althea moved silently, a lonely figure, the last of the Waynes. Her meager income sufficed to pay the taxes on the house and to furnish her with modest clothing and plain food. Gossip said the cellars of the Wayne house were still stocked with toothsome pickles and preserves that were a legacy from the better days of the family. The wine bins in the coolest corner showed racks of dusty, cobwebbed bottles, any one of which would have brought its price for rarity and age had Althea desired to dispose of her heritage.

The visitors who occasionally came to the Wayne house and left their cards in the silver dish on the hall table saw merely the small, stiffly furnished reception room with its white and gold furniture and one or two good water colors.

Althea alone knew the rest of the house. She cared for no one in Little River, and so it came to pass that no one cared for her.

The walls of the smaller drawing rooms, the dining room, the inner halls and the upper corridors and her own bedchamber were lined with mirrors of every description. They had been brought from every part of the house, and many dollars of her income had gone to add new ones to the crowded walls.

It was Althea's fancy to feel that she was not alone. Wherever she moved among these rooms there were a dozen or so repeated reflections of her tall, slim form, with its crown of faded hair and her dark blue, wistful eyes. There was the sensation of being in a crowded room when she went to and fro, and she liked to see the figures passing before her. It was a strange fancy and a morbid one, but it was Althea's secret.

When the Wayne fortunes had fallen with a crash Althea's declared lover had quietly given her back her freedom and disappeared. She was glad of this—to know him as he really was

"YOU MUST FEEL THE NEED OF REFRESHMENT."

—and yet the shock of disillusion had left her with a sense of antagonism toward all men. From her experience all men were knaves.

One glorious September morning Althea was busy filling all the old blue bowls in the house with gorgeous asters from the garden. A shadow passed the dining room window, and there came a sharp knock at the side door.

Althea paused in her task, listening for a repetition of the summons, her quiet mind revolving the possibility of its being the grocer or the milkman, but as these purveyors to her solitude came and went from the kitchen entrance Althea decided upon a book agent as the most likely visitant and moved toward the door just as the knock was repeated, sharply staccato.

Behind the wire screened door stood a man of middle age, garbed in light gray clothes that matched his thick hair. Althea noted the thin, intellectual face with its eager, boyish glance of brown eyes, the straight nose, the pleasant mouth, firmly molded chin and fine, well kept hand that held his soft gray hat.

"Miss Wayne?" he asked, with curious abruptness.

"Yes," admitted Althea.

Instead of the customary "Permit me, madam, to show you the greatest book bargain of the century," etc., the stranger snapped out another question.

"You have some antique mirrors for sale?"

"No." Althea's voice was as sharp as his own.

His face lengthened. "Surely—Mr. Deems, the rector, suggested that I call upon you regarding antiques. I'm a collector."

"So am I," said Miss Wayne dryly.

"Mr. Deems assured me," began the man, with a puzzled glance over Miss Althea's shoulder into the room beyond where the mahogany sideboard glistened richly in the sunshine. Then his face underwent a slight change. "If it's a matter of price I am paying almost any amount for what I want," he said, rather apologetically.

"I am sorry, sir, but my furniture is not for sale. I cannot understand why Mr. Deems should have sent you to me," said Althea stiffly.

"I'm afraid I rather nagged at him to put me on the track of hidden treasures until he mentioned your name in sheer desperation," said the stranger, with a rueful smile, as he turned away. "Pardon me for troubling you, Miss Wayne, but I'm quite batty about antiques, and I'm filling my house down at Squaw Point with everything I can get hold of, provided it's genuine."

Miss Althea did not know the meaning of "batty," but she did recognize genuine regret in his tone, and a faint interest stirred her like a breeze from her not distant youth. She glanced down at the card he had given her and read the name thereon.

"Perhaps you would like to look at some of my furniture, Mr. Laking, but it is not for sale," she said, blushing.

"Indeed I would," he cried heartily. "The next thing to seeing the circus is looking over the fence, you know."

Althea didn't know, for she had never been to a circus performance, but she held the door wide open, and John Laking entered, not knowing that his coming broke the outer film of reserve which had infolded the sweet woman for many years.

The man turned and looked wonderingly at the mirror lined walls. When he saw the multiplied reflections of his own form beside that of his hostess he smiled with perfect understanding of their purpose.

"It doesn't seem quite so lonely, you know," Althea found herself explaining, with a slight nod toward the thronging reflections.

Then followed several delightful hours, during which Mr. Laking purred over Hepplewhite and Sheraton and pure colonial highboys and lowboys, folding card tables and work stands, sofas, four posters, mirrors, pewter and, lastly, a goodly hoard of china. He withdrew his gaze reluctantly from a precious bit of copper luster to find Althea hovering near with a tray containing bottle and glass and a plate of fruit cake.

"You must feel the need of refreshment," she said timidly.

He smiled gratefully and thanked her, hiding his surprise at the label on the bottle. He poured a glass for her and filled his own, and then, standing in the dining room with the mirror lined drawing room stretching beyond with its throng of women and gray clothed men gathered as if waiting for his action, he lifted his glass and bowed toward Miss Althea.

"To all of us!" he said with grave courtesy, and as Miss Althea drank the toast there came into her breast a strange little thrill—a quivering expectancy that she had not known in years.

When John Laking had gone, leaving her quite alone, Althea sank into one of the great blue brocaded chairs in the drawing room and thought over the events of the morning. Hours passed as she sat and dreamed until the lengthening shadows warned her that she had not lunched nor had she prepared to dine.

Vexed at this departure from her usual routine of decorum, Althea shook off the glamour of the unusual day much as she might have discarded a gay opera cloak that chance had flung about her workaday shoulders and prepared her evening meal.

From that day Althea's life underwent a change. Things happened with astonishing frequency, and it was surprising how quickly Althea Wayne adapted herself to new conditions. The day following John Laking's visit he sent Althea a huge box of candy, a gay, foolish box tied up with pale blue ribbons and filled to the brim with delicious confections such as she had never seen. Another day there came flowers—all the blossoms that she loved, and yet she had never told him of her favorites. Then there was a book on old furniture that he brought himself, and another one on old china, and they spent hours reading them and tracing the genealogy of Althea's treasures.

Once there came a brilliant motorcar, panting breathlessly at the gate till Althea ventured forth for her first ride in its luxurious depths. The rector and his wife went along, too, and they rode down to Squaw Point, where Laking's beautiful colonial house fronted the sea. Into this bachelor abode Althea went with a delightful sense of expectancy. It was all like the owner—clean cut and polished and comfortable and homelike and appealing.

Back in the Wayne house Althea felt the desolateness of her former life and turned the old place inside out to obtain new effects. She found herself pussling over the intricacies of modern fashions, and she marveled at the growing beauty and elegance of the creatures that filled her rooms. They were no longer pale and lifeless automatons. They bloomed as Althea did, as the roses did, in the sun of awakening love.

At last Laking wrote his first love letter to Althea, telling her that he could not live without her and that he would come to her that night for his answer.

In the soft light of the candles she stood alone. Her color was blue, and the pale folds of her gown swept to the rich Turkey carpet. She was all alone at last.

Laking paused in the doorway and looked at the bare walls where the mirrors had hung.

"Where are the pale ladies?" he asked with an attempt at lightness in his tone.

"Gone," said Althea, a little regretfully. "They were ghosts, and I was the leading spirit of them all."

"And—you—Althea?" he asked, coming toward her with outstretched hands.

"Why, I—I'm alive now," faltered Althea, bending toward him.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Cy Young—Can He Last to Pitch One Thousand Games?

Can Cy Young pitch 1,000 games in his big league career? This is the question, since Cy has won his five hundredth game and bids fair to continue winning as frequently as do the majority of good pitchers in the American league.

In his twenty-two years Cy has pitched 800 games, or about that number. To pitch in 1,000, to use round figures, Cy must work in 200 more contests. Give him an average of fifty games a season, which the old boy can stand and stand well, and it will take four years to finish the mark.

Two Hundred Thousand Motorboats.

It has been estimated that there are at least 200,000 motorboats in this country. These figures were not guessed at, but were reached through a census made by an association of builders of these craft not long ago. The association tried to find out just how many craft there were in addition to those detailed in the yacht register, which takes into account only vessels of a certain size. The figures rather surprised the manufacturers.

There is not a piece of water navigable by a small boat that has not some motorboats on it, and, as many of these craft draw only a few inches of water, it can be seen how they have developed yachting everywhere. When sailing craft only were at the disposition of the yachtsman he had to limit his cruising to known navigable waters, because a sailing craft needs room to work in and cannot be sent through shoal narrow channels. But the motorboat can go wherever it can float, and consequently it can be used on any small piece of water.

Baseball Time Record.

Mobile and Atlanta broke the world's time record for a baseball game in Atlanta recently when they played a full nine inning game in thirty-two minutes, Mobile winning 2 to 1.

This remarkable record was made possible by the two teams going on the field and coming to bat on the run. Invariably the first ball delivered to each batter was struck at and usually hit without any effort to "place" it.

Thirty-five assists in the field tells the story. Nevertheless there were some sensational stops and throws as well as some clever catches by the outfielders. Only one base on balls was recorded and only one strike out. There were four stolen bases, one sacrifice hit and one wild pitch, three two-baggers, one three-bagger, one tripie and one double play. It was a snappy game.

Stanley Ice Hockey Cup.

The Stanley cup for hockey competition has been placed in good condition by the trustees of the Ottawa (Canada) Hockey club. It has been decided that all clubs holding the trophy shall supply a bond for the return of the cup in good condition.

The cup had become badly battered during the years it has been competed for, and the world championship trophy for hockey required a new base and some extra room for shields and a bit of new silver.

To Play Ball In Tropics.

The Minneapolis Baseball club, champions of the American association, has arranged a series of twelve games to be played this fall in Cuba and the West Indies. Ten of the Minneapolis team and Outfielder Lelivelt of the Washington team of the American league will make the trip. The players will start from Chicago on Oct. 25.

English Rugby Players Not Coming.

Oxford and Cambridge Rugby football team will not visit San Francisco this fall, as predicted. The tour will be made in 1911, when Oxford will send over a squad.

Happiness.

"There is an instinct in the heart of man which makes him fear a cloudless happiness. It seems to him that he owes to misfortune a tithe of his life, and that which he does not pay bears interest, is amassed and largely swells a debt which sooner or later he must acquit."

Her Long Dream.

Estelle—Ah! His proposal was just like a dream!

Agnes—Well, you ought to know, dear. You've been dreaming of that proposal for years.

Decide but Once.

When you decide more than once not to do a thing it is a sure sign that you will do it sooner or later.—Atchison Globe.

You never lift up a life without being yourself lifted up.—Emerson.

Shall Women vote?

If they did, millions would vote Dr. King's New Life Pills the true remedy for women. For banishing dull jagged feelings, backache or headache, constipation, dispelling colds, imparting appetite and toning up the system, they're unequaled. Easy safe sure. 25c. at Upcurch Drug Co.

Good Form

"Informal formal invitations" is what one might call those which come in a line written on a visiting card. The recipient takes for granted that such a card means too many guests to write notes to all, which in itself indicates a certain formality, and yet the occasion is not sufficiently formal to require engraved invitations.

Invitations to tea, cards or even to musicals may be sent out on visiting cards, and that there may be no mistake as to the entertainment provided it is designated on the card. The only exception to this is when one is simply bidden to afternoon. In that case only the day and hours are written on, the absence of any other information meaning simply that the hostess will be at home at the time specified. Such cards are by all means the easiest and most satisfactory way of letting friends know one is at home for the winter, and one has a social afternoon at small expense. Nothing more than sandwiches, cakes and tea need be served, the table being in the drawing room or dining room, as suits the hostess best.

A card denoting such an afternoon would have written on it, above or below the hostess' name:

Monday afternoon, October fifteenth,
From four to seven.

Two lines are required for the hours and date.

If the hostess intends playing bridge or other card games she writes:

Monday afternoon, October fifteenth,
Bridge at three o'clock.

Dinner Tables Smaller.

Smaller dinner tables are required than formerly because vegetable dishes are never placed thereon. When one lives with any degree of formality the meat also is handed by the maid, not being put, as used to be, before the head of the household.

Even when there is little or no pretense of service in the dining room, vegetables are not supposed to be always in evidence, for the arrangement of a side table where it can be reached easily, without leaving the dinner table, acts as a service board, and the symmetry of the principal table is thus preserved.

The aesthetic has entered so into the serving of food that housekeepers are expected to give it as great attention as they do orders to the butcher. A few flowers, a dish of fruit, or even an empty dish, if it is pretty, must occupy the center, serving as a hub around which other decorative pieces, useful as well, are placed. Odd or fancy silver forks and spoons are laid on the cover, although they are not required for actual service during the meal. Four tiny vases of flowers, one at each corner; four candlesticks, or even two, in the room and are decorative, as they would not be were they side by side with large dishes of food.

Good Form For Housewife.

A good housekeeper is a useful member of society, but the mistress of the house must not carry her zeal so far as to make everybody about her wretched in her busy days. Where is the heart that has not felt a pang on account of the weekly housecleaning, the Saturday baking, the Monday wash? Everything is turned topsy turvy, lard tempers dominates, and for even the breadwinner of the home to expect a square meal is regarded as a positive unkindness. So it is sometimes that a little fret is made in domestic felicity that is never bridged over. This is the time when the sweet tempered neighbor, who lets her housekeeping go to the dogs in order that she may pass pleasanter moments with her family, becomes an angel by contrast with the indefatigable worker next door. In housekeeping, as in everything else, when it comes to endangering domestic peace there is something that may well be left undone. If with the necessary housekeeping everybody in the home is not driven wild let the queen of the household choose the better part—and minister first to the hearts about her.

The Way It's Done Counts.

The young girl who would be the guest of success should always go up and speak to older women. She does not have to stay and talk; she does not have to go far out of her way. But when she finds herself near the mother of one of her friends or any older person to whom she is known—particularly one to whose house she has been invited—she should go up and shake hands and say, "How do you do?" as though she wanted to say it. She may not say it at all than say it grudgingly, says the Delineator. It is the way of doing it that counts, and the way is pointed out in the thought of it kindly and in the attitude that is adopted. At the foundation of such courtesy is always a certain unconsciousness of self, a certain joyous belief and faith in the goodness of others, a light hearted giving out, rather than quickly taking all in. To sum it up, the young girl who thinks the world is inhabited by adorable people is pretty sure to be rather charming herself.

Good Form

"Informal formal invitations" is what one might call those which come in a line written on a visiting card. The recipient takes for granted that such a card means too many guests to write notes to all, which in itself indicates a certain formality, and yet the occasion is not sufficiently formal to require engraved invitations.

Invitations to tea, cards or even to dinners may be sent out on visiting cards, and that there may be no mistake as to the entertainment provided it is designated on the card. The only exception to this is when one is merely bidden to afternoon. In that case only the day and hours are written on, the absence of any other information meaning simply that the hostess will be at home at the time specified. Such cards are by all means the easiest and most satisfactory way of letting friends know one is at home for the winter, and one has a social afternoon at small expense. Nothing more than sandwiches, cakes and tea need be served, the table being in the dining room or dining room, as suits the hostess best.

A card denoting such an afternoon would have written on it, above or below the hostess' name:

Monday afternoon, October fifteenth,
From four to seven.

If two lines are required for the hours and date.

If the hostess intends playing bridge or other card games she writes:

Monday afternoon, October fifteenth,
Bridge at three o'clock.

Dinner Tables Smaller.

Smaller dinner tables are required than formerly because vegetable dishes are never placed thereon. When one dines with any degree of formality the menu also is handed by the maid, not being put, as used to be, before the head of the household.

Even when there is little or no pretense of service in the dining room, vegetables are not supposed to be always in evidence, for the arrangement of a side table where it can be reached easily, without leaving the dinner table, acts as a service board, and the symmetry of the principal table is thus preserved.

The aesthetic has entered so into the serving of food that housekeepers are expected to give it as great attention as they do orders to the butcher. A few flowers, a dish of fruit, or even an empty dish, if it is pretty, must occupy the center, serving as a hub around which other decorative pieces, useful as well, are placed. Odd or fancy silver forks and spoons are laid on the cover, although they are not required for actual service during the meal. Other tiny vases of flowers, one at each corner; four candlesticks, or even two, the room and are decorative, as they would not be were they side by side with large dishes of food.

Good Form For Housewife.

A good housekeeper is a useful member of society, but the mistress of the house must not carry her zeal so far as to make everybody about her wretched by her busy days. Where is the heart that has not felt a pang on account of the weekly housecleaning, the Saturday baking, the Monday wash? Everything is turned topsy turvy, bad temper dominates, and for even the breadwinner of the home to expect a square meal is regarded as a positive unkindness. So it is sometimes that a little rift is made in domestic felicity that is never bridged over. This is the time when the sweet tempered neighbor, who has left her housekeeping go to the dogs in order that she may pass pleasant moments with her family, becomes an angel by contrast with the distracted worker next door. In this, as in everything else, the risk of endangering domestic happiness is something that may well be shunned. If with the necessary help everybody in the home is willing to let the queen of the household have the better part—the hearts about her.

The Way It's Done Counts.

The young girl who would be the ideal housekeeper should always go up to her work. She does not talk; she does not get out of her way. But she does not put herself near the mother or friends or any older person to whom she is known—particularly in whose house she has been invited—she should go up and shake hands and say, "How do you do?" even though she wanted to say it to the cook. Better not say it at all than say it grudgingly, says the Delineator. It is the way of doing it that counts, and the way is pointed out in the thought that kindly and in the attitude that follows. At the foundation of such manner is always a certain unconsciousness of self, a certain joyous belief and faith in the goodness of others, a light hearted giving out, rather than a mentally taking all in. To sum it up, the young girl who thinks the world is inhabited by adorable people is pretty sure to be rather adorable herself.

HINTS FOR THE BUSY HOUSEWIFE

Improved Mop That Pulls Up Into the Handle.

A simple and effective form of mop has been designed by a Pennsylvanian. Its chief advantage lies in the absence of springs, balls, levers, heads or other parts of metal framework, which have been known to rust, get out of repair and scratch polished surfaces. The mop is made in two detachable parts—the mop proper and the handle, which is equipped with a hook at one end and a flaring piece that is also detachable. To put this apparatus together the hook is run through the ring on the mop and the loose metal cap is drawn down over the top, compressing the upper portion of the strands so that they can be drawn up into the hollow end of the handle. In this way there are no protruding metal parts and the device may be used with safety on parquetry floors or any polished surfaces which might otherwise be marred by the contact of anything but the soft mop itself. The whole affair is very light and is easy to manipulate.

Household Notes.

Peaches may be as easily peeled as tomatoes if the fruit is plunged for an instant only in boiling, not hot, water.

The bags in which flour or sugar come make excellent dishcloths. It is well to stitch up the bags, using them double.

The dishcloth should be washed in a good lather after it is used, then rinsed in clear hot water and hung out to dry.

Scraps of soap should be put into a little muslin bag and tied up. The bag can be shaken about in water to produce a lather quickly.

Don't use scouring soap on enamel bathtubs. The enamel will soon be cut through if you do. Kerosene applied with a rag will remove all spots.

Cabbage Souffle.

Chop a solid, white head of cabbage, and cook in salted water until tender. Drain, and place in a buttered dish in layers, with a sprinkling of grated cheese between. Mix two tablespoonfuls each of flour and butter, add one cupful of rich milk, the beaten yolks of two eggs, and a saltspoonful each of salt and mustard; stir over the fire until it boils. Then add the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs, pour over the cabbage and bake for half an hour.

Cucumber Pickles.

One peck cucumbers, one teacupful salt, one teacupful mustard or mustard seeds; cover with vinegar. Wipe but do not wash the cucumbers, put them carefully into a crock, sprinkle with salt and let stand twenty-four hours, drain and sprinkle with the mustard and cover with vinegar. Will be ready to eat in twenty-one days. Always put a cloth over jar under lid. Ginger root, cloves, bay leaves or green peppers may be used instead of mustard.

Green Tomato Preserve.

This is a very old recipe and is a delicious East Indian preserve. Nine pounds green tomatoes, nine pounds sugar, one-half pound of green ginger and four lemons. Slice the tomatoes and stew together with ginger until tender. Boil lemons, chop and add to tomatoes and ginger. Add sugar and boil until clear. Put in glass jars while hot and let stand. Half this quantity is enough for a first trial.

Spiced Ripe Tomato.

Peel ripe tomatoes and weigh. For each seven pounds allow two cupfuls of vinegar, seven cupfuls of sugar, one ounce of whole allspice, the same of stick cinnamon and one-half ounce of whole cloves. Cook the tomatoes half an hour, or until soft, cutting to pieces while cooking. Add the vinegar, sugar and the spices tied in a muslin bag. Cook until thick like marmalade. Serve with cold meats.

Pure Baking Powder.

Four ounces of cornstarch, eight ounces of cream tartar, four ounces of baking soda. After powdering each ingredient mix or rather sift them together several times, as the chief difficulty lies in not having them thoroughly mixed.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson VIII.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 20, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xxvi, 36-56. Memory Verses, 38, 39—Golden Text, Matt. xxvi, 45—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns

It may have been, as some think, not far from midnight when Jesus went forth with His disciples over the brook Kedron on His way to Gethsemane. We think of another night which in some small measure foreshadowed this one, when the king of Israel fled for his life across this same brook, accompanied by a few faithful followers, because of the rebellion of his son Absalom. In our lesson we see the true King of Israel about to be put to death by His firstborn (Ex. iv, 22) and about to enter into an agony the like of which was never before seen by men or angels on this earth. Possibly He had spoken the words of John xv and xvi on His way to the garden and had prayed the prayer of chapter xvii after reaching the garden. Of this we cannot be certain. But now He leaves the eight disciples somewhere in the garden, and, taking Peter and James and John, He was withdrawn from the others about a stone's cast and began to be sorrowful and very heavy, saying unto them, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death; tarry ye here and watch with Me." Then, leaving the three, He went a little farther and kneeled down and fell on His face on the ground and prayed the prayer of verse 39. Luke says that an angel from heaven appeared to Him and strengthened Him, and, being in an agony, He prayed more earnestly, and His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. He came to the disciples and found them asleep and said to Peter, "What, could ye not watch with Me one hour?" Watch and pray (verses 40, 41). He went away the second time and prayed the same prayer. Then He came again to them and found them asleep again and went away the third time and prayed the same words. Then He came the third time to His disciples and said unto them, "Sleep on now and take your rest; behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners." Luke xxii, 45, 46, looks as if when He returned to the eight He found them asleep also and said to them: "Why sleep ye? Rise and pray lest ye enter into temptation." We can read it and write it and meditate upon it, but who can understand it?

What was the cup from which He asked if possible to be delivered and yet in the drinking of which He submitted wholly to the Father's will? Was it the same cup as that of John xviii, 11, concerning which He said, "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" It looks as if the devil did not know what he was doing when he killed the Lord Jesus, for it is written in Heb. ii, 12, that Jesus took a body of flesh and blood that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death—that is, the devil. We know that he tried to kill him at His birth, and possibly he tried to drown Him in that storm on the sea. Perhaps he thought that if he could kill Him before he reached the cross he would frustrate the whole plan of redemption. If that be so and we can consider Gethsemane as the devil's attempt to kill Him in the garden, then the Saviour's prayer may have been a prayer that He might not die in the garden and leave His great work unfinished, but that He might have victory in the garden and go on to Golgotha and finish His work of atonement for sin. That would explain the reason why an angel strengthened Him. If we are right in this supposition, then His willingness to die in the garden, if His Father should so will it, and leave His work unfinished in very sight of the goal is the greatest instance of submission on record. To be willing not to succeed with success in sight—who ever heard of such a thing?

But the cup of dying in the garden passed from Him, and he was strengthened supernaturally and went on gladly to drink the cup which His Father had prepared for Him. In that light listen to Heb. v, 7, "Who in the days of His flesh, when He had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto Him that was able to save Him from death and was heard in that He feared." In I John v, 15, it is written, "If we know that He hear us whatsoever we ask we know that we have the petitions that we desired of Him." He prayed to Him who was able to save Him from death, and He was heard; therefore He was saved from death in the garden in order that He might finish His work of atonement by dying on the cross for our sins. If these thoughts are wrong may the Lord forgive us for daring to tolerate them, but if they are of Him may He bless them and grant us victory to do His will and perfect submission to it. Now see the agent of the devil daring to kiss our Lord, and behold our Lord submitting to it knowing him to be who and what he was. Simon Peter would have done better without a sword, but how many blunders of his and ours has our blessed Lord remedied! Are we helping people to hear, or are we by inconsistencies hindering them from hearing?

This is an exact representation of the carton containing a bottle of St. Joseph's Liquid Liver Regulator, but it is much larger than this illustration, and printed in black ink on a yellow carton. Druggists and general merchants sell it at 50 cents a bottle, or you can get it direct from us at the same price. This is a delightful liver medicine—prompt, effective, and exceedingly pleasant to the taste. Try just one bottle to satisfy yourself—and you'll buy more.

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER
Sees all the Sights He Can, and Some He Can Not.

To-day is Thanksgiving and we all may rejoice and give thanks for a prosperous year, a full measure of which has come to the good people of Chilton. With a plentiful harvest and good times generally, all the people have cause for rejoicing, and the beautiful weather we have been experiencing lately adds to the feeling of contentment.

There appears to be a probability of a renewal of the prohibition fight in the coming session of the legislature and it is to be regretted. Prohibition, like other things, may be run too far, and an intelligent people have already spoken their minds upon the subject. Prohibitionists have already gone too far in their demands, and decirred that local option suits their requirements. To attempt more than this is to court another failure.

Now that we are within one month of the close, the Banner Contest is exciting general interest, and the several contestants and their friends are bending their energies to winning the different prizes.

The contest between the Churches has been most spirited and is very pleasing to the members of the different denominations, and which one will win the first prize of One hundred dollars, or the second prize of Fifty dollars, it would take a prophet to determine.

The Diamond Ring has been the center of attraction at the Alred Drug Company's store for some time, while the friends of the young ladies have been busy soliciting votes and have kept us busy issuing coupons. It is a beautiful ring and will adorn the hand of the fair winner.

The race for the Business Scholarship has not brought out as many candidates as was expected, but the race is well on, and there is no telling who will be the lucky winner.

Among the boys much enthusiasm is being displayed and the prospective future owner of the Bicycle is yet to be determined—several of the young people trying their level best to be the leader.

Take it all around, it is a most interesting contest—one to suit everybody and give enjoyment and pleasure to all.

If in need of a horse or mule it will be well for you to read the announcement of Fies & Son, of Birmingham, the well known dealers in these animals, which will be found on page five of this issue.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

Tate-Farr.

A beautiful home wedding which took place last Sunday at the home of the brides parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Gardner, of Verbena, was that of their daughter, Mrs. Agnes Farr, to Mr. Moses Tate, of Wetumpka. The home was beautifully decorated with ferns and chrysan the mums.

The bride wore a becoming gown of gray cloth and carried brides roses. Rev. C. H. Rogers of Prattville of ficiating.

Mr. and Mrs. Tate left on the evening train for Wetumpka where they will make their home.

The brid's going-a-way suit was of dark blue cloth with hat and gloves to match.

We regret very much that this marriage takes from our community one of our most enthusastic workers.

Mrs. Tate will be great missed by her many friends, but our loss is anothers gain.

Mr. Tate is a thriving merchant of Wetumpka.

COUNT TOLSTOI IS CALLED TO BEYOND

Great Russian Author Answers Last Call.

FAMILY WAS AT HIS BEDSIDE

Tolstoi, Seeking Solitude, Was Overcome by Fatigue and Passed His Last Days at Small Railway Station on Shores of Black Sea.

Count Leo Tolstoi died peacefully Saturday. Dr Makovelsky and the other attending physicians and Countess Tolstoi were at his side when the end came. It was recognized long before his case was hopeless, and at 5 o'clock in the morning, after the countess had been summoned and the other members of the family had gathered in an adjoining room, the physicians issued a bulletin, announcing that the activity of the heart had almost ceased, and that Tolstoi's condition was extremely dangerous.

Several of the physicians were greatly overcome by the approaching death of Russia's great writer.

Tolstoi, accompanied only by Dr. Makovelsky, left his home at Yasnaya Poliana for the purpose of ending his days in solitude, to which he more and more inclined during his later years. His pilgrimage led him to the monastery at Shamardino, in the province of Kaluga, where he remained as the guest of his sister, Marie.

Learning that his retreat had been discovered, he insisted upon proceeding on his journey to the Caucasus, where he hoped to spend his last days close to the Tolstoian colony, on the shores of the Black sea. But, during the railroad journey, he was overcome with exhaustion and the cold, and Dr. Makovelsky was compelled to have him transferred to the flag station at Astapova, where he was made as comfortable as possible in the rude wooden building.

For five days he had lain there, suffering first from bronchitis and later from inflammation of the lungs.

Specialists were called from Moscow and other places, but, notwithstanding their efforts, the heart of the great Russian responded but feebly to the restoratives and stimulants administered. On Saturday the attacks of heart failure increased alarmingly, and many hours prior to the end the physicians had given up all hope.

ANOTHER TARIFF SCANDAL.

Gross Frauds Said to Have Been Perpetrated on Government.

United States District Attorney Wise is seemingly determined to recover for the government all the money it is claimed to have been defrauded out of during the past five years by means of alleged false invoices for importations made by Joseph Brooke & Co., manufacturers of woolens, worsteds and linings, of Bradford, England, and New York city. Architect Platt Whitney, who has direct charge of the case, said:

"This is the biggest case of its kind the government has ever had. The frauds involve several woolen manufacturing companies in England. The total amount of the duties which the government has lost through these importation frauds is much greater than in the sugar under-weighing cases."

After filing of preliminary papers in a suit to recover $200,000 damages because of the alleged under-valuation frauds, Assistant District Attorney Whitney obtained a writ of attachment, upon which Marshal Henkel seized the entire stock of Brooke & Co. Further, to protect the interests of the government Mr. Whitney obtained from Judge Hazel twenty-six additional writs of attachment, which have been served on certain banks and firms to prevent the collection of sums on deposit and accounts receivable.

Mr. Whitney said that the Brooke case was the initial one of a series of cases which the government expects to conduct against other importers. These new cases, said the federal officer, will involve claims against importers amounting to upwards of $10,000,000.

POLITICAL UPHEAVAL.

Republicans Oust Democrats From Many Offices.

Probably few counties in Georgia have ever witnessed anything like the political upheaval or revolution that has just taken place in Fannin.

Democratic officials who had held office for years were ousted and republicans put in their places. Offices held by democrats for a quarter of a century were turned over to republicans.

In fact, the republicans made a clean sweep of it, turning out every democratic official in the county, and Fannin's political complexion has taken on new and startling hues.

Only the senator from the forty-first was saved by the democrats from the otherwise complete wreck; but J. R. Kincaid, democrat, won out for the senate with the aid of the other counties in the district.

Following it all has come quite a crop of indictments, charging vote-buying; it is claimed votes were bought right and left, and, as the result of the grand jury's investigations, many true bills were found.

GREAT BALLOON VOYAGE.

Flight Across American Continent Is Now Proposed by Aeronauts.

A balloon flight from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast, as proposed by the International Association of Aeronautical Pilots at its annual meeting in Boston a few weeks ago, will be attempted next year, as the result of an offer made by A. Chester Thompson, of New York, to give $10,000 to finance the trip, besides a prophy valued at $1,000.

The offer from Mr. Thompson was received today by Charles J. Glidden, president of the association, and was immediately accepted.

H. Heim Clayton, who was aid in the balloon Pommern, which won the international balloon race of 1908, will be the pilot for the coast-to-coast trip, and is confident that the trip can be made in four days.

A rubber-silk hydrogen balloon of from 160,000 to 200,000 cubic feet capacity will be immediately ordered.

Mr. Thompson makes no condition as to the trip other than that the start shall be made at some place on the Pacific coast and the landing within 50 miles of the Atlantic coast.

OIL TRUST AGAIN WINS BIG VICTORY

Trial at Jackson, Tenn., Results in an Acquittal.

IMPORTANT CASE SETTLED

Efforts of the United States to Have Assessed Against Oil Company Penalties of $30,000,000 Have Proven Futile.

In a ruling which required just twenty minutes to read, Judge John E. McCall, in the United States circuit court at Jackson, Tenn., wrote finis to the efforts of the government to have assessed against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana penalties aggregating $30,000,000. The rulings of the court, instructing that a verdict of not guilty be returned, came with the conclusion of the case in chief of the prosecution, and in substance holds with the contentions of the defense, that after four years the United States had failed to build its structure of evidence other than on sand.

The suit at issue was probably the most important litigation against the greater corporations ever fought out in the south.

The Elkins law, regarding interstate commerce, was violated, it was alleged, through "scheme and device," the specific offense charged being the receiving of freight rate concessions.

POISON IN COFFEE.

Drug Placed In Drink Believed to Have Caused Death of Two.

William Sprayberry, aged 90 years, one of the richest planters of DeKalb county, Ga., and his wife, Mary Sprayberry, aged 85 years, are dead from the effects, it is believed, of drinking poisoned coffee. Three servants employed on the plantation are dangerously near death from drinking the coffee.

The Sprayberry plantation is located on the Flat Shoals road, one and a half miles from the Cedar Grove church. It is said to be one of the largest plantations in the county and is modernly equipped in every respect.

It is believed of neighbors that William Sprayberry, in a fit of temporary insanity, placed the drug in the coffee. Dr. B. M. Sprayberry, a nephew of the dead couple, stated that he had believed William Sprayberry to be insane for the past ten years. He believes Mr. and Mrs. Sprayberry died from the effects of arsenic or rough on rats placed in the coffee.

Grieving over the death of her mother, who died when she was only six years old, Harriet Owens, ten years old, ended her life with her father's revolver at Philadelphia. Her body was discovered lying beside a preserved wreath, which had been taken from the coffin of her mother. Lying nearby was a childish scrawl which read: "Good-by, papa. I am going to join mother, and hope that God will forgive me."

JOSEPH M. TERRELL NAMED SENATOR

Ex-Governor Succeeds Late Senator Steve Clay.

APPOINTED BY GOV. BROWN

Action of Georgia's Governor No Surprise to the People, as It Was Generally Thought That Mr. Terrell Would Be Given the Honor.

Joseph Meriwether Terrell is the new United States senator from Georgia.

The proclamation naming former Governor Terrell to succeed the late Senator Clay was made out by Governor Brown and read at a surprise dinner party given at the mansion in honor of Georgia's junior senator.

The naming of Governor Terrell will probably cause no surprise throughout the state. He was the one man most conspicuously mentioned for the post, and the one who was universally expected to win the coveted honor.

Throughout the two heated campaigns of Governor Brown he was the power behind the throne; he organized the state, and his hand was on every detail of the organization that won victory two years ago, and that mustered 100,000 men to the polls this year.

A former governor of Georgia and former attorney general of the state, Senator Terrell has been conspicuous for his interest in education for the boys and girls of the state. The establishment of the eleven district agricultural schools, which have since come into being, was made an issue in his campaign of 1902, when he first ran for governor, and authorized during his incumbency in that office.

Senator Terrell served in the lower house in the sessions of 1884 and 1886 and in the senate which convened in 1899. He was elected attorney general in 1892 and served until 1902, when he resigned to make the race for governor. In that campaign he made over 120 speeches and defeated two able opponents, Hon. Du Pont Guerry, of Bibb, and J. H. Estill, of Chatham.

He served in the office of governor for four years and eight months, being given an extra length of time, owing to the action of the legislature in changing the time of meeting of the legislature from October to June. He retired from the governor's chair on July 1, 1906, and has since been engaged in the practice of law in Atlanta.

RIOT AT PUEBLA.

Mexican Revolt Under Control After Much Bloodshed.

Estimates of the number who were killed in the fight between soldiers and police on one side, and revolutionists on the other at Puebla, continues to be placed at from 100 to 170. Dispatches from that city stated that it was certain over 100 had been slain in the conflict.

Aquiles Cerdan, whose house was the scene of the fight, was killed by soldiers while resisting arrest in a tunnel where he had taken refuge. Cerdan fought to the last, firing at the officers as soon as they found his hiding place.

According to late advices from Puebla there was no fear of further trouble, as the troops were in control of the situation. It was said that a large number of factory employees were still talking in a revolutionary vein, but that there was no danger of another serious outbreak.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Great Waterway Will Be Completed by December, 1913.

The Panama canal will be completed on December 1, 1913. This information was given to President Taft while he was inspecting the famous Gatun dam, on which he spent several hours.

The official date of the opening remains January 1, 1915. Lieutenant Colonel Goethals desiring one year in which to train the canal tenders and to get the machinery working smoothly. Ships meantime will be granted the privilege of the canal at their own risk of possible delay incident to inexperienced operation.

In addition, it was announced by Colonel Goethals that the report that President Taft's visit was the forerunner of a request for another $100,000,000 from congress was unfounded.

The canal will be completed in 1913, he said, within the $375,000,000 already authorized.

ROBIN COOPER ACQUITTED.

Final Chapter in Celebrated Case in Tennessee Courts.

Robin J. Cooper, charged with the murder of Senator Edward Ward Carmack, was given a verdict of not guilty in the criminal court at Nashville, Tenn., on recommendation of Attorney General A. B. Anderson. Thus was brought to a close the final chapter in one of the most celebrated cases known to the annals of the courts of Tennessee.

In striking contrast to the scenes marking the first trial of this case, when the court room was packed almost to suffocation by those eager to hear every word of the evidence, there were only a few persons present. Counsel were probably the only persons there particularly on account of the case.

AVIATOR MEETS DEATH.

Ralph Johnstone Gambled With Death Once Too Often.

With one wing tip of his machine crumpled like a piece of paper, Ralph Johnstone, the daring young aviator, holder of the world's altitude record, dropped like a plummet from a height of 500 feet into the inclosure at Overland park aviation field at Denver, Colo., Thursday afternoon and was instantly killed. When spectators reached him his body lay beneath the engine of the biplane, with the white planes that had failed him in his time of need wrapped about it like a shroud. Nearly every bone in his body was broken.

He had gambled with death once too often, but he played the game to the end, fighting coolly and grimly to the last second to regain control of his broken machine. Fresh from his triumphs at Belmont park, where he had broken the world's record for altitude with a height of 9,174 feet, Johnstone attempted to give the thousands of spectators an extra thrill with his most daring feat, the spiral glide, which has made the Wright aviators famous. The spectators got their thrill.

The fatal flight was the second Johnstone had made during the afternoon.

COSTLY CUP OF TEA.

One Thousand Dollars Paid for Same at Charity Bazar.

One thousand dollars was paid for a cup of tea in Chicago.

The mark was set at the Charity bazar at Orchestra hall, the proceeds of which, $10,000 at a rough estimate, will be for the Home for Destitute Crippled Children.

Thomas Griffin, wealthy manufacturer, stepped into the tea room conducted by Mrs. Graeme Stewart, and two dozen pretty debutantes and ordered a cup of tea.

Griffin took a sniff. "Great, isn't it?" commented the young woman who served it.

"Yes, indeed."

Then Mrs. Stewart came along. Mr. Griffin drained the last drop, then put the cup down and filled out a check.

"I want to pay for my tea."

Mrs. Stewart took the check and scrutinized it.

One thousand dollars. "Never mind the change," said Mr. Griffin.

GENERAL ITEMS OF INTEREST

Believing that thousands of acres of public lands containing oil in California have been improperly acquired by railroads, corporations and individuals, Attorney General Wickersham, it was learned at Washington, was instructed by President Taft shortly before he left for Panama to conduct a searching inquiry into the case. Specifically, the department of justice wished to ascertain whether 6,000 acres of oil lands were patented by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company several years ago with a knowledge on the part of certain government agents that the lands contained oil. The fact, it is said, has caused President Taft, Attorney General Wickersham and Secretary Ballinger to regard with suspicion the number of entries that have been made in the oil lands of California by individuals.

Pensions for all employees of national banks and protection for their families in case of death has been proposed to the treasury department by several mutual life insurance companies. Several representatives of the companies, headed by W. C. Beers, of New York, had a lengthy conference at Washington with the comptroller of the currency as to the legality of the plan. Their proposal is to have the treasury department interpret the national bank law to permit the banks to take out a special form of policy for employees.

A London dispatch says that Lieut. Siegfried Heim, the German army officer, who was arrested, charged with having made sketches of the fortifications of Portsmouth harbor, pleaded guilty and was placed under bonds of $1,500 not to repeat the offense.

The annual convention of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, opened at Atlantic City. Among the executive matters that will come up for consideration will be federal aid for highway improvements, the parcels post and a more stringent enforcement of the oleomargarine laws.

The comptroller of the currency has issued a call for statements of the condition of all national banks at the close of business Thursday, November 10.

In an automobile, which had drawn up in front of the Dougherty county courthouse at Albany, Ga., and with the officiating minister's Bible resting on the mud guard, A. F. Gore and Miss Ruby Hendry, of Shellman, were married Thursday. The groom is well along in his fifties; the bride is just a little more than twenty years. The bride and groom slipped out of Shellman during the forenoon in Mr. Gore's big touring car, and are said to have smashed the records on the way to Albany.

The Portsmouth, Va., grand jury has returned true bill indictments against six judges of election in the Democratic congressional primary of August 23 for alleged voting of dead and absent people in the Second and Fifth wards of the city. The Portsmouth defendants will at once raise questions of demurrer similar to those pending in Norfolk, with the hope of a dismissal of the whole proceedings upon unconstitutionality of statute.

The prices of beef and pork are falling, says a dispatch from Chicago. Within the last week the price of beef has been reduced between 4 and 5 cents a pound by the meat packers. The price of pork has declined about 3 cents from the price of 18 and 20 cents a week ago, and wholesale meat dealers say that mutton, veal and other products of the packing houses will take a downward turn within the next few days.

Knoxville, Tenn., has a population of 36,346, according to the statistics of the 13th census made public. This is an increase of 3,799, or 11.4 per cent over 32,637 in 1900. Knoxville county, Tenn., containing the city of Knoxville, has a population of 94,187, compared with 73,302 in 1900.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES

Miss Eva Peek, a teacher in the Boulevard school, who had been ill since Sunday at the Wesley Memorial hospital in Atlanta, Ga., with pneumonia and cerebral complications, jumped out of her room window on the third floor Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock and was fatally injured, dying shortly before 2 o'clock without ever recovering consciousness.

J. H. Odell, Rufus Daselas, a Mexican, and an unidentified man were killed at Houston, Texas, in the yards of the Houston, Belt and Terminal Co. They were employees of the company and in avoiding one train stepped in front of an approaching Trinity and Brazos Valley railroad train. Odell was killed instantly, while his companions died later in a hospital.

Mrs. Marion B. Kanter, widely known as a W. C. T. U. and woman suffrage lecturer and worker, died at her home in Seattle, Wash., at the age of 66 years.

Jesse Odum, a well known man, was shot and killed in his yard at Bond, Miss., Sunday night. His wife, hearing the cries of her wounded husband, went to him and as she knelt over him she was also shot and fatally wounded. Odum went into the yard when his dog began barking, taking his gun with him, but had barely stepped into the yard when he was killed. The tragedy is surrounded by mystery.

Using the same revolver with which his sister was killed 18 months ago and choosing the same room in which she met her death to end his own life, Job Redd, 22 years of age, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head, at Lexington, Ky. The young man had been despondent since the death of his sister, which was said to have been accidental.

Fire, which originated on the second floor of the Rose hotel, practically destroyed the town of St. Stephens, about 40 miles from Charleston, S. C. Ten stores and residences were wiped out, the merchants losing practically all their stock, in addition to the buildings. The loss will aggregate about $50,000, while the insurance will amount to about $10,000.

Five children died on the steamer Carpathia during the steamer's voyage to New York from Trieste, and when the Carpathia got into port she was held at quarantine for the transfer from the steerage of 53 children, all ill with minor contagious diseases. The little invalids were sent to Hoffman island for treatment. The bodies of the children who died en route were buried at sea.

At Bloomington, Ill., Chris Frederick, a retired farmer, bought a cemetery lot and monument and mailed a check to an undertaker with instructions to find his body on the lot. Frederick's body was found with a bullet in the brain.

Three white men wrecked the safe in the Maner Trading Company's store at Manor, near Waycross, Ga., took $300 in cash, valuable deeds and notes, $1,400 in charge slips and caused $2,000 damage with nitroglycerin. They were pursued, but escaped in the darkness.

A shortage of over $10,000, it is alleged, has been revealed by an examination of the books of the Savings Bank of Brunswick, Md. The bank was ordered closed by State Bank Commissioner J. D. Downs. The deposits, amounting to $200,000, are made up mostly of the savings of railroad men and farmers.

Robbers dynamited the vault of the bank at Texline, Texas, but the explosion aroused the town and citizens drove the robbers away before they opened the safe. The explosion wrecked the vault and bank building. The bank is a branch of the Dalhart National bank.

How to See Sun Spots.

We are indebted to accident for many a useful discovery, and a Massachusetts gentleman has now by chance found out something which, if not valuable, is at least interesting.

What he found is that it is quite possible to see the larger spots that appear on the sun's surface without glass or lens of any kind.

It has long been known that when these objects attain unusual dimensions they can be glimpsed by direct vision through smoked glass, similar to the appliances used to view solar eclipses. But that sun spots can be seen without the assistance of this aid is something new.

The shutters of the observer's house happened to be closed, and through a tiny hole near the top of them a beam of sunlight found its way to the floor. There it left an image, clear and round, tinged at the circumference with a fringe of blue and orange. The whole appearance of the beam as projected reminded the spectator of the image of the sun taken on paper through a telescope, and he at once got a sheet of white note paper in order to test his surmise.

The result confirmed it. A beautiful round image of the sun fell on the paper, and near the center thereof could be seen a bluish spot which moved about with the image whenever the paper was shifted.

The bluish colored object was a veritable sun spot, and the observer watched it by the simple means described for several days until the revolution of the sun had carried it out of sight.

Indoor Hunting.

Fred heard a sudden snapping clang and then he saw something fly along above his head. Fred is a dog, and his business in life is going hunting birds with his master, who is the chief of police of Portland, Ore. Fred saw the something above his head and quite naturally thought that it was a bird. So he set off to catch the bird. He did not stop to remember that he was in a drug store with his master and that a drug store is no place to go hunting in. He was thinking only about the bird. Over counters and displays he went, scattering behind him all the bottles and packages that drug stores usually have put out for people to buy, and he ended his chase at the cashier's cage. There the bird had stopped, and as the drug store proprietor and the chief of police came running through the ruin that he had left behind him Fred understood at last. It was not a bird. It was only the basket that runs on wires from the salesman's counter to the cashier and back again.—Chicago News.

Elastic Spider Web.

The common garden spider, sometimes called the geometric spider, makes a beautiful radiated net which shows great skill in the way it is placed, in its strong framework made of strong threads or ropes and its net spun between them. The threads are elastic, so that they yield to the wind even when the web is tightly drawn. When the wind is more than ordinarily violent, so that the net is dangerously stretched, the spider hangs pieces of wood or stone or other substances to the web to steady it.

The web is nearly circular and is composed of a number of straight lines radiating from a common center and having a spiral line wound regularly upon them. The radiating lines are smooth and not elastic, whereas the spiral line is thickly studded with minute knobs and is elastic. The little knobs are made of a sticky substance which holds insect wings and legs.

The Boy Who Forgets.

I love him, the boy who forgets.
Does it seem such a queer thing to say?
Can't help it. He's one of my pets,
Delightful at work or at play.
I'd trust him with all that I own
And know neither worries nor frets,
But the secret of this lies alone
In the things that the laddie forgets.

He always forgets to pay back
The boy who has done him an ill,
Forgets that a grudge he owes Jack
And smiles at him pleasantly still.
He always forgets 'tis his turn
To choose what the others shall play,
Forgets about others to learn
The gossipy things that "they say."

He forgets to look sulky and cross
When things are not going his way,
Forgets some one's gain is his loss,
Forgets in his work time his play.
So this is why I take his part,
Why I say he is one of my pets,
I repeat it with all of my heart,
I love him for what he forgets!

The Secret of Youth

Do you ever wonder how you can remain young, or why other women older than you, look younger than you do?

The secret can be put in a few words: "Preserve your health, and you will preserve your youth."

By "health" we mean not alone physical health, but nerve health, as, sometimes, magnificently strong-looking women are nervous wrecks.

But whether you are weak physically or nervously, you need a tonic, and the best tonic for you is Cardui.

It builds strength for the physical and nervous systems. It helps put flesh on your bones and vitality into your nerves.

HINTS FOR THE BUSY HOUSEWIFE

Novel Hooks and Eyes That Require No Sewing.

A new kind of book and eye that has some distinct points of difference from the other types has been designed by a Pennsylvania woman. The chief feature of the new article is that, except in places where there is great strain, it is not necessary to sew either part fast to the clothing. Both hook and eye are equipped with safety pin devices, by which they are attached to waist or skirt, and it requires a very short time to affix them. Furthermore, if the positions are not exactly right they can be easily and speedily adjusted without the bother of unripping thread and sewing it over again. If there is too much strain on the pins a few turns of thread will make the parts secure. The throat of the hook is unusually deep and protects it from being easily disengaged, while a hump, after the style of all modern books and eyes, retains the eye in its adjusted position on the book.

Camphorated Vaseline.

In the early stages a cold can frequently be broken by rubbing the afflicted parts with camphorated vaseline. This is especially good to relieve the stuffy, tight feeling of a cold in the head. The grease should be well rubbed in the bridge of the nose, particularly between the eyes, and on the upper lip and upward on each side.

An incipient raw throat, often a precursor of bronchitis, is also relieved by thorough greasing of throat and chest with camphorated vaseline or oil. Both of these mixtures can be bought at a druggist's and should be included in every medicine closet. For an emergency the mixture can be made at home, twelve drops each of turpentine and spirits of camphor into two tablespoonfuls of yellow vaseline.

Cranberry Pudding.

Pick over and wash one quart of cranberries and stew them just enough to break them up a little with two cupfuls of sugar and one-half cupful of water. Butter well some thin slices of bread; if a little stale it will do no harm. Place a layer of the bread on the bottom of a buttered pudding dish, then a thick layer of the hot berries, and so on until all are used in alternation, having the top layer of the bread buttered side up. Cover with a paper and bake about twenty minutes in a moderate oven, then remove the paper and brown the top slightly. Serve hot with a sauce made by boiling one cupful of sugar and one cupful of water five minutes and cooling before serving.

A Workbasket Hint.

Keep in your workbasket several large sized safety pins and use them to string loose buttons, hooks, eyes, etc. Keep those of the same size on the same pin, black hooks on black pins, white eyes on white pins, etc. Thus you never will have an untidy workbasket or be delayed by not being able to find instantly what you are looking for. Fasten the safety pins to one side of the lining of your basket and your method of securing neatness will be complete.

Sweet Pickled Limes.

One gallon of salted limes, one gallon vinegar, three pounds sugar, one-quarter pound stick cinnamon, one-half pound allspice and three ounces cloves. Boil the limes in water till very tender, and to get rid of the salt drain and pierce. Boil the vinegar and spices together and pour over the limes. Keep hot for twenty minutes, but do not boil the vinegar again.

Mocha Caramel Butter.

Mocha caramel butter for filling cakes is made by adding one-half cupful of freshened butter to one and one-half cupfuls of confectioner's sugar and beating together until creamy. Then flavor with two tablespoonfuls of mocha caramel filling.

A delicious frosting may be made by using whipped cream and mocha caramel butter in equal portions.

Maple Sugar Biscuits.

Make a biscuit dough with one quart of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of butter and just enough milk to make a soft dough. When ready to roll out stir in quickly one cupful of maple sugar, cut in pieces the size of a pea. Roll out, cut into small biscuits and bake quickly in a hot oven.

Bran Gems.

Two cupfuls of bran, one cupful of flour, one-half cupful of molasses, one and one-half cupfuls of milk, one teaspoonful of baking soda and a scant half teaspoonful of salt. Bake in gem pans or as biscuits twenty minutes to half an hour.

Remedy For Bunions.

Wear shoes at least a size longer than you have been in the habit of wearing them and paint the bunion daily with this lotion: Carbolic acid, two drams; tincture of iodine, two drams; glycerin, two drams.

Salt Pork in Batter.

Fry four or five slices of salt pork until brown, beat two eggs, add a heaping tablespoonful of flour, two tablespoonfuls of milk and salt and pour over the pork. Turn so as to cook it on both sides.

Made Him Doubt His Own Name.

It was the quality of sympathy that made Mrs. Cleveland's life in the White House so rich a memory, writes Dr. W. H. Crook in the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post. I never knew her to make a mistake of a social nature but once, and then it was shared by so many others that I may be pardoned for repeating it in public print. I know the little story is true, for I was present at the time and heard it all. At one of the president's formal receptions a man named Decker appeared, and as he drew near the receiving line he told Colonel Wilson in confidence that his name was such an easy one it could not be mistaken or mispronounced, whereupon Colonel Wilson presented him.

"Happy to meet you, Mr. Cracker," said the president.

"Happy to meet you, Mr. Baker," said Mrs. Cleveland.

"Mr. Sacker," murmured Miss Bayard doubtfully.

"Happy to meet you, Mr. Black," Mrs. Whitney remarked with confidence.

It is said that a few minutes later Mr. Decker was seen looking at one of his visiting cards to see what his name really was.

Friction Matches.

Friction matches are a comparatively modern invention. They were first made by John Walker in England in 1827, but were rather crude affairs. He improved them somewhat in 1833 by using phosphorus. The first really practical friction match was made in the United States in 1836 by L. C. Allen of Springfield, Mass. Before this time a clumsy form of match was imported from France, which had to be dipped into a bottle of sulphuric acid before it could be lighted. This took a great deal of time and trouble, and Allen, seeing the necessity for friction matches, set about to make them and succeeded. He neglected to patent them, however, and on finally applying for letters patent found that a man named Alonzo Phillips, who was a peddler, had discovered through a third person the secret of making the matches and had already obtained a patent. Thus Allen, though the real inventor, was forced to become a mere manufacturer under another man's patent.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

The Kidnaped Brides.

In the year 902, according to old custom, all the brides for the year at Venice assembled on St. Mary's eve at the cathedral, taking with them their dowries in small chests. There they awaited their bridegrooms, who followed them, and after mass they were married and received the bishop's blessing. In this year the sea rovers of Trieste burst in upon the expectant maidens, who were all dressed in white, with hair loosely flowing and interwoven with threads of gold, carried them off to their barks and hoisted sail. The doge of Venice summoned his men to arms, pursued the rovers, overtook them in a creek still known as the Port of the Damsels and brought the brides back in triumph. In memory of this event a solemn procession of twelve young women took place yearly, and the Marian games were observed with great splendor until the year 1379, when they were discontinued in a time of disastrous war.

Earliest Theater.

What was probably one of the earliest theaters built was the theater of Dionysus, which was begun five centuries before Christ. The seating capacity of this remarkable building is said to have been 30,000, nearly four times that of our largest amusement palace. The theater of Dionysus was erected when Greek art and literature were in their prime. Here were presented to appreciative spectators the wonderful works of Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides.

MILD, GENTLE LAXATIVE FOR WOMEN GIVEN FREE

So many of the ills of women are due to habitual constipation, probably because of their false modesty on the subject, that their attention cannot be too strongly called to the importance of keeping the bowels open. It is always important to do that, regardless of the sex, but it is especially important in women.

From the time the girl begins to menstruate until menstruation ceases she has always vastly better prospects of coming through healthy if she watches her bowel movements. If you find yourself constipated, with bad breath, pimply complexion, headaches, belching gas and other symptoms of indigestion and constipation, take a small dose of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is a woman's favorite laxative. You will find that you can do away with salts, strong cathartics, etc., which are entirely unsuited to woman's requirements.

Mrs. Katherine Haberstroh of McKees Rocks, Pa., and Mrs. A. E. Herrick of Wheeler, Mich., who was almost paralyzed in her stomach and bowels, are now cured by the use of this remedy. A free sample bottle can be obtained by addressing Dr. Caldwell, and after you are convinced of its merits buy it of your druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specialized in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 602 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

A Gambler's Superstitions.

Like so many incurable gamblers, Kluge is exceedingly superstitious. All his speculations were carried out in sums divisible by three, and he informed the judge that this was a temperamental necessity to him. He never spent money that he had won, as he believed that it brought bad luck in play, and on one occasion he and a lady companion traveled all the way from Paris to Berlin without eating rather than touch a sum of £1,000 which one of his three-hour spells at the baccarat table had brought him in. —Berlin Despatch to London Telegraph.

Rubber In Fruit Skins.

A cloudy emulsion pressed from the green fruit of the Martinique banana has been found to contain ten per cent. of rubber, equivalent to 50 per cent. of the dry weight of the expressed juice. Analysis showed that the green banana skins contain as much as 20 per cent. of rubber, while the dried skins yielded seven per cent. of rubber and seven per cent. of wax, resin and chlorophyll. Some varieties are reported to be even richer in rubber than the Martinique banana.

Dr. Hawley Crippen paid the penalty of his crime, the murder of his wife, and was hanged in London on Wednesday morning.

Don't throw your money in the fire just because cotton is high by buying a cheap pair of Eye Glasses, but get Dr. J. V. Higgins, the man who understands the human eye, to fit you with the Eye Glass that will stop Headache, and do your eye good. Office, Higgins' Jewelry Store, Clanton, Ala.

Under the Orator's Spell.

Justice Brewer was once speaking of the oratory of John B. Gough. "I would go home after hearing his eloquence thoroughly elated, but when my father or mother asked me what Gough had said I could not tell them for the life of me. I remember once at a Yale commencement along in the fifties, about the time that I was graduated there, an incident illustrating the force of personal magnetism. Gough was to deliver an oration. He spoke, of course, on temperance. There was a distinguished audience. On the stage were many of the venerable, notable men in New Haven of that day. A large space was clear about the table, for Gough liked to walk back and forth as he talked. He described how a drunkard had beaten his wife and came to his climax with, 'Any man who would kick a woman ought to be kicked out of the universe!'

"He emphasized his words with a vigorous thrust of one foot, whereat every person on the stage, intensely wrought up by the orator, likewise kicked outward as did Gough."—Kansas City Journal.

How They Fight Fire in Turkey.

This is the method of fighting fire in Turkey. In the center of Constantinople a high watchtower has been erected. When the man in the tower sees a blaze the alarm is sounded and the firemen are called to their posts. If they have horses they proceed very leisurely to hitch them to the engines or carts and trot to the fire, but in most cases they have no horses, and the men drag the engines through the streets at a walk. They do not hurry to attach the hose to the hydrant. The captain first finds the owner of the building that is in danger of destruction and finds out how much he will pay to have the fire put out. If the blaze is beyond control the captain approaches the owners of surrounding property and bargains with them for their protection, and of course they pay him liberally.—New York Post.

A Sickly Diary.

"Look here, old chap, I'll give you a valuable tip," said the experienced married man to the prospective bridegroom. "Don't let your wife keep a diary on the honeymoon. My wife did that, and now whenever we quarrel she brings it out and reads some of the idiotic things I said to her then."

A Serious Joke.

"What has happened to Mr. White, who used to be such a joker?"

"Well, he proposed to his present wife as a joke. She accepted him, and he has given up making jokes ever since."—Dorfbarbier.

BEWARE OF CONSTIPATION

It is the first or primal cause of many of our diseases. St. Joseph Liver Regulator is an ideal treatment for constipation. It acts in a natural and easy manner (not by violent purging) and gently loosens the bowels thus forestalling the long train of evils which result from the clogging of the system with offensive refuse. This remedy is a wonderful stimulator of liver, stomach and bowels, inducing and maintaining healthy, natural action. Price liquid 50c. a bottle; powder 25c a box, five boxes one dollar.

The All Alabama Convention under auspices of Alabama Commercial and Industrial Association, will be held at Montgomery, Nov. 29th and 30th, 1910.

This Convention is held for the purpose of formulating a plan for advertising the resources of Alabama and for promoting and protecting the business interest of the State.

Commercial bodies, mayors of cities and towns, and judges of probate are requested to appoint delegats. An invitation is extended to every man who desire to help build the State.

Please forward names of those who attend to Bruce Kennedy, General Secretary Business Men's League, Montgomery, Ala.

BIRMINGHAM LEDGER'S GREAT ACCOMPLISHMENT

Publishes largest Advertisement ever printed by any newspaper in Alabama—twenty pages of solid matter for Loveman, Joseph & Loeb.

A twenty-page advertisement in The Birmingham Ledger Monday Was the part played by Loveman Joseph & Leob in the celebration of Birmingham's census jubilee held in that city the first part of the week. This is the largest single advertisement ever published by an Alabama concern in an Alabama newspaper and is noteworthy in that it marks a new accomplishment both for The Birmingham Ledger and for the great store of Loveman, Joseph & Loeb. It was fitting too, that Loveman, Joseph & Loeb, standing as it does among the first of the great mercantile establishments of the south. should select as the medium to carry its mammoth advertisement The Birmingham Ledger which during the past decade, has leaped to newspaper. Birmingham is proud of her Loveman, Joseph & Loeb and her Birmingham Ledger, just as the whole state of Alabama is proud of Birmingham.

SNAPSHOTS AT CELEBRITIES

Ben W. Hooper, Governor Elect of Tennessee.

From street waif to governor's chair is the romantic career of Benjamin W. Hooper, recently elected chief executive of the state of Tennessee. The governor elect is a Republican, and his election is due to the support given his candidacy by the Independent Democrats opposed to Governor Malcolm R. Patterson. For the first time in three decades a Republican has beaten a Democrat for the highest post in the gift of the state. Governor Elect Hooper's opponent was the redoubtable "Fiddling Bob" Taylor, who suffered his initial defeat at the hands of his fellow citizens.

The newly elected governor is a native of Newport, Tenn., where he was born forty years ago. When a child of six or seven he was picked up on the streets of Knoxville and sent to an orphan asylum. Several years later he was adopted by Dr. Hooper of Newport, and there he grew up and was educated. He studied law, was admitted to the bar and has since practiced his profession with success. His first entrance into politics was as a member of the state legislature, where his talents as a leader won recognition. After the Spanish war, in which he served as captain of infantry, he was appointed United States district attorney.

De Forest Gets Early Start.

The career of Lee De Forest in wireless telegraphy dates back to a thesis on the Hertzian waves which he wrote in college. He was the son of a minister at Council Bluffs and went to Yale less than sixteen years ago. He had always been an experimenter in electricity and had equipped his room at home with electric lights and bells. He entered the scientific school at Yale and in his third year wrote the thesis to qualify for a degree of doctor of philosophy. As Hertzian waves are the medium of wireless communication, his attention was there and then turned to practical telegraphy without wires. Marconi had just been experimenting, but De Forest experimented along independent lines.

President Diaz of Mexico.

For the eighth time General Porfirio Diaz, at the age of eighty, has taken the oath of office as president of the republic of Mexico. In November, 1876, Diaz became provisional president and the following spring was declared constitutional head of the government. Manuel Gonzales succeeded Diaz in 1880, but things in Mexico went wrong under his control, and on Dec. 1, 1884, General Diaz was reinstated in the presidency by an overwhelming majority. Since that time he has retained the office.

PORFIRIO DIAZ.

When Diaz first grasped the reins of government Mexico was in a sorry condition. He found a disorganized state, exhausted by war, revolution, sectionalism and the reign of Maximilian. Since his advent Mexico knows what justice, liberty and education mean. Foreign capital has been welcomed and has built railroads, telegraphs, telephones and factories.

A Realist on Hope.

William Dean Howells, discussing realism at one of his Sunday afternoons in New York, let fall a neat epigram on hope.

"Hope," said the famous novelist, "is not really an angel in a diaphanous robe of white, but only the wisp of hay held before a donkey's nose to make him go."

Best Kind of Potato.

Investigation into the nutritive values of the red, white, yellow and violet varieties of potatoes shows that the violet fleshed potatoes stand highest.

Live Stock Notes.

Be careful not to overheat mares that are sucking colts.

A team that works in the field all week should be allowed to rest on Sunday.

The farmer who has not time to fuss with a young colt had better go into some other business.

Many of the difficulties experienced in handling the spring litters may be avoided if the brood sows are properly fed and cared for in the winter.

The value of rape as a food for calves is not well understood. If it were much more would be sown.

Make friends with your horses. They will enjoy your sociability as well as you, will; Sensible horses like to be talked to by people.

All sheep love alfalfa, either green or dry. The very nature of the animal makes alfalfa a suitable food for it. Sheep need foods rich in protein.

Raw cabbage makes an excellent feed for cattle, but it cannot be safely fed to horses. Mangels, carrots, beets and turnips will, however, be found good for both horses and cattle if fed raw. They are named here in order of their value.

THE BRIDGE FIGHT.

A Quarrel Between Two Ends of a Town.

By WILLIAM ALFRED COREY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"I tell ye Dick's not been bought off! It's a baseless slander that had better not be repeated in my hearin'!" William Shapiro, representative farmer of the "north side," was proud of his son Richard and religiously jealous of his honor.

"Well, neighbor," said Hanson, putting his foot on the hub of Shapiro's wagon, "I'm only tellin' ye what's bein' whispered around. I don't want ye to think, neighbor, that I suspect Dick. Fer from it. But it's unfortunate jest at this time, with the bond election only a week off an' us a-tryin' to git up a debate with them side-steppin' south siders, to have our best speaker disappear without a clear explanation. Ye réally can't blame people fer talkin'. An' then he's with them lawyers an' politicians over there in Emporium, ye know, an' it's like one good tater in with a sack o' rotten ones. What did Dick say anyway?"

"He simply said he was goin' down to St. Louis on business fer the firm he's studyin' law with."

"Well," concluded Hanson, "sorry he can't be here to rip 'em up the back in that debate. Ye'll have to take Dick's place, won't ye, neighbor?"

"Reckon I will," assented Shapiro, with a complacent air—"that is, if we can git 'em in a corner an' make 'em debate at all. I'm goin' over to the south side today, an' I'm goin' to make 'em show their hand 'fore I git back. Can't ye go 'long, Hanson, an' back me up?"

"Can't today, Neighbor Shapiro, but hope ye'll land 'em fer a debate, an' I'll be on hand to yell fer our side," promised Hanson, looking after his neighbor as the latter touched his lead mare with the whip and started on.

"We'll give 'em the best we've got in stock!" Shapiro shouted back.

In a half hour he arrived at the Walkarusa river, the stream which flowed from west to east, dividing Walkarusa county into two warring sections, a small but aggressive community on the north side, but with the bulk of the wealth and population on the south side.

Farmer Shapiro stopped at the approach to the ferry and pulled the cord depending from the big bell suspended from an overhanging treetop. But the clangor of the bell, speeding across the turgid stream, attracted no attention on the other side. No ferryman showed himself.

"Sleepin' off last night's drunk, like's not," the north side farmer muttered to himself disgustedly.

Farmer Shapiro stood his tall form up in his wagon and tugged nervously at his gray brown beard as he gazed across the river and then suddenly gave the signal bell cord another savage pull. This finally brought into view the slouching figure of a man, who leisurely shipped the anchor line, started the little gasoline engine and headed the ferryboat across the river.

Passing the south side creamery two hours later, Shapiro met County Supervisors Wilkins and McHenry.

"How about that debate, gents?" he queried. "Suppose ye got our challenge. We're loaded for bear an' south side politicians, an' we're anxious fer a go."

"Yes, we got the challenge," admitted Wilkins, "but we're shy of good speakers. Can't seem to find anybody to take our side."

"Look here, Wilkins," said Shapiro warmly, "if you fellers have got legitimate arguments agin that bridge the voters are entitled to hear 'em. An' if ye ain't they're entitled to know that. Now, if the gum shoe method's yer game we're goin' to smoke ye out. It's either debate or publicity of another kind. Either ye'll debate with us in the open or we'll post the fact that ye didn't dare to meet us all over the county. This is Monday. The election's a week from termorrer. Plenty o' time to make all arsangements an' pull the debate off Saturday night. It's up to you."

"Keep cool, Shapiro," said Supervisor Wilkins. "We've got nothin' up our sleeves. If the voters o' the south side want to build a bridge fer the special benefit o' the north side nobody's going to prevent 'em sayin' so next Tuesday week, an' "—

"Fer the benefit o' the north side!" broke in Shapiro, getting red in the face. "We north siders have been a-helpin'."

"Oh, well," in turn interrupted Wilkins, "no use o' any argyment now, Mr. Shapiro, an' if we can find a good speaker to"—

"That puts me in mind," interposed Supervisor McHenry, "that there's a travelin' man over to Mrs. Williams' boardin' house that told me this mornin' that he'd present our side if we wanted him to. He's a-travelin' fer some trust company, examinin' applications fer loans, I believe. And they say he hails from Cherokee county an' has been in the legislature from that county, so he ought to be a good spotter."

"Good!" exclaimed Wilkins. "We'll see him, Mr. Shapiro, an' let ye know if arrangements can be made. Suppose yer son Dick 'll talk fer your side."

Shapiro told them of the impossibility of Dick's appearance, for which he was very sorry, and that he himself would have to represent the north siders.

The north side farmer drove home much elated. "The debate's a-comin' off," he told Hanson. "They're a-goin' to git some travelin' feller that's been to the legislater from Cherokee county to speak fer 'em. But I ain't afraid o' him. He may be a glib talker an' all that, but he hain't got the argyments, an' them's what counts in a debate."

"Say, ain't it a pity Dick ain't here?" regretted Hanson. "He'd make a meal off that legislater feller."

"I ain't sure but Dick 'll turn up yet in time fer the exercises," said the elder Shapiro hopefully, "but I'll be loaded to the muzzle in case he don't."

The news of the proposed debate spread quickly, and appearances pointed to an enormous attendance. A canvas covered grand stand lighted by electricity was erected, benches provided and all details arranged. It was plain from the public interest in the event that the fate of the bridge bonds would be largely influenced thereby.

Saturday night came, but Dick, like one of Napoleon's generals on a certain occasion, did not come. Something had detained him, and the responsibility of the coming debate was upon his father. The ferryman was kept busy that afternoon carrying north siders across the river. They were taking no chances. They, the whole population of them, went early to occupy front seats and shout for their side.

Farmer Shapiro, not to appear unfriendly, met his opponent to be, a smooth, professional looking man with gray hair and beard, at his hotel, and arm in arm they walked down to the mass meeting when the hour arrived.

The resolution to be debated was, "Resolved, That bonds in the amount of $100,000 should be voted by Walkarusa county for the building of a bridge across the Walkarusa river at the point known as Banning's crossing."

William Shapiro as the affirmative speaker made the opening address, his allotted time being forty-five minutes. He spoke with directness and force if not with rhetorical polish, reciting the facts that every north sider knew by heart. The "south" had the railroad, the county seat, the high school and nearly everything else desirable, toward all of which the "north" had contributed in various ways, while the "north" had nothing. In asking for the bridge they were merely asking for what was their own by right.

The speech was frequently interrupted by applause, and at the close the whole north side contingent arose and yelled in chorus for five minutes.

"The distinguished gentleman from Cherokee will now address you," pompously announced the chairman, and amid deep silence the smooth, gray bearded stranger arose.

He spoke in a low voice and with ease, but without enthusiasm. He consumed twenty minutes of his time in generalities before coming to the matter at issue at all. He praised the county, its soil, its people, its schools. He talked—merely talked—until an impatient south sider called out, "Waal, how about the bridge bonds?"

But the interruption only made the matters worse for the south side, for the first "point" the "gentleman from Cherokee" made was that to build the bridge would deprive "a worthy poor man"—the ferryman—of his means of livelihood.

This raised a howl of laughter from the north siders and disgusted the south side politicians, for every resident of the county knew Hiram Banning for a worthless drunkard.

In vain the chairman called for order and admonished the meeting to give respectful attention to "the gentleman from Cherokee." But the crowd from both north and south had taken the measure of "the gentleman from Cherokee," and, though the north siders were delighted, the whole mass meeting voted him a sore quantity as a speaker. He tried to flounder on for a few minutes, but soon sat down after occupying but thirty of his forty-five minutes.

Shapiro then spoke during his closing twenty minutes, and the occasion became a north side demonstration and a very biting south side frost. The distinguished statesman from Cherokee did not come to the bat at all for his closing speech, and the meeting adjourneed, the nogth siders going home triumphant.

The following Tuesday, true to his promise, Dick Shapiro returned in time to vote for the bonds, which carried by a safe majority. And the next morning, calling his father into his room and opening a suit case, Dick showed him a theatrical "makeup" and said: "Father, I am 'the distinguished gentlemah from Cherokee.' I did not make much of a speech for the south side, but I let down the bars for you and the north side."

CONAN DOYLE WAS LATE.

The Lonely Schwarenbach Inn and a Literary Coincidence.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle once walked over the Gemmi. He was much impressed by the desolate appearance of the lonely looking Schwarenbach inn. Here, it seemed to him, was an ideal scene in which a novelist might locate a story of mystery and crime.

He proceeded to invent a story of mystery and crime suitable to the creepy environment. It was a story of murder—the murder of a long lost son just home from the wars by his own father, the needy innkeeper, who did not recognize him until after the deed was done, but had resolved to kill and rob the first lonely stranger that passed that way with money in his pocket.

"The very thing," thought Sir Arthur, and he went down the hill cheerfully revolving the morbid conception in his mind. Then a strange thing happened.

After dinner, in the hotel at Leukerbad, he picked up a volume of Maupassant's short stories and he found that the French author had not only been to the Schwarenbach inn before him, but had actually located there a story practically identical with the one which he himself had just devised.—Travel and Exploration.

Prompt Punishment of a Liar.

Years ago the courthouse in San Francisco fronted the old Plaza. A trial was in progress, and counsel for the defendant was cross examining the plaintiff. An earthquake shook the chandeliers and dislodged some of the ceiling. Judge, jurors, witnesses and spectators rushed for the door; but, finding that the seismic disturbance was over, they returned.

"You can proceed with the cross examination of the witness," said the judge.

"Pardon me, your honor," said counsel for the defendant, "but after the late exhibition of the displeasure of the Almighty at the lies this witness was telling I do not care to further invoke divine wrath. I will ask him no more questions."—Los Angeles Times.

THE PRINCE WINKED.

And Miss Alcott Was at the Other End of the Flirtation.

It seems an awful thing, but here is the circumstance on record that Louisa M. Alcott, the sainted author of "Little Women," once publicly flirted with Edward VII. The fact comes out in Mrs. Belle Mose's book, "Louisa May Alcott, Dreamer and Worker." There is a passage in the book which contains Miss Alcott's personal account of the incident. It refers to the time when the late king, then Prince of Wales, made his famous visit to this country.

"I went to Boston," Miss Alcott relates, "and I saw the Prince of Wales trot over the common with his train at review—a yellow haired laddie, very like his mother. Fanny W. and I nodded and waved as he passed and he openly winked his boyish eye at us, for Fanny with her yellow curls and wild waving looked rather rowdy, and the poor little prince wanted some fun. We laughed and thought that we had been more distinguished by the saucy wink than by a stately bow. Boys are always jolly—even princes."

By the way, this incident occurred in 1860, when the Prince of Wales was nineteen years old and consequently quite a broth of a boy, and when Miss Alcott—we blush to record it—was twenty-eight.—New York Mail.

An Essay on Boyhood.

The green corn season is about ended. Corn was good this year. But do you remember when you had to eat corn from the cob and you had a loose tooth in front?

It put you in a terrible position. Any other fellow could finish a cob of corn in three minutes. You couldn't do it in less than ten, because you had to save that tooth. It was a thing to show to the other kids. Don't you remember?

If it came out in the corn you'd have to leave a rank of grains all around the cob to mark its missing place.

Oh, that tooth! If it came out you could no longer gather the other fellows around you and wiggle it and make them jealous. But it couldn't last forever. You were told that if you kept your tongue out of the hole a gold tooth would grow there. Could you? You couldn't. And you couldn't eat corn as well as you used to. All you could do was to be glad that you didn't lose all your upper teeth at once. You couldn't have eaten a bite of corn that way. Nature is kind—kinder than we think.—Cleveland Leader.

[illegible] the stub is more than two [illegible] inches in diameter place a scion on [illegible] each edge of the cleft, so that the in[illegible] bark of the scion and of the stock [illegible] coincide. Remove the grafting [illegible]. When the stub springs back it [illegible] will hold the scions firmly in place. [illegible] The cleft surfaces should be well [illegible] covered with grafting wax to prevent [illegible] evaporation. Let the wax cover the [illegible] inner bark below where the scion [illegible] is inserted, as well as the top of the [illegible] stock. When the stub is one inch or [illegible] more in diameter but one scion should be in[illegible]serted. In the second season one of [illegible] the branches should be removed if [illegible] both scions grow. If both were al[illegible]lowed to grow a fork would be form[illegible]ed which would weaken the tree. The [illegible] wax should be wrapped in moist [illegible] cloth to prevent them from drying [illegible] out. Cleft grafting is successfully [illegible] done in the spring when the buds are [illegible] starting. It is most successful on [illegible] warm days, free from cold or [illegible] winds.

Farm Machinery Abroad.

[illegible] scarcity of labor in many countries [illegible] is causing the farmers to adopt labor [illegible] saving machinery, according to the bu[illegible] of manufactures. A bulletin it [illegible] issued shows that nearly $30,000,[illegible] worth of agricultural machinery [illegible] was exported from this country in the [illegible] year recently ended, Russia and [illegible] Canada being the best markets.

[illegible] property note from the Sedg[illegible] (Kan.) Pantagraph: "It takes [illegible] four bushels of alfalfa seed to [illegible] a new tire for the auto."

Dairy Doings.

[illegible] pasture is the cheapest cow [illegible] and green soiling crops are next.

[illegible] expect a dairy cow to give [illegible] results on half rations. [illegible] half fed cow never pays.

[illegible] the dairy farmer it should not [illegible] question of building one silo, but [illegible] one or not two should be built.

[illegible] mixture of salt, two parts, and [illegible] one part, should be put in the [illegible] box at least once each week. [illegible] cows should be rich in charcoal.

[illegible] cows require a great deal of [illegible] and cannot do their best [illegible] without it.

[illegible] Promiscuous cross breeding never [illegible] gives desirable results. It is only [illegible] inherent clinging to the characteristics of any of the dairy breeds [illegible] that careful breeding to fix those [illegible] characteristics that the herd is mate[illegible]rially built up.

[illegible] Heat oppose the cow's appetite. [illegible] Knows what it takes to make a [illegible] good ration better than any feeder[illegible]. If she does not like [illegible] ground corn give oats and corn. If [illegible] kind of fodder by all means try [illegible] clover hay.

[illegible] A thermometer should be used [illegible] in churning and the temperature [illegible] given is from 55 to 60 degrees. [illegible] Conditions are favorable the butter [illegible] will be granular and should require [illegible] more than from twenty to thirty [illegible] minutes for churning.

HOW TO DOSE A COW.

Directions For Administering Medicine to the Animal.

The bottle most commonly employed, and the best glass bottle as regards shape and strength, is a quart champagne, but a better appliance still is the tin drenching bottle sold by the agricultural supply stores. It cannot be broken and is provided with an air hole which secures a steady and even flow of medicine from the neck.

In administering the dose the common practice is to straighten and slightly elevate the head by grasping the nose with the forefinger and thumb of the left hand, but this is calculated to interfere with respiration and is unnecessary except in the case of very rough animals, which are certainly rendered more amenable to reason by this grasping of the muzzle.

A much better plan with the quiet animal is for the person giving the medicine to stand with his back against the right shoulder of the cow, slightly fix the head to the right and, passing the left arm over the face, place the hand in the left side of the mouth with the fingers against the palate, and give the dose with the bottle held in the right hand, introducing only the nozzle and allowing the contents to run out with a continuous steady flow.

Where an assistant is necessary to the holding of the animal he should stand on the left side and grasp both horns, or if the beast is very unruly take the right horn in the right hand and grasp the nasal septum firmly with the left, turning the head in the direction of the administrator on the right side of the animal and avoiding too much elevation.

With very rough or wild cattle an instrument for grasping the nasal septum, called "bulldogs," is employed, but a couple of determined men can generally give the drink while this instrument is being fixed. Generally what may be called the quiet method is the easiest and most expeditious, and the expert manipulator rarely needs any assistance in the dosing.—American Cultivator.

> Economy demands that we save everything that has been produced if it has any value as a food for man or animals. The fact that it is not salable need not deter us. Many products that are not salable have utility on the farm.

Easy Way of Watering Chicks.

It is generally very hard to keep enough water in small pans for the little chicks to drink. If a large pan is used they are apt to fall in and drown. So I have invented this drinking vessel, which I find most useful. Take milk crocks, rather shallow wooden buckets or anything that is smaller toward the bottom than at the top. Then make a lid or "float" of pine board that will go down about halfway in the vessel when empty. Bore the lid full of holes and by its floating on the top the chicks can hop on to it and drink. As the water is consumed the "float" settles deeper in the vessel, and if enough chicks should get on it and sink it any the lid wouldn't go down deep enough to drown any of them.—Farm and Fireside.

> Begin now to lay plans for a better rotation of crops next year.

Ouida Out of Sorts.

Ouida in a decidedly pessimistic mood appears in Lady Dorothy Nevill's reminiscences. In 1887 Ouida sent to Lady Dorothy a card bearing the following "jubilee epitaph:"

Full half a century of measures small,
Weak wits, weak words, weak wars, and that is all.

It is amazing that Ouida could even for a moment have lapsed into such dull snappishness. Lady Dorothy's ascription of the foolish couplet to "feelings of depression" is doubtless just.—New York Tribune.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson IX.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 27, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xxvi, 57-68. Memory Verse, 64—Golden Text, I Pet. ii, 23—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

A great awe should be upon us as we read or write or think upon these things. Behold the Son of God yielding Himself for our sakes to sinful men. See the hatred of men to God and the proof that the carnal mind is enmity against God. As they came to take Him in the garden He went to meet them, saying, "Whom seek ye?" To their reply "Jesus of Nazareth" He said "I am," and they went backward and fell to the ground. He allowed them to rise, to approach Him again and to take Him and bind him and lead Him away to Annas and then to Caiaphas. All the disciples forsook Him and fled, but a young man followed, having just a linen cloth about his naked body, which he left in the hands of his pursuers as they tried to lay hold of him, and he fled naked. We shall have to ask Mark who that young man was, as he alone records it (Mark xiv. 51, 52). It was an opportunity of fellowship with Jesus which he, like the others, missed. Simon Peter and John returned and followed Jesus, John going in to the palace of the high priest, for he was known to him, but Peter remaining without until John spoke to the maid that kept the door and brought in Peter. Then he sat with the servants and warmed himself at their fire. But we must leave his story till next week.

In reply to the high priest's question as to Jesus' doctrine He replied "In secret have I said nothing; * * * ask them which heard me" (John xviii. 15-24). They brought many false witnesses to testify against Jesus, but none of them agreed in their testimony, not even the two of verse 60. See Mark xiv. 56-59. To the high priest's question, "Answerest thou nothing?" Jesus held His peace, for there was nothing to reply to. In Ps. xxxv. 11, it is written, "False witnesses did rise up; they laid to my charge things that I knew not." Unless you have been similarly ill treated you cannot imagine how hard it is to put in practice Ps. xxxviii. 13, "I as a deaf man heard not, and I was as a dumb man that openeth not his mouth."

When the high priest said, "I adjure thee by the living God that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God" (verse 63), then Jesus said, "I am, and ye shall see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power and coming in the clouds of heaven" (Mark xiv, 62, with verse 64). Then they judged Him guilty of blasphemy and condemned Him to die. But it was the truth that He spake, and they shall yet see it, and if they did not repent before they died they shall have to hear His "Depart from me, ye cursed." After they judged Him guilty of death they mocked Him, blindfolded Him, struck Him on the face, spit in His face and said, "Prophesy unto us, thou Christ, who is he that smote thee." Even the servants smote Him with the palms of their hands (Mark xiv, 65). When morning was come they bound Him and led Him away and delivered Him to Pontius Pilate, the governor, that he might have Him put to death, their accusation being that he was a malefactor. The result of Pilate's examination of Him was a three or four fold testimony that he found no fault in Him and, according to the harmony, a sevenfold attempt to release Him. Pilate's wife also sent him a message saying, "Have thou nothing to do with that just man, for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of Him." When Pilate learned that He was of Galilee, which was under Herod's jurisdiction, he sent Him to Herod, hoping thus to be rid of this difficult and perplexing case. But as Jesus answered Herod nothing Herod with his men of war set Him at naught and mocked Him and arrayed Him in a gorgeous robe and sent Him again to Pilate (Luke xxiii, 8-12). There was no imprisonment; there was no semblance of a fair trial. It was not unlike some of our modern cases of lynching, except that it had seemingly the sanction of both church and state.

But this man was God, suffering all this and all that followed for me and leaving all His redeemed an example that we should follow in His steps; who did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth; who when He was reviled reviled not again; when He suffered He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously (I Pet. ii, 21-23). "He was oppressed, and He was afflicted, yet He opened not His mouth. He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He openeth not his mouth" (Isa. liii, 7). Being redeemed by His great sacrifice, it is our privilege to suffer with Him, to fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in our flesh for His body's sake, which is the church (Rom. viii, 17; Col. i, 24), manifesting by His grace the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price (I Pet. iii, 4). Peter speaks of himself as a witness of the sufferings of Christ (I Pet. v, 1), and he who once rebelled at the thought of Christ suffering tells us to rejoice if we are partakers of His sufferings (I Pet. iv, 12, 13).

The Simple Life

has for its basis PERFECT HEALTH. The liver, brain, the heaving stomach, the bodily organs exercising in harmony, are the first essentials of a Simple Life.

A LIFE OF PEACE AND SATISFACTION.

No one can know the pure delight of simple living whose nervous system is kept in a state of tension by Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Biliousness and other diseases due to inaction of the liver.

The Simple Way to seek the Simple Life is to seek the remedy for these conditions. This remedy has been found in our great product—

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

One of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

Here we are in December, the last month of the year, and but three more weeks to Christmas, that blessed time when all is peace and good will. Everyone contemplates a good time, this has been a prosperous year and the prospects are bright in the extreme.

But three more weeks and the several contestants in THE BANNER contest will have decided among themselves the winners. As the time draws near interest increases and the friend, of the contestants are vigorously at work to back out their favorites. Friends of the churches are bestirring themselves to see which will secure the first prize and a friendly rivalry is going on for that honor.

Among the young ladies the race for the diamond ring is intensely occupying their thoughts and much excitement is created by the requests of their friends for votes, and it is rather astonishing how the figures are creeping upwards.

The Business Scholarship seems to be a one sided race, but it remains to be seen who is going to capture it.

The boys are having a fine time to see which will get the Bicycle and are hustling around for votes.

Here's wishing good luck to all the contestants.

Thorsby

P. K. Villadsen is building two modern cottages on his lots near his home, that have been used several years as a base ball park.

Mr. T. W. Robinson and Mr. J. L. Fees are each building a substantial addition to their home.

Mr. Guy H. Gerald has rented his house to Miss Tompkins, of Fruit City, who comes to educate her nephew in Tohrsby Institute. Mr. Gerald and family are now boarding at Jemison, he having business there that requires attention a part of each day in connection with the new Bank soon to be opened at Jemison.

Our merchants are getting in their stocks of Holiday Goods preparatory to getting a share in the general prosperity that is abroad, and also seeking to foster the Christmas spirit of giving.

The Ladies Guild, of Thorsby, are busy making preparations for their annual Bazaar, which will be held this year in the building formerly occupied by the Lucas meat market, opening at two p.m. on Friday Dec. 9th. and continuing all next day and evening. An Oyster Supper will be served from 6 to 9 p.m. on Saturday the 10th. From the number of ladies interested and the enthusiasm they are putting in to it, the prospect is good for the most attractive and successful Bazaar they have ever held.

Thorsby Institute has recently received several very substantial donations from friends at the north, where they have a financial agent in the field. This School is now in its fifth year, the most prosperous since it was started, but is of no benefit whatever to the young people of Chilton county who are not availing themselves of the opportunity offered to secure an education.

The Ladies Guild, of Thorsby, are busy making preparations for their annual Bazaar, which will be held this year in the building formerly occupied by the Lucas meat market, opening at two p.m. on Friday Dec. 9th. and continuing all the day and evening. An Oyster Supper will be served from 6 to 8 p.m. on Saturday the 10th. From the number of ladies interested and the enthusiasm they are putting into it, the prospect is good for the most attractive and successful Bazaar they have ever held.

Thorsby Institute has recently received several very substantial donations from friends at the north, where they have a financial interest in the field. This School is now in its fifth year, the most prosperous since it was started, but is of no benefit whatever to the young people of Chilton county who are not availing themselves of the opportunity offered to secure an education.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositer. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

Editor Banner, Enclosed, you will find 75 cents a one years subscription to your paper, which I find that I sometimes need in order to get election news unless it happens to go in favor of the Rep.

Well, I havnt any criticism for Mr. Reynolds for I believe he made a good Judge but believe that Mr. Deason will make even a better one, because he possesses qualifications which his opponent unfortunately does not possess, and will I believe under all circumstances protect the interests of the grand old county which conferred this honor upon him.

But say, we are one D. ahead of you. We went both Dem and Dry

I made the remark to a friend after we went D. D. that if old Chilton would go Deason and Dem. I would be politically satisfied. So I must say Amen.

Mr. Editor. You may publish this if you will, and if any of the old Alabamians should ever land in Shawnee, Okla. Just call at 7 W. Farrall ave. and you will find a welcome there.

Evergreen.

Editor Banner. Please allow me a space in your paper to say a few words in regard to our community. Health is fine at present. Mr. Willis Williams, of Tallapoosa, has been visiting relatives in this community. We are glad to know, after a few weeks stand still, we reorganized our Invincible Literary Society, Friday after noon. We hope to do better work in the future than in the past. The school at this place is progressing fine under the able management of Prof. R. L. Duffey. He is a fine teacher. I think if we will all work with him we will accomplish great good by going to school. We should all strive for an education. We can see the responsibility that rests upon us as girls and boys, for our fathers and mothers are making a great sacrifice to give us an education. We are getting in better order for work in our Sunday-school. We are trying to get the school organized. One class was organized Sunday, and I heard the secretary of this class say he was going to get every member of his class to answer present with a verse of scripture every Sunday. He is going to work to make his class better. I think the organized method is a good one. This boy has not been attending regular but we hope he will in the future. We should all go to Sunday-school, that is the place for us, and when we are there go up to the front and help carry on the work, for the boys and girls of to-day are to be the men and women of to-morrow. Are we going to stay at home now and not learn how. I say, come on, there is work to be done. "Every duty we omit obscures some truth we should have known." If we miss a sunday we are sure to miss that truth. "Why stand ye here, there is work in the vineyard." Arise go forth wishing the Banner and its many readers much success. S S. M.

24 GIRLS DEAD IN FACTORY FIRE

Horror Occurs in Box Factory in New Jersey.

FIFTY SENT TO HOSPITALS

Flames Spread With Rush and the Trapped Girls Began to Leap From Windows of Factory—Some Were Caught in Life Nets.

In ten minutes twenty-four girls were burned alive in Newark, N. J., or crushed to death on the pavement in leaping from the windows and fire escapes of the four-story brick paper box factory at Orange and High streets. Sixteen of the twenty-four bodies recovered have been identified and six girls are still missing. They may be among the unidentified or they may be in the ruins.

Fifty were taken to hospitals, two of whom may die. Among the injured is Joseph E. Sloane, deputy fire chief, who was caught by the falling wall and buried in brick and rubbish. He is badly hurt, but may recover.

The rush of flames was so incredibly swift and threw such unreasoning terror into the huddled working girls on the top story, that the body of one was found still seated on a chair-d stool beside the machine at which she had been busy when the first cry of "Fire" petrified her with fright.

The building was extremely inflammable and the first gush of flames cut off all possible escape by the stairways. The elevators made one trip, but took down no passengers. The only exit was by two narrow fire escapes, the lower platform of which was twenty-five feet from the street. Into these overcrowded and steep lanes, scorched with heat from lower windows, poured forward a mob of women, blind with panic, driven by the fire and the others behind them.

A net had been spread beneath the windows and the girls began to jump "like rats out of a burning bin" was the way a fireman described the pell mell descent.

QUIET IN MEXICO.

Government Now Has Situation Well In Hand.

There have been no developments in the revolutionary situation and quiet reigns throughout the republic of Mexico.

General Lauro Villara, commanding the forces along the Mexican border, has received advices covering every point from Matamoras to Ciudad Porfirio Diaz.

On the American side, where detachments of soldiers are on duty from Brownsville to Eagle Pass, there are no developments.

General Villara ran down the report that a battle had occurred in the neighborhood of Eagle Pass and that Francisco I. Madero had been wounded. The Mexican officer communicated with Colonel Penn at Ciudad Porfirio Diaz and the colonel declared the story unfounded. He said no trace of Madero had been found.

Captain J. H. Rogers, of the Texas Rangers, returned from Minra, Texas, and reports tranquillity in that vicinity. He states that any force of revolutionists which might have existed in that neighborhood have either taken to the brush or have crossed the river into Mexico.

The ranger force of Captain Rogers, together with the force of the United States marshal and the United States army, still remain on the scene in order to prevent any violation of the neutrality laws.

GREAT PROPERTY LOSS.

New York Fires Cause Loss of $150,000—People in Panic.

Fires in New York Sunday drove hundreds of persons panic-stricken into the streets and caused property damage approximating $150,000. There were no casualties.

Fire destroyed the Throop avenue Presbyterian church, in Brooklyn, and caused a panic in the aristocratic neighborhood, where apartment dwellers rushed into the streets by hundreds. Upwards of $125,000 damage resulted.

Eight two-story frame dwellings in a row in the Bronx were burned, the blaze spreading so rapidly that hundreds of panic-stricken people were compelled to flee in their night clothes.

TURKEY DONE CAUSED DEATH.

Fatal Thanksgiving Dinner in a Brooklyn Home.

Gertrude Goldstein, a 10-year-old Brooklyn girl, is dead in her home as the result of swallowing a turkey bone with her Thanksgiving day dinner.

The bone lodged in her oesophagus and could not be extricated. Her violent coughing merely stirred the bone and its sharp end finally pierced the wall of the oesophagus causing great pain. The girl's mother, to allay her suffering, gave her some tea to drink, but the beverage leaked through the aperture in the gullet and trickled down into the lung. The child became unconscious almost at once and died without having regained consciousness.

WINS FEDERATION.

Combined Labor Interests to Meet in Atlanta, Ga.

The American Federation of Labor closed its thirteenth annual convention at St. Louis by choosing Atlanta, Ga., as its meeting place for next year.

The entire list of officers, including President Samuel Gompers, Secretary Frank Morrison and Treasurer John B. Lennon, were re-elected.

The contest between Atlanta, Washington and Rochester, N. Y., for the next year's meeting was the feature of the final afternoon's proceedings. Delegations representing the three cities made vigorous fights on the floor, but the southern city won with a vote of 8,739, against 5,337 for Rochester, and 265 for Washington.

Fraternal delegates to the British Trades' Union Congress were chosen in William B. MacFarland (carpenter), of Buffalo, and Daniel J. Tobin (teamsters), of Boston; William J. Tracey (plumbers), of Philadelphia, was elected fraternal delegate to the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress, while Vice President James Duncan was selected as the federation's delegate to the International Labor Secretariat, to be held at Budapest in August, 1911.

WAR AGAINST THE ENEMY OF COTTON

Boll Weevil Conference Held In Atlanta.

DECISIVE ACTION IS TAKEN

Approach of the Boll Weevil on Georgia Cotton Lands Has Caused the Planters and Those Interested in Cotton Growing to Bestir Themselves.

The boll weevil conference came to an end in Atlanta on Wednesday.

For two days representative farmers, cotton mill men, cotton oil men, bankers and fertilizer men from all sections of the state listened to talks by experts as to what Georgia may expect from the invasion of the boll weevil in 1912, and at the close these men turned homeward fully realizing the gravity of the situation and equally determined to do all in their power to prepare for the coming of cotton's worst enemy.

The congress, it is believed by many, will mark the beginning of a new era in Georgia, an era of better, more intensified and more intelligent farming than the state has ever before known.

Throughout the entire two days the fact was stressed that intensified farming is the only way to successfully fight the boll weevil.

Heretofore better crops have been the only incentive offered, but now while the reward is the same, a penalty of total loss of the cotton crop is threatened unless this intensification in farming methods is adhered to. This the farmers present at the conference heard from the lips of almost every speaker that mounted the platform, and it is believed that the truth was driven home as it has never been before.

If this is the case, say the promoters of the conference, the gathering has been gloriously worth while, were the boll weevil not to be considered at all.

NEGROES MURDERED.

Bodies of Two Boys Found In Carolina Swamps.

Guy Rogers and Prentiss Moore, aged 15 and 11, respectively, went hunting Thanksgiving day in the swamps of the Pee Dee river, near Bennettsville, S. C., and later their bodies were found in a ditch near their buggy. They had been murdered.

Circuit court was adjourned and practically the entire population of Bennettsville engaged in search for the assailants of the lads.

Rogers was the son of the county treasurer.

PUBLIC SWINDLED OUT OF MILLIONS

Sale of Bogus Stocks Lodged Against Firms.

FRAUDULENT USE OF MAILS

In Raids So Important That Postmaster General Hitchcock Took Charge in Person. Postal Inspectors Fell on Two Big N. Y. Concerns and Made Arrests.

In raids so important that Postmaster General Hitchcock took charge in person, his inspectors fell on two concerns in New York city which they charge with swindling the public out of more than $40,000,000 by fraudulent use of the mails.

Sheldon H. Burr, president of Burr Brothers; Eugene H. Burr, secretary and treasurer of the firm, and Frank H. Toby, its vice president were arrested in the first raid and held in $20,000 bail each. The government charged that the firm sold between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 of mining oil stock worth little or nothing.

Charles L. Vaughn, a director of the Continental Wireless Telegraph and Telephone company, incorporated in Arizona, was taken in the second raid and held in $10,000 bail. Inspectors say his company has sold to the amount of at least $1,000,000, which has brought in no return to the investors. Vaughan is treasurer of the Columbia Finance Company, which acts as fiscal agent for the Continental Wireless Telegraph and Telephone Company, and had charge of the Continental office in New York.

Both raids were further evidence that the government, in its warfare against alleged interstate swindlers, means business, and no longer will be content with issuing fraud orders denying them the use of the mails, but will press for convictions on original charges. The present campaign began some months ago, and has resulted in the arrest of Louis Colla and his associates, charged with operating a string of bucket shops; the officers of the nited Wireless company, the United Exchange of Chicago, the Steel-Miller cotton firm of Corinth, Miss., and more than sixty other firms in different parts of the country.

CAUGHT IN QUICKSAND.

Fearful Experience of Gilbert Stephens Near New York.

Gilbert Stephens is under the care of physicians in his home in Silver Lake Park, New York, and may be weeks in recovering from the shock of a long battle with death in quicksand.

Stephens had taken a short cut homeward and stumbled into a depression which was formerly the bed of a small lake. The place is widely known as spotted with dangerous quicksands and Stephens found himself in the grip of one of them. The more he struggled to get out the deeper he went in. For two hours he shouted for help until finally his voice was silenced by the mud which rose above his shoulders and pressed on his lungs so that he could hardly breathe.

The quicksand had reached his chin and was pulling him slowly, but surely, to death by suffocation, when William Piscule, a town constable, who was out duck shooting, saw him and came running to his rescue. Piscule hurriedly picked up an armful of brush and sticks which he threw out on top of the quicksand. This gave him a fair foothold and he reached down to Stephens, tying the straps of his gunbag beneath the helpless man's shoulders. After a long struggle he dragged the prisoner out and laid him down exhausted on the shore of the lake.

BATTLE IN A CAVE.

Trapped in Mountain Recess, One of Gang is Shot to Death.

Trapped in a mountain cave in which they had sought concealment after breaking jail at West Union, Ohio, three fugitives had a sharp revolver battle with Sheriff C. W. Gibbony, of Adams county, Ky. One of the fugitives was killed and the other two surrendered.

The men broke jail, fled to the Ohio river and crossed to the Kentucky side. The sheriff, with one deputy, followed, and when he caught up with the men in the mountains called upon them to surrender. The answer was a bullet from the revolver of one of the men, James Smith. Sheriff Gibbony's first shot killed Smith, and then John Gaskins and William Burke came out of the cave with hands extended above their heads. They agreed to return to Ohio without requisition.

WHOLE FAMILY POISONED.

Oysters in Turkey Dressing Thought to Have Been Cause.

Five persons in the family of F. W. Gibson, residing in Mobile, Ala., including his negro cook, were poisoned from eating oysters and had a narrow escape from death.

They ate turkey stuffed with oysters left over from the Thanksgiving din er and soon afterward suffered excruciating agony for several hours, and it was only by heroic treatment that their lives were saved.

DEMOCRATIC HOUSE.

According to Roster Published, Democrats Have 227 Members.

The democratic representation in the next Congress will be 227 as against 163 republicans and one socialist, according to the roster of the house published at Washington, D. C.

These figures give the democrats a majority of 63 and a plurality of 64.

According to this publication, Kansas is the only state of size which has a solid republican delegation. A number, however, contain only one democrat, among those thus included being Iowa, Minnesota, California and Wisconsin.

All of the southern states have solid democratic delegations except Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee. Maryland and Virginia each have one republican, while Tennessee and Kentucky each have two members of that party. Colorado is the only northern state represented entirely by democrats, but Indiana, possessing a much larger representation, presses close upon her heels with 12 democrats out of 13 members.

Illinois has 11 democrats in her membership of 25; Massachusetts 4 out of 14; Michigan 2 out of 12; New Jersey 7 out of 10; New York 23 out of 37; Ohio 16 out of 28, and Pennsylvania 9 out of 32.

Missouri's delegation consists of 13 democrats and 3 republicans.

The Nebraska delegation is evenly divided, 3 and 3, as is Maine's, 2 and 2. Oklahoma has 2 republicans and 3 democrats. Washington is represented by 3 republicans. All of the states having one representative only are republican.

OGLETHORPE HONORED.

Celebration at Savannah In Memory of Founder.

At Savannah, Ga., a statue of General James Oglethorpe, in bronze, was unveiled on Wednesday in his honor as founder of the city in 1733, nucleus of the English colony of Georgia and foundation stone in much of the great edifice that is now the South Atlantic states.

The statue was shrouded in British and American flags and then was displayed before throngs of distinguished visitors and thousands of Georgia people when Governor Joseph M. Brown, of Georgia, and Mrs. J. J. Wilder, state president of the Colonial Dames, drew taut the ribbons that released the flag's silken folds.

Their act officially opened the three days of festivities that honored the memory of the founder of Georgia.

The occasion was one of exceptional interest and importance, as it marked a great historical event.

The festivities lasted for three days and the city was crowded with important personages during the celebration.

11,445,000 BALES.

Final Estimate Made by New Orleans Times-Democrat.

A total of the Times-Democrat for the cotton crop of 1910, as based on reports from correspondents throughout the cotton belt, relates to the actual growth of the year and is exclusive of linters, repacks, etc.

By states the crop is given as follows:

Alabama	1,165,000
Arkansas	700,000
Georgia and Florida	1,825,000
Louisiana	255,000
Mississippi	1,200,000
North Carolina	700,000
Oklahoma	800,000
Tennessee	300,000
Texas	3,200,000

Correspondents say that farmers have hitherto sold freely, as a rule, but are inclined to hold the remnant.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS. The district court of appeals of the First district at San Francisco has sustained the conviction of Abraham Ruef, former political boss of that city, charged with having bribed supervisors, and denied him a new trial. The decision is contained in 46 pages written by Presiding Judge Cooper and affirms the lower court on all points. Ruef had been sentenced to fourteen years' imprisonment and was at liberty on bail.

Robert C. Clowry, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company of New York, has tendered his resignation to the board of directors, and Theodore N. Vail, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which controls the Western Union, has been appointed to fill the vacancy.

Judge Armistead Brown, associate judge of the city court of Montgomery, has received from Governor B. B. Comer his commission officially devolving upon him the duties of presiding over the criminal court of Montgomery for another six years, beginning November 15, 1910. The jurist succeeds himself.

The state supreme court of New York has just decided that a railroad company must eject intoxicated passengers promptly from its cars or pay damages to passengers whose feelings are hurt by the presence of the drunken persons. A verdict of $500 is awarded to a passenger whose shins were kicked by an intoxicated man who sat across the aisle from him.

Fifty years ago the New York society for the relief of the crippled bought a little piece of property near the Grand Central station and built a hospital there. After many years of struggling the purchase price of $125,000 was paid. The society has just sold the property for $1,250,000. The money will build a fine new hospital in some other part of the city and the balance will smooth away the institution's financial difficulties for many years to come.

Charles H. Goodwin, the defeated republican nominee for governor in the recent Connecticut election, spent $16,940.30 during the campaign, according to his account as filed with the secretary of state.

In wrecking an old building at Cincinnati, the contractors found evidence that a stately old mansion in Cincinnati, which at one time was the home of Salmon P. Chase, former cabinet officer and former chief justice of the supreme court of the United States, had afterwards become the rendezvous of counterfeiters. In an unused room of the building, which for years has been used as a lodging house, spurious coins numbering several thousand were found. The coins bore dates of 1867 and 1868.

Charles S. Reid, of Palmetto, Ga., has been named by Governor Brown to be solicitor general of the Stone Mountain circuit, to succeed William Schley Howard, resigned. The resignation and appointment are to take effect December 1.

Memphis has been selected as the next place of meeting by the editors of the Louisville-Atlanta-New Orleans circuit of the Associated Press at the close of their two days' meeting in Birmingham, Ala. It was agreed to hold the Memphis meeting at the same time that the Texas members of the Associated Press meet in that city, the date to be selected later. Daniel D. Moore, editor of The New Orleans Times-Democrat, was elected chairman and Frank P. Glass, editor of The Birmingham News, was re-elected secretary.

The population of the state of New York is 9,113,279, according to statistics of the thirteenth census, made public by Director Durand. This is an increase of 1,984,385, or 25.4 per cent, over 7,268,894 in 1900. The increase from 1890 to 1900 was 1,265,257, or 21.1 per cent. On the present basis of apportionment, New York state will gain eight or nine representatives in the lower house of congress.

Marriage License Clerk Salmonson, of Chicago, was kept busy on Thanksgiving Day. According to report, between 800 and 1,000 marriages occurred in that city on Thursday for which licenses were issued. During his service as marriage license clerk for twenty-nine years, Salmonson has issued more than half a million marriage licenses.

A CHAPTER OF CASUALTIES. J. L. Holsch, 35 years old, was shot and killed by his brother-in-law, J. C. Browning, aged 20, at his home in Wichita Falls, Tex. Browning, who surrendered to the authorities, claimed that Holsch was abusing his sister and had started towards him with a knife before the shooting occurred.

A wholesale raid was made on alleged blind tigers at Gainesville, Ga., when an Atlanta detective, John Williams, turned up ten peddlers. Five of these turned up five others and were set free. Nothing could be gained from the remainder and they were fined $100 and costs. Williams left town immediately after trial. Threats were made against him, it is stated.

William Green, aged 72 years, was burned to death, when the furnishing of his room was destroyed by fire at Memphis. Green, through mistake, had filled a kerosene lamp with gasoline, an explosion resulting when he applied a match.

Fighting their way through dense smoke and blinding flame in a burning oil house on the Baltimore and Ohio railway, Howard Vinkendoff and Wilbert Elery were burned to death at Pittsburg, Pa. The men had worked all Sunday and part of the night and had gone to sleep in the oil house. Sparks from a passing engine fired the little building and they could be seen running around to find the door before they fell.

Upon calling his wife and children into the room, Harvey Adams, a resident of Hall county, Georgia, aged 45, shot his entire breast out with a shotgun, exploded with his toe. The real cause is not known, although a case in court is supposed to have caused it.

John W. Knight, managing partner of the defunct cotton firm of Knight, Tenney & Co., which recently failed for about $6,000,000, was arrested at Decatur, Ala., by a United States marshal and taken to Huntsville. The arrest is made upon indictments found by the United States grand jury, charging fraudulent use of the mails. Ten leading business men of Decatur accompanied Knight to go on his bond, which it is said has been fixed at $20,000.

A verdict of guilty in the first degree was returned at New Orleans in the case of Eugene Besancon and Francois Rodin, tried for the murder of F. H. Reidel. The jury was out for only five minutes. The dismembered body of Reidel, who was a watchmaker, was found sewed in a sack, in the Old Basin canal, October 31. Besancon and Rodin, who were arrested a few days later, made confessions, according to police.

Twenty officers and committeemen of the Southeastern Underwriters' Association were found guilty of "maliciously and in wanton disregard of the rights of the public" increasing the rates for fire insurance in the city of Newport News, and fined $400 each by a jury drawn from Southampton county, in the corporation court of Newport News. The verdict was returned after a trial lasting one month and seven days.

Notwithstanding the precautions that have been taken to stamp it out, typhoid continues to increase among the midshipmen at the naval academy at Annapolis. Eight additional cases have been taken from the midshipmen's sick bay to the naval hospital recently, making the total number of midshipmen now suffering from the malady twenty. The cause of the outbreak remains a mystery.

Three youthful highwaymen at Chicago shot one hold-up victim to death, fired at two others, and allowed a fourth man to go after stripping him of cash and overcoat. The bandit trio committed the series of crimes on the northwest side within the period of an hour, and although seen by a half dozen persons, cleverly escaped.

News was received by telephone of the death, at Fort Dade, of Captain Charles Moore, aged 73, for thirty years keeper of the lighthouse at Egmont Key, 40 miles from Fort Dade. Captain Moore had been ill for some time with cancer of the throat, which caused him to resign three months ago, and his death was not unexpected.

Corbin W. Mercer, a widely-known druggist, died in All Saints' church at Richmond, Va., during services. He had been in ill health for some time. He was a great-grandson of the famous revolutionary war commander, General Hugh Mercer, to whose memory the national government erected a monument in Fredericksburg a few years ago.

Percy Blake, well-known newspaper man in the south, who served as city editor of Tennessee, Mississippi and other papers and for years as authority on sporting matters, died at Birmingham, Ala., from a lengthy illness with asthma. His remains will probably be taken to Tennessee for interment.

B. F. Dillon, Sr., general superintendent of the southern division of the Western Union Telegraph Company, died suddenly at his home in the Mendenhall apartments in Atlanta on Monday. Death was caused by acute indigestion, followed by a stroke of apoplexy. Mr. Dillon stood high in the service of his company.

A special from Marion, N. C., says: A blackened and charred body supposed to be that of Jim Flynn, a white man, was found on Mount Ida, a mountain just outside the city limits of Marion, by men who were fighting the forest fire which had been raging over that and adjoining mountains for several days.

Five men are dead as a result of a premature explosion of dynamite in a Santa Fe rock cut east of Barstow, Calif. Supt. J. C. Mohler and three Mexicans were seriously injured.

Aiming his .22 caliber rifle through an open window at a bird, George Osborne shot Kin Pike at Almond, Ala., who chanced to be passing the house at the time. The ball lodged in Pike's abdomen, from the effects of which he died shortly afterwards.

With one well directed shot, Augustus Warmpold, a saloon keeper, killed one bandit and caused another to make a hasty escape from his saloon at San Barnadino, Cal.

Two new cases of cholera and three deaths were officially reported from the infected districts in Italy.

Steiner Holly, the 12-year-old son of Dr. J. H. Holly, accidentally shot and killed himself while out hunting near Samson, Ala.

FOREIGN NEWS ITEMS. A. W. Finch, the London agent of Pender & Co., of New York, was remanded for one week in the Mansion house court at London, charged with having defrauded his employers of $125,000 received in payment of a consignment of copper. Finch surrendered to the police at Liverpool.

George Schultze, an imperialist deputy has been elected second vice president of the reichstag in succession to Prince Ernest Hohenlohe-Langenburg, says a dispatch from Berlin.

Seven new cases and three deaths from cholera have been reported in Rome. As a precautionary measure one hundred and thirty persons living in a suspected neighborhood have been placed in quarantine.

A Persistent Yankee.

To Chauncey Yankee yesterday a well-dressed stranger said the following story the other day:

"A new England Yankee who was a prisoner on a pirate ship in the good old days which pirates roamed the seas because of his Yankee astuteness, objectionable to his captors. It was finally decided to maroon him on a desert island with but Bible food and a coffin to remind him of his inevitable fate. The island was found, and the New Englander and the coffin were left alone on the beach, while the pirate ship sailed away. For several days she sailed and then became becalmed. For three days she lay there with not a breath of air. On the evening of the third day a black speck was noticed on the horizon. It steadily grew larger and soon was close enough for the men on the ship to make out what it was."

The man of millions paused for a moment and then said, smiling, "It was the Yankee in his coffin, with half of the lid in either hand rowing for home."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

How to Quit Smoking.

Do not light the first cigar less than half an hour after breakfast. The more difficult this delay may be, the more need there is for a cure. The remainder of the day smoke the same as usual. It is only the first cigar with which we are dealing. Keep this up for a week, then lengthen the interval to an hour for another week, then make it one and a half hours, two, two and a half, and so on. If you have an "all gone" sensation, a longing for something and don't know what sort of feeling, eat an orange or apple or almost any kind of fruit, but don't smoke until the time is up. The nerves being deprived of their morning stimulant are crying for nourishment, which nature is hastening to supply through increased appetite to supply digestion. By the time the first cigar is entirely eliminated the cure is effected with no serious derangement of the heart or digestive apparatus. It now requires only a moderate will power to make the cure permanent.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Crow's Stratagem.

A crow had been captured by the children in a southern family and brought home and tamed. They were very fond of the crow and treated it with kindness. As in most houses where there are children, there was also a pet cat. The cat and crow were not friendly. One day an unusually nice morsel was given to the cat. This the crow not only looked at with envious eyes, but made several attempts to secure. The cat beat off each attempt, however, and the crow had to resort to stratagem. Disappearing through the open door, he returned in a few moments with a long string that had been raveled from a rag carpet. Placing this on the floor some little distance in front of the cat, he proceeded to wriggle it as he had seen the children do when playing with the cat. The cat instantly jumped to catch the string. This was, of course, exactly what the crow wanted, and he pounced upon the coveted morsel and flew away with it.—Harper's Weekly.

Hoyt's Hospitality.

It was the habit of Clayton H. Hoyt, the dramatist, to invite almost everybody he met to come up and spend a few weeks with him at his summer home in New Hampshire.

One night Hoyt, Bert Dasher, W. H. Currie, Frank McKee and several other house guests of Hoyt were sitting on the veranda of Hoyt's summer home waiting for dinner. The train had just arrived, and they saw an old farmer and his wife coming up the path.

"Who are they?" asked Hoyt. "I never saw them before."

"The dickens you didn't," replied Currie. "That is that old chap and his wife you talked to over at Springfield and invited to visit you."

"Oh, well," said Hoyt, "maybe they are just coming in to dinner. They will take the night train back."

Then he looked again and saw the hired man behind the farmer and his wife wheeling a big trunk on a wheelbarrow.

"No, by George," shouted Hoyt, "they are here for a run!"

And they stayed a month.—Cleveland Leader.

Long and Short Story Writers.

Which are the great short stories of the English language? Not a bad basis for a debate! This I am sure of—that there are far fewer supremely good short stories than there are supremely good long books. It takes more exquisite skill to carve the cameo than the statue. But the strangest thing is that the two excellences seem to be separate and even antagonistic. Skill in the one by no means insures skill in the other. The great masters of our literature, Fielding, Scott, Dickens, Thackeray and Reade, have left no single short story of outstanding merit behind them, with the possible exception of Wandering Willie's tale in "Red Gauntlet."

On the other hand, men who have been very great in the short story, Stevenson, Poe and Bret Harte, have written no great book. The champion sprinter is seldom a five miler as well.

Poe is the master of all. Poe is, to my mind, the supreme original short story writer of all time.—Conan Doyle in "Through the Magic Door."

Yosemite Versus Grand Canyon.

Yosemite for a home or a camp, the Grand canyon for a spectacle. I saw a robin in Yosemite valley. Think how forlorn and out of place a robin would seem in the Grand canyon! What would he do there? There is no turf for him to inspect, and there are no trees for him to perch on. I would as soon expect to find him amid the pyramids of Egypt or amid the ruins of Karnak. The bluebird was there also, and the water ouzel haunted the lucid waters. The reader may create for himself a good image of Yosemite by thinking of a section of seven or eight miles of the Hudson river midway of its course as emptied of its waters and deepened 3,000 feet or more, having the sides nearly vertical, with snow white waterfalls fluttering against them here and there, the famous spires and domes planted along the rim, and the landscape of groves and glades, with its still, clear, winding river, occupying the bottom.—John Burroughs in Century.

A Great Trade Secret.

As every one knows, the process of manufacturing the paper of which Bank of England notes are made is one of the greatest of all trade secrets. It is known only to the governor of the Bank of England and to three other persons intimately connected with the industry, which is carried on at Overton, a quiet little village in Hants. All that the outside world is allowed to know concerning this precious paper is that it is made, among other ingredients, out of charred husks and Rhenish vines.

Quite as profound a secret is the manufacture of both the paper and the ink used for American banknotes. The former has the double advantage of not being a secret preparation, but one that only "takes" one particular kind of ink, which is quite unique, the American government paying the manufacturer, who alone possesses the secret, the sum of $50,000 a year for making it.—Pearson's Weekly.

THEORY ABOUT WOMEN TESTED

A Queer Experiment and Its Happy Result.

"Good gracious, mamma," said Miss Louise Hewlett at the breakfast table, "just listen to this:

"Wanted.—A woman twenty years old, with artistic tastes, capricious, fond of golf, lawn tennis and dancing, to act as secretary."

"Singular," said the mother thoughtfully, "that the advertiser, whom I suppose to be a man, says nothing about beauty."

Since Miss Hewlett was looking for a position she answered the advertisement and was invited to call, which she did in the company of her mother. She found a man of thirty-five, serious, reticent and apparently in his right mind.

"I need also," said the advertiser, Mr. Dudley Vinton, "a housekeeper. If Mrs. Hewlett will take up her residence here with you in my apartments, filling that position, I will pay each a handsome salary."

The offer was accepted, and mother and daughter went to live in Mr. Vinton's apartments. From the first he treated them as guests, though Miss Hewlett was occasionally called upon to write a note or a letter or copy some papers relating to property. At the end of the first month Mr. Vinton paid the salaries and said that he would be glad to continue the arrangement indefinitely. Louise pouted. She filled the terms of the advertisement.

Another month passed. Mr. Vinton was absent occasionally, sometimes by day, sometimes in the evening. Once or twice he was away several days together. What called him, where he went or what he did he never told. Louise was piqued and delicately hinted that some reference to these absences would be at least civil. She did not like to be treated as a child or an entire stranger. Mr. Vinton failed to satisfy her curiosity, whereupon she tossed her head and declared that it was high time such a ridiculous arrangement was terminated. Mr. Vinton made no comments upon her action. Indeed, he seemed to be rather pleased with it, egging her on to more of the same kind. Finally she became angry and ended the interview in tears.

One morning a delicate little missive came for Mr. Vinton which fell into Louise's hands. She took it to him and watched him while he read it. His countenance was not to be read. Placing the note in his pocket, he went to his bedroom, and soon after Louise, who was watching him from a window, saw him go out with a suit case.

"Just what I expected," she said. "That note contained an invitation. He's gone to the country to visit some girl he's in love with."

Vinton remained away a week. When he returned Louise asked him when he intended to be married.

"I am not engaged," he replied.

They were sitting in the library at the time, and Vinton took up a book. Louise tried in vain to keep her tongue in her head. Finally she could endure the silence no longer and asked a number of inadmissible questions. Some of them Vinton answered, others he parried, while others he received in silence. But not for a moment did he manifest any dissatisfaction with her for attempting to pry into his affairs. Finally he told her that he had been to see an invalid who had died during his absence. Louise arose and strode silently out of the room. Vinton called her back.

"If you don't mind," he said, "I am curious to know what has offended you."

"You have led me to believe what was not true."

She stood waiting for him to continue the debate, but as he only said, "Thank you very much," she went out and spent the rest of the day in her room with the door locked.

At the end of the year Vinton invited mother and daughter into the library and announced to them that he desired to terminate their present arrangement.

"And now," he continued, addressing Louise, "I will satisfy your curiosity. A year ago I wished to make a very advantageous match. The lady's characteristics I described in my advertisement. I am a theorist and have a theory about women. It is that if a man wishes to know what a woman will do under certain circumstances he must infer that she will act exactly contrary to what he would expect. I desired to test this theory, and if it proved a law I would apply it to the lady I wished to marry and thus enhance my chances of success. During the past year I have applied the test to you seventy-eight times, and you have fulfilled the conditions sixty-nine times. You will readily see the advantage of having two women of like characteristics, the one to practice upon, the other."

At this point in the theorist's exposition of his methods Louise rose from her seat and was sailing majestically out of the room when Vinton caught her about the waist and held her.

"Darling," he said, changing his tone, "there is one result of the experiment yet to be told. The practice piece became the object piece, and the object piece has passed from the problem. The invalid who died while I was away was the girl I was endeavoring to win. We never became more than strong friends, and while I was planning for the advantages that would have accrued in marrying her I was falling in love with you."

A Very Large Mine.

There was once in Cripple Creek an odd character named Burns. He was an odd person who always, no matter what his work, wore what used to be called a "Prince Albert." He struck a rich vein of ore and named that the Prince Albert. Being of a generous and convivial disposition, this lucky fellow was, of course, surrounded by many self seeking friends. When he and they were in their cups some of them, with an eye to the main chance, managed to wheedle out of Burns on one pretext or another a deed of a share in his mine. With royal prodigality he scattered deeds about among his retainers and camp followers until finally something had to be done, and the case was taken into court. One of the lawyers had Burns on the stand. "Now, Mr. Burns," said the lawyer, "will you please tell the court how you can explain your conduct? The evidence shows that you have deeded away twenty-nine twenty-fourths of your mine. What have you to say to that?" "Well, sir," replied the witness, "you must remember, sir, that the Prince Albert is a very large mine."

A Cleanup.

The three amateur sharpers smiled. They thought they had found an easy mark. He was well dressed and grossly inebriated. And he bore a tight roll of bills that looked like a bologna sausage.

"Boys," he thickly said, "I'm goin' to shend thish wad of shtuff to th' gov'ment laundry an' have it dry cleaned. It's sho fearful dirty. Maybe one of you gents would kindly shee it's addreshed to proper place?"

"Why, yes," replied the gang. "We'll take care of it."

"Thanks," replied the victim. "An' now I mush ashk you to lemme have a few clean bills for emergenshish, don't you know."

So they searched themselves and gave him a new twenty and a ten and a five. Then, taking the soiled wad, they hurried away.

Two days later the three clever ones were arrested for having counterfeit money in their possession.

But the guileless inebriate was seen no more.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Born Diplomat.

"Splendid!" exclaimed the old colonel as C company passed the saluting base.

"Did you hear wot ole nasty face sez?" No. 3 of the front rank asked No. 4.

"Stand fast after parade, No. 4, for talking in the ranks!" snapped a sergeant from near by.

"It wasn't me talkin'!" muttered No. 4.

"You'd better not git two on us in trouble," advised No. 3 in a whisper.

"Talking while marching past!" echoed the adjutant. "What on earth did you find to talk about then?"

"As we was passing the salutin' base," explained No. 4, "the colonel sez, 'Splendid!' 'Yes,' I sez to meself, 'an' you've got the smartest officer in the British army to thank for makin' us splendid, and that's our adjutant.'"

"Er—sergeant, send the man away and don't bring such frivolous complaints before me again," snapped the adjutant.—London Answers.

A Silent Partner.

Nibbitt—That woman who just went out is the partner of your joys and sorrows, I suppose? Rufton—She's partner to my joys all right, but when it comes to my sorrows she slips over to see her mother.

Very Devoted.

A Strict Dramatic Censor.

Vienna once possessed the strictest dramatic censor ever known in the person of Franz Hoegelin, who held that post in the Austrian capital at the beginning of the last century. Hoegelin published a manual for the guidance of censors. "A pair of lovers should never be allowed to appear on the stage alone. They must always be accompanied by a third person of mature years." Marriages out of one's class were also strictly forbidden by Hoegelin on the stage, and he quotes an instance of a play which he refused to pass because the author made the hero, Count Valdemar, marry a gardener's daughter. "Such misalliances have unfortunately been known to occur in real life, but that is no reason why they should be allowed on the stage," he said.

Not the Same.

On one occasion when "The Mikado" was being rehearsed Gilbert called out from the middle of the stalls, "There is a gentleman in the left group not holding his fan correctly." The stage manager appeared and explained. "There is one gentleman," he said, "who is absent through illness." "Ah," came the reply from the author in grave, matter of fact tones, "that is not the gentleman I am referring to."—Dundee Advertiser.

Saved from Awful Death.

How an appalling calamity in his family was prevented is told by A. D. Mcdonald, of Fayettville, N. C. R. F. D. No. 8. "My sister had consumption," he writes, "one was very thin and pale, had no appetite and seemed to grow weaker every day, as all remedies failed till Dr. King's New Discovery was tried, and so completely cured her, that she has not been troubled with a cough since. It's the best medicine I ever saw or heard of," for coughs, colds, la grippe, asthma, croup, hemorrhage, all throat and lung troubles, it has no equal. 50c, $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by Upchurch Drug co.

Free for Stomach and Bowels

We are in receipt of letters from Mrs. Eva Gaskins, 304 Madison St., Topeka, Kans., and Mr. P. H. Gavellas, Wagoner, Okla., as well as many others, telling about the wonderful results they have secured in the cure of their stomach and liver troubles by the use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

This remedy, as all readers doubtless know, has been before the public for a generation and is now being more extensively used than any other remedy for stomach, liver and bowel complaints. According to reliable testimony, it seems to be a very quick and lasting cure for constipation, indigestion and dyspepsia, liver trouble, biliousness, headaches, sour stomach, gas on the stomach, drowsiness after eating and similar disorders. It is a blood with tonic effect, and so mild and gentle in action that a child as well as a grown person can take it, in fact, it has no equal for children, women and old people.

It arouses the flow of gastric juice, and by a peculiar action trains the stomach and bowel muscles to again do their work naturally, and in time medicines of all kinds can be dispensed with. A free sample bottle can be had for trial by sending your address to the doctor, for in this way Mrs. Gaskins, Mr. Gavellas and many others first learned of the cure. Later, when satisfied it is the remedy you need, do as others are doing and buy it of your druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has qualified in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 461 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

The All Alabama conference held at Montgomery Tuesday and Wednesday was attended by more than one hundred of the leading men of the State and it is to be hoped much good will result.

The Advertiser of Wednesday says:

There was a sentiment of deep abiding purpose in every utterance of every delegate who addressed the convention. There was not a single flight of oratory in the entire proceedings. The delegates considered that they had work to do and they went about it in a business way.

The Change of a Word.

"You wouldn't think there'd be enough difference between the definite and the indefinite article to matter much, would you?" said a woman who writes for a living. "I made a lifelong enemy of a woman once just by writing 'the' where I meant 'a.' It was an account of her wedding I was doing. I said something about the ceremony being performed at the home of the bride's aunt, and then I added that there were present 'only the few friends of the family.' The bride never got over that 'the' in front of few. It happened five years ago, and when my name is mentioned she still froths at the mouth."—Washington Post.

Beaver Tales.

The Indians say that if a beaver sent out from the parents' lodge fails to find a mate he is set to repair the dam. If he fails a second time he is banished.

An Arab writer has the same story. He tells us that those who buy beaver skins can distinguish between the skins of masters and slaves. The latter have the hair of the head rubbed off because they have to pound the wood for their masters' food and do it with their heads.

A Surprised Landlord.

The very young traveling salesman was registering at the village hotel.

"I want a room with running water in it," he remarked.

"Runnin' water?" exclaimed the landlord. "What do you want to do, winter—practice indoor trout fishin'?"—Argonaut.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The Fall term of Circuit Court commenced on Monday shortly before eleven o'clock, Judge W. W. Pearson arriving on the morning train. At once the work of empanelling the juries was proceeded with, and as soon as they were sworn in the Judge delivered an impressive charge to the Grand Jury and they retired to commence their investigations.

Judge Pearson in his address to the Grand Jury said, in part:

Your jury commission is required to place in the jury box the names of all male citizens of the county, who are generally reputed to be honest and intelligent men, esteemed in the community for their integrity, good character, and sound judgment, who are over 21 and under 65 years of age, who are not habitual drunkards, who are not afflicted with permanent disease or physical weakness, who have never been convicted of any offense involving moral turpitude, who can read English or not being able to read English, have all the other qualifications prescribed, and are freeholders or householders. From such an honourable body of men you have been selected, according to law, to discharge the duties of a grand jury for this term of court, duties of a serious character, the full performance of which will prove beneficial to Chilton county and the State of Alabama for all time to come.

The criminal is a menace to society. Just as weeds and grass must be removed from your crops to secure the best results, so must the crimina' be removed from society, to insure its healthful growth. The criminal breeds criminals, as has been demonstrated in New York. When you find out grass in your fields, you apply salt, or other remedy, to stamp it out; otherwise, it will spread and spread, until your farm is in jeopardy. If criminals are not salted in Chilton, they will spread until no good man will be safe in your county. Salt must be applied to all alike. What would you think of the farm hand employed by you to hoe cotton who negligently left tufts of grass here and there where he worked? You would discharge him in in vigorous language. Gentlemen, you, and the pettit juries who shall follow you, are selected by Chilton county to hoe out the criminals within her borders.

If any grand juror knows or has reason to believe that the law has been violated in this county, it is his duty to inform his fellow jurors, who must investigate such violation. A grand juror must not be present or take any part in the deliberations of his fellow jurors representing any public offense with which he is charged, or which was committed against his person or property, or which he is a prosecutor, or where he is connected by blood or marriage with the person charged.

There has been a light docket this week, no cases of interest to the public has been heard, and court will probably adjourn Thursday.

There are two murder cases to be tried next week. The new trial of Mrs. Hattie Pope, for the murder of her mother, for which she has been in jail a long time, is set for next Wednesday.

In the case of Arledge, for the killing of his father, no indictment has yet been found by the Grand Jury.

Nature makes the cures after all.

Now and then she gets into a tight place and needs helping out.

Things get started in the wrong direction.

Something is needed to check disease and start the system in the right direction toward health.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with hypophosphites can do just this.

KLAW AND ERLANGER'S

Stupendous Production of Lew Wallace's "Ben Hur."

To be presented in Birmingham, Ala., Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings and Saturday matinee, December 15-16 and 17.

The management of the Jefferson Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., have arranged with Klaw & Erlanger for the presentation of Lew Wallace's powerful religio-historic historic spectacle, "Ben Hur," Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, and Saturday matinee, Dec. 15, 16 and 17. "Ben Hur," with its lustrous "Star of Bethlehem its camels, Arabian steeds, Oriental trappery and mimic splendor of the gorgeous East is beyond doubt the most elaborate spectacle ever staged in the history of the world. Its series of scenes present to the eye a feast of multifarious beauty and variety all set to a symphonic accompaniment of graceful music. The exciting episode, such as the galley scene with its horde of chained slaves, the sea fight, the rescue in mid sea, the thrilling race with its quadruple teams of galloping horses, combined with the picturesque scenes representing the appearance of the Star to the Wise Men in the Desert, the moonlit Lake in the Orchard of palms, where Ben-Hur and Iras make love while drifting in the barge of the fair Egyptian, the palm-waving worshippers on the Mount of Olives, simply captivate the great audiences that are nightly in attendance wherever it is being enacted.

As now arranged and staged by Klaw & Erlanger, the public sees a great spectacle which appeals not merely on the strength of its dramatic values, but as a colossal and picturesque pageant. And in the chariot race, the scene which, coupled with the popularity of General Wallace's book, gave the play its enormous vogue, eight horses, aided by the most intricate mechanism, produce the prodigious illusion of the struggle for supremacy in the arena of the Circus of Antioch. Edgar S. Stillman Kelley's brilliant musical score, which so heightens the dignity and solemnity of the Biblical narative, and was one of the most potent factors in its success, is made a dominant feature of the present production, being interpreted by a special orchestra and chorus carried by the company for that purpose. Seats for "Ben-Hur" will be placed on sale at the Jefferson Theatre box-office Monday morning, Dec. 12th. Prices will range from 50¢ to $3.00. It is advisable for persons who intend visiting Birmingham to see this great spectacle, to reserve seats at once by mail. The management of the Jefferson Theatre announce that special attention will be given to all mail orders.

The young man who would take life easy, should be careful to select a wealthy and influential father.

The youthful graduate is the only person who knows exactly how this country should be run successfully.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

Arrangements are being prefected for three great events in Sunday School work in Alabama. First, the International Training School at Birmingham, December 4th to 9th. Second the County Officers, conference for North Alabama county officers, December 7th and 8th, in connection with the training school, and the South Alabama County Officer, conference in Montgomery, December 10th. Third, Montgomery's fourth annual Institute, December 10th and 11th. Both the Birmingham Montgomery meetings will be held in the First Baptist churches of the two cities.

The County Officers' Conference This is the first time in the history of Alabama Sunday school Association to attempt a midwinter County Officers' conference. For two years similar meetings have been held in connection with the state convention, and they were found so helpful that the state Association officers are determined to make an effort for a midwinter conference. This is one of the strongest features in the organized Sunday School work in some state, and will doubtless mean a forward step in the Sunday School work in Alabama. The work in the state is so organized that there is a president, Secretary and Treasurer for each county organization; also a district president for each commissioner's district. Besides these there are department superintendants in the various counties, who look after especially the adult Bible Class work, home departments, teacher training and elementary work.

It is expected that practically every county in the state will be represented.

Remember that when your kidneys are affected, your life is in danger. M. Mayor, Rochester, N. Y. says: "my trouble started with a sharp shooting pain over my back which grew worse daily. I felt sluggish and tired, my kidney action was irregular and infrequent. I started using Foley Kidney Pills Each dose seemed to put new life and strength into me, and now I am completely cured and feel better and stronger than for years." Upchurch Drug co.

Mortgage Sale.

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in the mortgage executed by Myrtle L. Marcus and T. C. Marcus to J. P. Hayes on the 11th day of November, 1909, to secure a debt of $2,300.00, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Judge of Probate of Chilton county, Alabama, in the Record of Mortgages, in Volume 97, on page 213, and on default having been made in the payment of the indebtedness secured by said mortgage, the said J. P. Hayes will proceed to sell at the Court House door in Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama, at public outcry to the highest bidder, for cash, on Monday, the 2d day of January, 1911 the following described real estate, situated in Chilton county, Alabama to wit: The S½ of the SW¼ and the NW¼ of the SW¼ of Section 22, and the E½ of the E½ of the SE¼ of Section 21, all in Township 22 of Range 14.

Said sale will be made for the purpose of paying the entire debt secured by said mortgage and the expenses incident to said sale, including attorney's fees.

This, the 1st day of December, 1910. J. P. HAYES, Mortgagee.

JOTHAM'S MESSENGER.

It Brought Him an Answer That He Appreciated.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1913, by American Press Association.]

Mr. Jotham Reed, bachelor, tiptoed into his lonely house as if fearful of being caught in some nefarious act. As a matter of fact, there was never a man quite so utterly alone in the world as Jotham, so free to go and come, with no questions asked, for there was no one to ask questions. Jotham was master and mistress, chief cook and bottle washer of the snug, white painted house on the hill.

Carefully he trod through the spotless kitchen into the sitting room, where he placed a mysterious package on the table and drew a chair close beside it. Then he unwrapped the package, disclosing a large box kite made of stiff red paper, pliant reeds and wire.

"I think," said Jotham gleefully, "that kite will do the job. I'll have to wait a day or two till the wind comes up. It'll need a pretty brisk gale to lift it into the next county. I don't want any Little River folks to get hold of it. First I'll put on the teakettle, and while I'm waiting for it I can write the letter."

"WHAT 'D YOU COME FOR, THEN?"

He lighted the oil cook stove, and, filling the shining teakettle at the pump, he placed it to boil and returned to the sitting room. From a narrow cupboard in the chimney he brought writing materials, and spread them forth on the table. Pink tinted note paper, purchased at the same city shop where he had bought the kite, and a fresh bottle of purple ink were other results of that secret expedition.

Jotham put on his glasses, thrust his pen in the ink and tightly linked one foot around the other. He wrote with cramped fingers, and his sun burned forehead was knotted in an anxious frown:

To the Lady That Captures This Kite:

Dear Madam—The writer of this letter is an unmarried man who wants a wife. I've got a nice forty acre farm and a nine room house all paid for and a thousand dollars in the bank, two cows and a horse that any lady can drive; also two pigs and no end of chickens and flowers. No widows need apply. What I want is a good, neat looking wife that knows how to cook and will appreciate a loving husband. For further particulars address P. O. Box 38, Little River. Strictly confidential. JOTHAM REED.

The teakettle was bobbing erratically about the stove when Jotham finished his letter. Before preparing his supper, however, he reread his letter, nodded grave approval and slipped it in an envelope, which he addressed to "The Lady That Finds This Kite." Slipping the flap of the envelope around the reed frame inside the kite, Jotham gummed it securely in place and laid the kite carefully in the closet.

As he puttered around the rooms, preparing the meal, eating it and afterward washing the dishes, Jotham mused on the few amatory privileges that had been his. Once when he was quite young he had fallen in love with two girls at the same time, Mary Gray and Sophie Trenton. Uncertain which one he really desired, Jotham had resorted to the simple method of his childhood—he wrote their names on a slip of paper and then recited, "My mother told me to take this one," and his finger had fallen on the name of Sophie Trenton.

He asked Sophie to be his wife, and she had scorned him—not simply refused him, but laughed in his face. Then it was that he discovered that Mary Gray was really his heart's desire, and he marveled that he should have hesitated. But Sophie had confided the proposal to Mary Gray, and when Jotham tried his fortune there he was coldly sent about his business, while Mary Gray married somebody else and moved away from Little River. Sophie hadn't married anybody. She was the village milliner and was especially pleasant to Jotham Reed.

In spite of this unhappy result of trusting to the god of chance, Jotham in his middle life once more placed his affairs in the hands of the deity. He had thought of the kite the night before, and the idea appealed to him. It was romantic; it was thrillingly uncertain.

Two days passed by before the wind arose sufficiently strong to merit sending the kite on its delicate mission, and then it came, a fresh northwester, blowing crisp and cool over the river and certain to send the kite flying inland far away from Little River.

Jotham went up on the highest hill back of the house, the red kite tugging at the short line held in his hand. A brief run and the red messenger was loosened and dashed up and up and up and then away before the wind, whirled and dipping and tossing, some queer dancing dervish of the air.

He watched it until it was a red speck against the sailing white clouds, and then he went down the hill. "Headed straight for Dexter county. I shouldn't wonder if it landed in Roseville. Great smoke!" Jotham paused and scratched his head in perplexity. "I didn't specify that I only meant unmarried wimmen should answer! Come to think of it, though, if a married woman found the letter she'd probably have a sister or somebody who'd take an interest."

Jotham kept away from the post-office for two whole days, and then he went down to get his mail. There was none.

That night he went to a "box social" at the church parlors.

Fate decreed that Jotham Reed should purchase the box that Sophie Trenton had prepared. Sophie had changed from the pretty, dark haired, black eyed girl of twenty years ago to a sallow looking, dried up little mortal who dressed far too young for her age. Now she looked soulfully at Jotham from under the brim of her immense hat and smiled enchantingly.

"I don't know myself sometimes," she rattled on. "I used to be the most scatterbrained girl that ever was—didn't know my own mind one day's end from another. I've done and said lots of things that I wished I could take back. I should 'a' been happier—and maybe others too!"

Jotham was deaf to her chatter. His brain was performing wonderful mathematical calculations anent the velocity of the wind and the possible speed traveled by Cupid's messenger. At this rate, for the wind still blew briskly, the kite must have traveled far out of the state. Jotham wondered rather uneasily, if the wind should not abate soon, might not the messenger be wafted down to Mexico or some other heathen country where women were a drug on the matrimonial market? The thought of a fair senorita presiding as mistress over Hilltop farm—and incidentally its owner—sent Jotham to the door for a breath of fresh air and a squint at the weather. To Sophie Trenton's angry surprise, Jotham forgot to come back again.

Two more days passed, with no mail and no tidings of the kite. Jotham had gingerly opened the weekly paper, half fearful that the kite's wanderings might have brought it within the ken of the hungry editor—but no; there was no word.

Then one day Jotham was shelling peas in the back porch when he heard the click of the front gate latch and a light, swift tread on the path around the house.

The sight he looked upon brought him to his feet wide eyed, open mouthed, the pan of peas rattling unheeded to the ground.

Before him stood a tall, youngish woman with fair hair parted smoothly on her white forehead and puffed becomingly behind her ears. Her skin was fresh and pink, and her eyes were dark blue and steady in their gaze, and over them the straight brows cut a clear dark line. Jotham saw the laughing eyes, the twitching red lips half breaking into mirthful smiles, saw the crisp blue cotton dress the color of her eyes, the fresh white hat and the string of coral beads about her throat and recognized his old sweetheart, Mary Gray that was!

In her hands dangled the crushed fragments of the box kite.

"Found it hanging on the pear tree by my sitting room window," she explained as she laid the kite on the bench. "That's a great idea of yours, Jotham. Most as big as the other idea you had when you asked Sophie to marry you."

"I was a fool," said Jotham Reed bluntly. "I'm a bigger fool now, because it's just givin' fate another chance to laugh in my face. You live in Roseville now, don't you?" he asked.

She nodded. "Funny, wasn't it, your kite should land there?" she said.

"Seems like there was something uncommon in it," admitted Jotham soberly. "I sent it up four days ago off this hill. I forgot till afterwards that some married woman might get hold of it. Looks as if you was meant to get it."

Mrs. Blake, she who was Mary Gray, smiled innocently. "Of course you know Jim passed away three years ago," she ventured.

Jotham stared round eyed, and then a great gladness came into his face. "Then—you—can keep the letter, Mary? You'll stay?"

"I can't, Jotham."

"Why not?"

"You said you didn't want any widows to apply and"—

"What 'd you come for, then?" demanded Jotham, his arm dangerously near Mary's slender waist.

"I thought maybe you'd make an exception in my case," whispered Mary, "seeing as I've waited so long. I was a proud little hussy, Jotham. I wanted you badly, but I was mad because you asked Sophie."

"It's come out all right, Mary, dear. We must have been meant for each other or that kite 'd never have come straight to you"—

"Or I would never have come straight to you," interrupted Mary happily. "It's wonderful how everything always comes out all right in the end, no matter how it's tangled."

When Tabby Raises Her Battle Cry.

Despite the cat's softness, lustrous fullness and purring amiability, her piercing warcry in the night startles and exasperates us beyond all bearing—not by its loudness, but by a certain vicious, weird, half terrifying, half infuriating note in it that makes us spring to arms with the boomerang, as the warwhoop of our tribal enemies did a century or centuries ago, says Dr. Woods Hutchinson in Success Magazine.

One of Mark Twain's wise old frontiersman had caught this note when he explained to the tenderfoot that animal speech had rules of composition and grammer, just like human speech, and that "the reason a cat rlies ye so ain't on account of the noise she makes, but on account of the sickenin' bad grammar she uses." And he was right, for the grammar of scalp lifting and the whole alphabet of battle, murder and sudden death tingles and screams in the rasping cry.

Two Can Play.

"Waiter," called the irate diner, "there seems to be a dollar on this bill I can't account for."

"Oh, that's just a joke, sir," apologized the waiter, "just a bet the cashier and I have. I'll have it fixed right away, sir."

"What do you mean about a bet?" asked the diner, detaining him.

"Well, sir, I bet the cashier 50 cents you would see the mistake, and he bet you wouldn't, so I win, sir."

"Suppose I hadn't noticed it?"

"He'd have got the dollar, sir."

"Oh, I see. Give me your pencil." And he wrote a few lines on the back of the bill, folded it up and handed it to the waiter. "Take that to the cashier."

The waiter leaned over the cashier's shoulder as he unfolded the paper. It read:

"I'll bet you $5 that when you send this back you don't find me."

And they didn't.—Lippincott's.

Practical Help.

"Mister," whined the mendicant with the wooden leg, "can't you help a poor old sailor wot has had his leg bitten off by a shark?"

"Dear me!" exclaimed the kind hearted professor. "I believe I can, my poor man. Come around to the college."

After hobbling along for ten blocks the professor led the way through an iron gate and up to his study.

"Here you are, my poor man. Now, don't say I never gave you anything."

The beggar almost toppled over with astonishment.

"W-what's that, sir?"

"Why, that's my latest book on 'Sharks and Their Ways.' If you have that book with you when you fall overboard next time you won't lose the other leg. You'll know just how to dodge them. Good day."—Chicago News.

KIDNEY TROUBLE

Suffered Ten Years—Relieved in Three Months Thanks to PE-RU-NA.

C. B. FIZER.

C. B. FIZER, Mt. Sterling, Ky., says:

"I have suffered with kidney and bladder trouble for ten years past.

"Last March I commenced using Peruna and continued for three months. I have not used it since, nor have I felt a pain."

A Good Start.

He was young and had just graduated from law school. His resources were exhausted, but he bravely swung forth his shingle and waited. But no clients stopped on that side of the street. His office rent was due, and his clothes were becoming shiny, but he went to his office with a regularity that would indicate a thriving practice. He was deep in an imaginary case, and when the authorities were all noted and arguments prepared he started forth downtown and thrashed the mayor's son, whom he met in the street. The act aroused the righteous indignation of the townsmen, and he faced an angry court. But in his testimony he was able to include a sharp attack on the mayor and his administration. He quoted law from Lycurgus and Solon and gave them the page, number and chapter every time. The case was continued and sent up to a higher court. At last it reached the supreme bench, and the young man made the most of his opportunity to show his ability as a lawyer. He lost the case and paid his fine cheerfully, for he had established for himself a practice which assured his future.—Joe Mitchell Chapple in National Magazine.

President Johnson's Impeachment.

The house impeached President Johnson on Nov. 25, 1867, charging him with having removed Secretary of War Stanton in direct violation of the tenure of office act, with having appointed General Thomas contrary to the same act, with conspiracy with General Thomas and others for the intimidation of Secretary Stanton and the unlawful disbursement of the war department's money and with inducing General Emory, commanding the department of Washington, to disobey orders.

The house adopted the resolution of impeachment by a vote of 126 to 42. After the trial of the case before the senate the vote for impeachment there stood 35 to 19, thus being short of the necessary two-thirds. The senate adjourned sine die, however, without voting on some of the primary articles embraced in the charges against the president. Thereupon the chief justice of the United States court entered a verdict of acquittal on the record.—New York Times.

What Impressed Her.

"What impressed you in the sermon?"

"The way they brought the head of the prophet before the king on a salver."

"That is impressive."

"Yes, they trained servants properly in those days. Now, mine, when they bring me anything, are forever forgetting the salves."—Pittsburg Post.

A Genius Heroic.

"There goes a great genius!"

"Novelist?"

"No, but he reads all the novels the other fellows write."

"You call that 'genius?'"

"Well, if it ain't exactly genius it's the pathos of it!"—Atlanta Constitution.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Haughton, Harvard's Football Coach.

© American Press Association.

Credit must be given to Percy Haughton, head coach of the Harvard team for the showing of the team this season. While it must be admitted Haughton was fortunate in having many veterans left from last year's team, it was his splendid idea of the opportunities that the new rules offered that enabled the Crimson eleven to win the eastern football championship. Every day during practice the rules could be seen at work on the fields. So good were Haughton's second and third teams that the coach said several times that he could have won the championship of class 2 or 3. With the wealth of material for the 1911 team on hand many men think that they will capture the laurels next year.

How to Become a Trainer.

The present racing season will see the end of Danny Maher as a leading figure in the saddle on English racing courses on the flat.

He cannot do less than 126 pounds, which is almost a prohibitive weight for a man who aspires to be a leading jockey in England. The English stable boy will, however, continue to train him as a trainer, and occasionally he may be seen in the saddle at country races and steeplechases.

In the meantime he has been looking for favorable training quarters in France, where he will combine the training of high class thoroughbreds for racing horses for some of the men who have so long and faithfully patronized him for his skill and nerve as a jockey.

It is said that the moment in negotiation are the stables on the Curragh, in County Kildare, which were at one time occupied by Richard Croker. But if the latter does not go through he means to start an establishment of his own at Cashel, in Tipperary.

It is computed that at the end of the racing season Maher will be very strong at his bankers, so there can be no question of monetary circumstances to interfere with his movements.

A New Style Billiard Table.

Some Paris amateur billiard club are now practicing on a new style table which is 5 by 5 feet instead of the regulation size—9 by 4½. On the new table line billiards are being played and the square form does away with the long drive, so that the advantage which rail is usually to the player. It has upset many of some of the cracks and makes them when angles and force are considered. The three cushion game is very difficult to execute, and the famous single cushion shots, and follows are about all the shots any one but an expert can make. Another innovation is the use of two red balls and one cue ball in all games. Each player uses the cue ball and so eliminates very large-ly the safety play. This game has become popular in Paris for several years.

Stahl Says He's Through.

Jacob Stahl, better known in baseball circles as Jake, the Boston American first baseman, has quit baseball and gone into the banking business. He has accepted a responsible position with a Chicago national bank. Mr. Stahl-in-law has been connected with the institution for several years.

Sonoma Girl to Quit Track.

Sonoma Girl, the famous trotting mare, has been retired from the turf by her owner, Miss Lotta Crabtree of San Francisco. The mare's last race was at Memphis. It is understood that the retirement Sonoma Girl will be the ownership of Miss Crabtree's trotting stock farm.

HUMOROUS QUIPS

Some Don'ts For Christmas.

Don't send a grand piano to your fiancee in Chicago with a little note requesting her to put it into her stocking.

Don't send an electric runabout to a freezing widow with five starving children. This is like throwing a rope of pearls to a drowning man.

Don't give your wife a set of Russian sables or an ermine opera cloak if your balance at the bank is down to an overdraft of $4.11.

Don't present your pastor with a copy of "The World's Best Sermons." He might preach one of them by mistake and interfere with your Sunday morning nap.

Don't send a blank check signed to your son in college. As a student of the arts it may be that he has learned to draw.

Don't undertake to impersonate Santa Claus for the delectation of your children and try to come down a 4 by 9 flue if you have a waist measurement of fifty-seven inches.

Don't be ostentatious in your celebration of the day. The man who decorated his windows last year with wreaths woven of greenbacks dotted all over with maraschino cherries instead of holly berries is sojourning this season at Bloomingdale.

Don't appear on the public highways with a piece of mistletoe decorating your winter hat unless you are a particularly angular old maid. There are a large number of freshmen home from college lurking about, and they might—Well, you never can tell.

Don't fail to discriminate in your Christmas economies. If you are using last year's gifts for this year's presents be careful not to send to your rich maiden aunt the very same ear tabs she knitted for you last Christmas.

Don't look ungraciously on the bargain counter cigars your wife buys for you as a little surprise, but keep them either to smoke when her mother is visiting you or to augment your popularity with the electorate when you run for office. Many a man has been wafted into the state legislature on the strength of that kind of weed.

Don't be sarcastic in your choice of gifts for those you love. It is all right to send a copy of the Payne tariff bill, bound in pigskin, to your member of congress or a barrel of sand to your grocer, but it is bad policy to send your wife a rolling pin labeled "A Woman's Club For Mother to Spend Her Afternoons At." She might insist upon your joining it some night on your return from your own club in a defenseless condition.

Don't make pre-Christmas promises that you do not intend to fulfill. It is not good form to promise your daughter a ring and then give her a muffin ring or to tell your son, who is fond of motoring, that he shall have a new machine for Christmas and then present him with a vacuum cleaner or a newfangled automatic potato reaper.

Don't fail to investigate closely the antecedents of any strange Santa Clauses that turn up unexpectedly in your household after midnight. There are several impostors about impersonating the good old chap who are entirely unauthorized to represent him and who have no standing whatsoever in the Yuletide union. If they stir your heart to action give them what you have for them quickly and without stint, lest, actuated by the spirit of the hour, they get in their gifts first.—Puck.

Hard on the Mare.

Twice as the bus slowly wended its way up the steep Cumberland Gap the door at the rear opened and slammed. At first those inside paid little heed, but the third time they demanded to know why they should be disturbed in this fashion.

"Whist!" cautioned the driver. "Doan't spake so locd; she'll overhear us."

"Who?"

"The mare. Spake low! Shure Of'm desavin th' crayture? Every toime she 'ears th' door close she thinks wan o' yez is gettin' down ter walk up th' hill, an' that sort a' raises her sperrits."—Success Magazine.

Soon.

Tourist (in Venetian hotel)—Boy, call a motorboat!

Boy—Nothing doing in that line, sir; the chauffeurs are on strike.

Tourist—Suffering publics! What are they striking for?

Boy—They want all gondolas relegated to the crosstown canals and the speed limit of motorboats increased to thirty miles an hour.—Sunday Illustrated Magazine.

Trying to Help.

Hotel Clerk (to rural guest closing front entrance)—Hey, there! What are you trying to do? Uncle Eben—Don't git excited, young fellow! I jes' thought, seeing as how I was prob'ly the last one in tonight, I'd do the right thing and lock the doors 'fore going to bed!—Puck.

For that dull Feeling after eating.

I have used Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets for some time and can testify that they have done me more good than any tablets I have ever used. My trouble was a dull heavy feeling after eating.—DAVID FREEMAN, Kemp, Nova Scotia. These tablets strengthen the stomach and improve the digestion. They also regulate the liver and bowels. They are far superior to pills but cost no more. Get a free sample at all dealer's drug store and see what a splendid medicine it is.

MAN IN THE MIDDLE

"That was the proudest moment of my life," said Summers at the gathering of Confederate veterans.

"What moment?" asked Venable.

"The moment when General Lee referred to me in flattering terms, which, I confess, I did not deserve."

"What? General Lee referred to you? When? How?"

"It was during the fighting before Richmond. One night just before 'taps' I lighted a fire and was making some coffee"—

"Coffee? Chicory, you mean. We had no coffee," interrupted Venable.

"I say coffee, and I mean coffee."

"When did you get it?"

"In a Yankee camp we had walked over during the day. Well, as I was saying, just as the coffee began to emit its delicious odors the sergeant called out, 'Summers, you're wanted.' 'And you,' 'And you,' speaking to different men of our company."

"I was there," said Venable. "I remember perfectly. He called me too."

"There were a dozen of us," Summers went on, "assembled in an orchard"—

"An apple orchard?"

"Yes, an apple orchard. Well, the sergeant ordered us to fall in and marched us to the colonel's headquarters. The officer of the guard was there with several of his men and among them a fellow—I don't know who he was, but he didn't belong to our company or to the regiment. The colonel looked us over, and we were taken, the stranger along with us, to General Lee."

"And drawn up in line before his tent," put in Venable, "the stranger between you and me."

"I have forgotten about the stranger," Summers went on, "but I remember that General Lee came out and looked at us as if searching for some one. Presently his eye lighted on me, and he said:

"'That's the man. I wish I had a dozen like him. I could use them all.'

"With that he went back into his tent, and we were marched to camp."

"Do you mean to tell me," said Venable, "that all these years you have thought the general referred to you?"

"Of course he did."

"Why, he not only looked at me, but he pointed at me."

"You?"

"Yes, I."

"Well, now, I like that. Whatever put it into your stupid noddle that he referred to you?"

"Because shortly before I had been detailed, as his orderly, and when I left him he commended me for my faithful attention."

"And I had held his horse under fire while he climbed to an eminence to get a look at the enemy. I tell you, it was hot down there in the hollow, the shells shrieking over my head."

Summers got up from his chair and stalked about with his hands in his pockets, glaring like a tiger.

"I'm sorry to destroy the illusion of a lifetime," remarked Venable, "but truth is mighty and must prevail."

"The egotism of some people if fired at an enemy would have more effect than a machine gun."

"The self esteem of others is worse than a charge of dynamite."

At this moment a white headed man entered. The veterans made him welcome, placing a glass before him. He filled his pipe and sat smoking in that stolid fashion especially to be noticed among the German people.

"We're glad you've come, Markheim," said one of the assembled veterans, "not only because we love our enemy, but we needed some one to stop a wrangle between Summers and Venable."

"Vat wrangle?" asked the old man.

"I'll state the case, and you, being a Union veteran and consequently impartial, may be able to decide between them."

"Vell, go on."

"One night when we were fighting McClellan before Richmond Summers and Venable were marched with a squad of a dozen men to General Lee's tent. They were drawn up in line. The general looked them over and said: 'That's the man. I wish I had a dozen like him. I could use them all.' Summers claims that the general referred to him, since he had served him faithfully as orderly. Venable claims the honor, since he had held the general's horse under fire. Which is right?"

"Neider. Sheneral Lee point to me. I vas der man in der middle."

"You the man in the middle!" cried Summers. "What were you doing there?"

"I vas a spy."

"A spy!" cried the company in a breath. "Tell us about it."

"You see," said Markheim, "I vas a young feller shust come from Shermany, und I didn't know vat to do ven I got to dis country, so I vent into der Union army. Von day my captain dells me Sheneral McClellan vants a man to go to Richmond to see how many of you fellers dere vas. I comt, und I see Sheneral Lee, und I talks mit him. Den I vas arrested. Sheneral Lee vas a ferry conscientious man und vouldn't identify me unless he could bick me oudt from udder men. Next day he send for me, und I tell him I don't care nottings about der national troubles und if he let me off I go vork a farm in Nort' Carolina. I been vorkin' dot farm ever since till I comt here last week."

"By thunder!" exclaimed the company.

"I nefer vants to be der man in der middle again. If it hadn't been for the kind heart of Sheneral Lee I vould haf been in der middle of a guard, vith a rope around my neck. Ve trink to Sheneral Lee!"

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

His Apology.

A recent refusal by a member of the English parliament to withdraw "one comma" of what he had said about a member of the government recalls the fact that Richard Brinsley Sheridan once declined to punctuate an apology. In the house of commons one day Sheridan gave an opponent the lie direct. Called upon to apologize, the offender replied:

"Mr. Speaker, I said the honorable member was a liar it is true and I am sorry for it."

The insulted party was not satisfied and said so.

"Sir," retorted Sheridan, "the honorable member can interpret the terms of my statement according to his ability, and he can put punctuation marks where it pleases him."

Poets' Licenses.

The poet was sick at heart. He had submitted one of his very best productions to an unfeeling editor, who had rebuffed him in these gentle words:

"I wish there was a law about poets' licenses like the dog license law. If I had my way a poet would have to take out a license every year and those who didn't would be killed."—New York Press.

Her Little Composition.

A class was reciting in a school.

"Who can give me," said the teacher, "a sentence in which the words 'bitter end' are used?"

Up jumped a little girl excitedly. "I can, teacher. 'The cat ran under the bureau and the dog ran after her and bit her end.'"

Method in His Generosity.

My husband is awfully good natured. I gave him a beautiful box of cigars for his birthday, and he only smoked one himself and gave all the rest away to his friends.—London Opinion.

Strong Evidence.

"What makes you think he had been to a drinking party?"

"He came home," sobbed the young wife, "wearing a phonograph horn for a hat."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Always Happens.

A man who goes around with a chip on his shoulder will finally encounter as big a fool as he is and there will be a fight.—Atchison Globe.

The sense of smartness is sure to make a man shallow.

Another Chilton County Citizen convinced that Dr. Higgins, at Clanton, understands the human eye. When a few days ago a certain citizen of Chilton came into Dr. Higgins' Office and his case was diagnosed examined and pronounced toxic amblíopice, the eye sight being distroyed by excessive use of tobacco or toxicants. The patient doubting as to Dr. Higgins' understanding his business. This certain citizen paid his R. R. fair to Atlanta to see Dr. Calhound, one of the state of Georgia's great eye specialist about his eyes and the above citizen of Chilton county again called and when Dr. Higgins asked what he could do a second time for the patient. The gentleman only stated as follows: "Doctor I just called in to congratulate you by telling you that I have been to Atlanta and saw Dr. Calhound and he said you were exactly right about what is the matter with my eyes etc and I thought, Dr. Higgins you, being a young man, would appreciate receiving congratulations on your work by an old skilled eye Doctor from other states besides Alabama.

Now after reading the above and many other congratulations extended to Dr. Higgins, such as that of Mrs. J. M. Powe, near Montervallo who said she would not take $50.00 for a pair of glasses Dr. Higgins charged her $4.00 for; that letter written by Judge Reynolds; that letter received from Camie Moore, Verbena Route 2; that congratulation from Mr. Wells, Verbena Route 2; the one I heard of from the pair I fitted, H. B. Clever, Verbena and by calling in at Dr. Higgins' office and getting the address of 139 more if then, you are not or can not be convinced that Dr. Higgins understands fitting glasses to the human eye. Why you just pay your R. R. fare to Atlanta and be convinced as the above patient did. The R. R. Co. will appreciate your "pocket change."

Yours for a long life without trouble and saving your R. R. change. Dr. J. V. Higgins, the up-to-date and reliable watch and eye man.

Another Chilton County Citizen convinced that Dr. Higgins, at Clanton, understands the human eye. When a few days ago a certain citizen of Chilton came into Dr Higgins' Office and his case was diagnosed examined and pronounced toxic ambliopice, the eye sight being distroyed by excessive use of tobacco or toxicants. The patient doubting as to Dr. Higgins' understanding his business. This certain citizen paid his R. R. fair to Atlanta to see Dr. Calhound, one of the state of Georgia's great eye specialist about his eyes and the above citizen of Chilton county returned and when Dr. Higgins asked what he could do a second time for the patient. The gentleman only stated as follows: "Doctor I just called in to congratulate you by telling you that I have been to Atlanta and saw Dr. Calhound and he told you were exactly right about what is the matter with my eyes and I thought, Dr. Higgins you, being a young man, would appreciate receiving congratulations on your work by an old skilled eye Doctor from other states besides Alabama.

Now after reading the above and many other congratulations extended to Dr. Higgins, such as that of Mrs. J. M. Powe, near Montervallo who said she would not take $50.00 for a pair of glasses Dr. Higgins charged her $4.00 for; that letter written by Judge Reynolds; that letter received from Camic Moors, Verbena Route 2; that congratulation from Mr. Wells, Verbena Route 2; the one I heard of from the pair I fitted, H. B. Olever, Verbena and by calling in at Dr. Higgins' office and getting the address of 139 more if then, you are not or can not be convinced that Dr. Higgins understands fiitiug glasses to the human eye. Why you just pay your R. R. fare to Atlanta and be convinced as the above patient did. The R. R. Co. will appreciate your "pocket change."

Yours for a long life without trouble and saving your R. R. change. Dr. J. V. Higgins, the up-to-date and reliable watch and eye man.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. Are We Thankful for Literature.

The numerous things we have to be thankful for this afternoon in this great universe, none to my mind, should occupy a more important place than literature. Let's confine it to some extent, "good literature." There is a great deal of literature thrown upon the world that is corrupt an vil. ruin the minds of all who read it. This literature should be forbidden to enter into the home in this fair land of ours. A very safe way to judge a man is to take peep into his library. By the reading matter found there we are furnished the key which unlocks the door and reveals to us all that he is, for man is profoundly influenced by what he reads. Literature, whether good or bad, is mind-food; the growth of a man's mind depends altogether upon the kind of food given it. Many a man who has become great in the sight of God and man owes his greatness to the good literature read during his early life. Could we be otherwise than thankful for such lines. Our best literature stand as the indestructible imperishable monuments of some of the most colossal intellects the world has ever beheld. Across its pages we become acquainted with the greatest characters of all ages, and from them can learn the elements that goes to make real true success. This information could not be gathered if were not for the literature which we are blessed with. Good literature holds its place and deservingly so, as one of the leading agencies, in the moral and intellectual up-lift of our people.

A good book carefully read, is oftimes sufficient means to draw a boy or girl into the roads that leads to the dizzy heights of achievements of which he or she dared not dream before. Good literature is one of the countless blessings for which we should lift our hearts in gratitude to God on this glad thanksgiving day. It is more valuable than the gold mines of California, the gold fields of Alabama, or the cotton fields of Texas, and one of the beautiful thinds about it, and one to be the most thankful for is that the very best literature is in reach of the poorer classes. There is no excuse for parents allowing the minds of their children to be starved for want of proper nourishment, There are great improvements along this line, people are awakening to their duty and homes are being supplied with brain food, in the form of good literature. Can we think of the great changes, without our hearts within us swelling with gratitude to our maker. The purest founts of inspirations that ever flowed are conceiled within the leaves of the best books. Where could we seek to find the purest and noblest inspirations if not among the good literature of the world? Just ask the question, who are our best and truest friends. Good books are among our best friends at all times; they stand ever ready to serve us. To them we can go for comfort and sympathy in time of trouble, for information when we are ignorant, for diversion when we are seeking recreation, for inspiration when low spirited, and as heart-food and soul-food and mind food in time of hunger. Did not Dr, Evans say, "In my solitary hours my books are my friends, they are friends who I have trusted and who I can rely upon, they are the friends that made me what I am." Look at our own fair homes, what has literature done for us. Ten years ago were we farming on the same plan as we are to day? No, why has the change come: Because we have instructive agricultural literature, which is being put into the hands of the farmers, This literature is pointing to them the best methods and ways, which is being carried out. After looking at the wonderful things that have been wrought by literature, can we not say and thankfully say too with Bowning, "I certainly have cause for great rejoicing."

LIFE SENTENCE IS GIVEN WENDLING

Found Guilty On Circumstantial Evidence at Louisville.

PROTESTED HIS INNOCENCE

The Evidence, However, Pointed So Strongly to Janitor as the Slayer of Alma Kellner That Jury Had Little Trouble in Reaching Agreement.

Joseph Wendling, at Louisville, Ky., was found guilty by a jury of the murder of 8-year-old Alma Kellner and his punishment fixed at life imprisonment.

The verdict came after a day spent in argument by attorneys and the reading of the instructions of Judge Gregory. Although there were four possible verdicts the jury might have returned under the instructions of the court, the verdict was merely "murder."

The evidence presented against Wendling was purely circumstantial. Since his arrest and throughout his trial, he denied any knowledge of the fate of the Kellner child.

Witnesses testified, however, that Wendling, the janitor at St. John's Catholic church, was seen in the church the morning Alma Kellner last went there to mass. The child was never seen again, and months later charred and dismembered portions of her body were found hidden beneath the church music room.

Alma Kellner was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Kellner, of Louisville, and a niece of Frank Fehr, brewer, who spent much time and money in the search for the child and in the prosecution of Wendling.

The trial has been one of the most celebrated ever held in the state.

91,152,490 SOULS.

Tentative Estimate of Population of the United States.

The population of the United States should be 91,153,490, if the rate of increase shown by states on which complete returns have been received and tabulated by the census office is maintained.

Counting New Mexico and Arizona for present purposes as states, the full returns of the enumeration under the thirteenth census have been tabulated for three out of forty-nine and the District of Columbia. They show a grand total of 66,355,178, as against 57,299,626, for the same area in 1900. This is a gain of just 20 per cent. over the 75,994,575, indicated by the census of 1900. A corresponding increase for the sixteen remaining states would bring the figures for the entire country to the number stated.

The states not yet announced are Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montana, New Jersey, North Dakota, North Carolina, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Washington, Wyoming and Wisconsin. Of these, it is expected that Texas and Washington will show very large increases and that Georgia, New Jersey, Montana, Utah, Wyoming and the Dakotas will go beyond the average, so there is little doubt that the exact grand totals will be even more than the present tabulation indicates. It would not be surprising if the aggregate would be almost 91,500,000, which is 1,000,000 more than has been generally estimated.

NEGRO BANDIT KILLED

Held Up Train on 'Frisco Road, But Lost His Life.

Jack Thomas, a negro, of Blytheville, Ark., turned bandit, terrorized and robbed passengers aboard a westbound St. Louis and San Francisco fast train and in the end was shot to death by A. B. Walton, railroad watchman.

The train, the St. Louis Memphis Limited, had just started across the bridge over the Mississippi on the outskirts of Memphis, when Thomas, revolver in hand, came through the doorway which separated the white and colored compartments, and in true frontier style proceeded to terrorize the passengers and rob them, when the watchman appeared upon the scene and shot Thomas through the heart. The negro tried to return the fire, but fell dead.

FIGHT WITH CRAZED MAN.

Hospital Physician Had Struggle to Save His Life.

Lying on his back in a corridor of the Pennsylvania, Pa., hospital, Dr. C. Montgomery, a resident physician, battled for his life with an insane patient, Mike Markutse, who died two hours afterward from what hospital authorities said was Bright's disease. Dr. Montgomery was summoned to the ward by cries of a nurse, who said she had been attacked by the man when she gave him medicine. The doctor hastened to quiet him, but was himself attacked.

An orderly hurried to his assistance, but was knocked down with one blow. Markutse was choking Dr. Montgomery when Superintendent J. E. Grub arrived. For fifteen minutes the struggle continued before Markutse was strapped to his bed. His death quickly followed.

MRS. MARY B. EDDY DEAD.

Leader of Christian Science Church Passes to Beyond.

Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy, founder and leader of Christian Science, died Sunday morning at her home in Chestnut Hill, Mass.

"Natural causes," explains the death, according to Dr. George L. West, a district medical examiner, who was summoned a few hours after Mrs. Eddy passed away. Later Dr. West added to his statement by saying that the more immediate cause was probably pneumonia.

The news of Mrs. Eddy's death was made known simultaneously by Judge Clifford P. Smith, first reader of the church, at the close of the morning service, and by Alfred Farlow, of the Christian Science publication committee, in a statement to the press.

INFRINGEMENT OF ANTI-TRUST LAWS

Such Is Charged Against Three Corporations.

INDICTMENTS ARE FOUND

Alleged Infraction Charged by Federal Courts Said to Be Based on Reported Shipments at Lower Rates—Two Individuals Also Indicted.

After hearing testimony for several days, the federal grand jury of the United States court for the southern district of Georgia, at Savannah, handed down indictments charging an infringement of the anti-trust laws on the part of three large corporations and two individuals. The Atlantic Coast Line railway and Seaboard Air Line railway were each jointly indicted with the Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company for specific violations of the Sherman anti-trust and Elkins laws, while Harvie Miller and Morris Miller, grain merchants, and members of the firm of L. F. Miller & Sons, of Philadelphia, were the individuals to feel the wrath of the government. It was anticipated that the corporations and Harvie Miller would be present, the rumors coming from an authoritative source, but no expectation existed in connection with Morris Miller.

The Merchants and Miners' Transportation Company was indicted three times, once as a sole offender and twice in connection with the Seaboard Air Line and Atlantic Coast Line railways.

Morris F. Miller and Harvie Miller, of Philadelphia, were immediately arrested and placed under bonds of $25,000 each.

The indictments are lengthy documents, covering in one instance 75 pages, the others vary in length down to 25 pages. In each indictment specific allegations are made of the acts which constitute the alleged infractions of the anti-trust laws.

Dates are given when the defendants are alleged to have made shipments over the lines named at rates less than those on file with the interstate commerce commission.

DIVISION OF BAPTISTS.

Northern and Southern Conventions Suggested.

A proposition for a division of the Baptists of Georgia into two conventions similar in working scope to the Methodist conferences of Georgia, is likely to become one of the strong suggestions for a solution of the question of moving Mercer university from Macon. At least one prominent and influential Baptist minister has proposed the plan in order to give the Baptists of south Georgia an opportunity to maintain their hold on the present institution at its present site.

It will be urged that the northern half of the state can better support an entirely new branch of the university, located where they desire, and a division of the scope of work of the university will better enable the Baptists to reach all patronage. It is believed it will mean a much enlarged usefulness for the institution.

SUGAR TRUST MADE DEFENDANT IN SUIT

Trust Is Attacked as Lawless Combination.

SHERMAN ACT VIOLATED

Suit Is Expected to Rank in Importance With Those of Standard Oil Company and the American Tobacco Company, Now Pending.

A dispatch from New York says: The federal government has begun one of its most important actions against great corporations, which are said to have violated the Sherman anti-trust law. Henry A. Wise, United States district attorney, filed in the United States district court for the southern district of New York a petition asking for the dissolution of the American Sugar Refining company and twenty-nine other corporations, which compose the so-called sugar trust. The petition charges an illegal combination in restraint of trade and asks from the court relief in whatever form may be necessary, including a receivership if deemed advisable.

The thirty companies composing the sugar combine have an aggregate capitalization of $230,000,000 and control a large percentage of the output of sugar in this country. The combine is able, the government alleges, to fix prices arbitrarily. The petition charges that for years the companies have violated the law and have oppressed competitors and ground them out of existence. Railroad rebates and customs frauds are mentioned as devices which were employed to raise the combine to the commanding position which it occupies at present.

The present suit, which it is estimated will be in the courts for two years before a final adjudication is reached, is the result of many weeks of preparation. District Attorney Wise made his investigation under the directions of Attorney General Wickersham and spent several days in Washington in conferring with the attorney general on the final plans.

The suit is expected to rank in importance with those of the government against the Standard Oil company and The American Tobacco company, which are now pending in the supreme court.

PRIZE RING FATALITIES.

Unprecedented Number of Deaths During Year 1910.

In all the history of the prize ring, from Tom Cribbs' time down to the present time, there has never been recorded in a single year anything approaching the number of deaths directly due to boxing contests that have occurred thus far this season.

The death at Presque Isle, Maine, of Billy Dunning, one of the few boxers who could point to a draw with Jack Johnson, the world's heavyweight champion, made the sixteenth fatality in the prize ring in 1910, while there are at least two other boxers now lying at this point in hospitals, one being the veteran, Andy Daly, famous ten years ago.

These fatalities of the prize ring have extended from the eastern coast of Maine to the Pacific ocean, and as far south as Bluefields, Nicaraugua, where a corporal in Uncle Sam's service met his death in a friendly contest with the gloves. In the past, two or three deaths in a season from boxing have been sufficient to attract general attention, while many years not a single fatality has been reported.

The total of sixteen to date in 1910 is unprecedented. In the majority of instances the victims have been experienced boxers, whose injuries were received in scheduled bouts, before recognized "fight clubs."

DR. WARREN DIES.

Rector of Trinity Church, New Orleans, Passes Away.

Rev. Dr. Beverley E. Warner, rector of Trinity church of New Orleans, and one of the best known Episcopal clergymen of the country, died at his home in that city Sunday. The immediate cause of his death was heart failure, following a brief attack of la grippe. The announcement from Trinity pulpit to the congregation that their pastor was dead brought forth a touching manifestation of grief, men and women weeping audibly.

Dr. Warner was born in Jersey City, N. J., October 14, 1855. He was ordained a minister of the Protestant Episcopal church in 1879. He was for some years rector of St. Stephen's church in Philadelphia, and had been pastor of Trinity church, New Orleans, for many years. In addition to his attainments in the church, Dr. Warner was well known as an author on literary and sociological topics. Among his writings are:

"Troubled Waters," a novel; "English History in Shakespeare's Plays," and "The Young Man in Modern Life."

MIRACULOUS ESCAPES.

Piano Blown to Bits, But Duet Player Uninjured.

A gas explosion in a cellar at Brockton, N. Y., reduced to kindling wood a piano on which two young women were playing a duet in the room overhead. Both almost miraculously escaped injury.

Two young men who were listening to the music were blown into the street, and the noise was heard a mile away. Ten other persons had narrow escapes.

GEORGE H. MOSES.

Minister to Greece Asked to Report to Washington in Person.

COPPER COMPANY WINS.

Fighting for Injunction, Capitalists Lose Case.

By affirming the decision of the lower court, the supreme court of the United States denied J. Harvey Ladew and other capitalists of New York and West Virginia relief in the federal courts from the alleged nuisance caused by the operations of the smelters of the Tennessee Copper Company in Tennessee.

Ladew and his associates own large timber interests, aggregating in all 2,400 acres, in Fannin, Gilmer and Pickens counties, Georgia.

Just across the line in Tennessee are the smelters of the Tennessee Copper Company and other companies, the sulphurous fumes from which, it is claimed, have been ruining the timber belonging to Ladew and his associates in Georgia.

Several years ago the state of Georgia began proceedings to stop the alleged destruction. The first step taken by Georgia resulted in an announcement from the supreme court of the United States that it would issue an injunction upon the request of the state for the abatement of the alleged nuisance. This application was not made and Ladew and his associates began the fight as individuals for an injunction.

The circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Tennessee dismissed the petition for an injunction on the ground that the action for the abatement of a nuisance was not a suit of a local nature, to enforce a claim against real estate, and as neither of the parties were domiciled within the district, the court had no jurisdiction. From this decision an appeal was taken to the supreme court. The court has approved the finding of the lower court.

DR. COOK HEARD FROM.

Hunger-Crazed He Believed He Reached North Pole.

Dr. Frederick A. Cook, who now confesses that he does not know whether he reached the north pole or not, had no easy task in disposing of what he describes as "The Story of Cook's Trip to the North Pole," according to reports reaching New York from London.

The Brooklyn explorer, it is stated, is living in seclusion in an obscure boarding house in Bloomsbury, a London suburb, and there had written the story which he hopes will restore him to a degree of favor in this country.

It appears that for weeks Dr. Cook, eager to return to his home in Brooklyn, sought through a literary bureau to sell his latest story to London magazine publishers. One thousand dollars, it is said, was asked for the story, which the London editors declined to accept.

Cook, in his story, which is soon to appear in this country, asserts that, half-crazed with hunger, he believed he had reached the top of the world. It was learned that Dr. Cook was in the United States early in November, and came here to conclude the arrangements with Hampton's Magazine for the publication of his story. He came by way of Canada and met the publishers at Troy, N. Y.

After concluding the arrangements for the publishing of his confession, Dr. Cook returned to Europe.

FREIGHT RATES ON W. & A.

Commission Decides Lease Not Complying With Lease Terms.

It is said that unless the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis railroad, lessee of the Western & Atlantic railroad, which is the property of the State of Georgia, sees fit to abide by the terms of its lease in the matter of freight rates from Atlanta to Chattanooga it may become necessary for the governor to declare the lease void and take over the road.

After thorough investigation, the railroad commission has reached the decision that the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad Company is not complying with the terms of the lease in this important particular and will immediately certify the case to Governor Brown for whatever action he may deem advisable.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS. A sensation has been created in political circles by the announcement that Jim Howard, who was convicted and sentenced to death for the murder of Governor Goebel and was afterwards pardoned by Governor Willson along with Caleb Powers, has determined to enter the race for the republican nomination for state senator from the seventeenth district, to succeed Senator Joe F. Bosworth, of Middlesboro.

Sixty-three years of service in one position is the record that taxes credulity, but nevertheless it is that of Thomas Harrison, who has just celebrated that anniversity of his employment in the naval observatory at Washington, D. C. Mr. Harrison is 82 years old and still hale and hearty.

The population of the state of Virginia is 2,061,612, according to statistics of the thirteenth census. This is an increase of 207,428, or 11.2 per cent. over 1,854,184 in 1900. The increase from 1890 to 1900 was 198,204, or 12 per cent.

A Knoxville, Tenn., dispatch says: Copper Hill, a little town of 1,500 people, located in the famous Ducktown copper basin, was almost completely wiped out by fire which started in the second story of Frank Jones' store, used as a boarding house.

At Franklin, Ga., the Bank of Heard County was entered by burglars, the safe dynamited and $7,900 in cash taken. It is the belief of the bank people that the work was done by experts. A reward of $100 has been offered by the Georgia bankers for the arrest of the criminals.

A fleet of more than 200 light boats and barges, laden with 4,000,000 bushels of coal, was released by rising water from Ohio river points, after a five months' tie-up, and proceeded south, to the relief of down-river manufacturing centers. Several thousand tons of iron products were also shipped.

Fighting their way through dense smoke and blinding flame in a burning oil house on the Baltimore and Ohio railway, Howard Vinkendoff and Wilbert Ellery were burned to death at Pittsburg, Pa. The men had worked all Sunday and part of the night and had gone to sleep in the oil house. Sparks from a passing engine fired the little building and they could be seen running around to find the door before they fell.

It is announced that John Berard Foster, who died in an insane asylum at White Plains, N. Y., after being confined there for nearly 50 years, left an estate of nearly $500,000. His father, a prominent New Yorker of 75 years ago, willed him property worth $100,000. The son was soon afterwards committed to the asylum and a nephew was appointed his guardian. Under the nephew's administration the property increased greatly in value.

A CHAPTER OF CASUALTIES. In an engagement near Chihuahua, Mexico, which lasted from 9 o'clock in the morning until 2 in the afternoon, six hundred federal troops routed a force of four hundred Madorists, driving them repeatedly from strong positions and compelling them to take to the wooded mountains. The revolutionists lost fifteen killed and many wounded. There were no fatalities on the federal side, but several, including three officers, were wounded. General Navarro was in command of the federal troops.

Fire of undetermined origin destroyed the four-story store building of the Pidgeon-Thomas Company, on North Broad street, near Adams avenue, Memphis, Tenn., causing a loss estimated at $150,000. For a time the fire threatened to spread, but was finally brought under control, after two hours' effort, without damage to adjoining buildings. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

Daniel Banks, aged 22, a seaman of the lightship Relief, was drowned at Charleston, S. C., off the government docks. Banks was trying to make his way back to the lightship through a choppy sea when the boat was capsized. The fishermen on the wharf rushed to the boats moored to the docks and tried to get to him, but before it could be manned he was drowned.

Samuel F. Perkins dropped 125 feet at Kansas City, while being supported in the air by a string of kites. The top kite collapsed in a 60-mile gale and Perkins was only saved from serious injury by the parachute effect of the smaller kites.

Mrs. Julia Myatt, famous in her day as an actress, and particularly in the part of Topsy in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," died at her home in New Haven, Conn., at the age of 87 years. She played the part for years. Included in the Myatt company in later years were her two daughters, Helen, now dead, and Mrs. Warren, now living in Bridgeport.

With 16 rat bites on her baby, Lola Lewis, the 2-year-old daughter of H. Lewis, of Washington City, is dying of blood poisoning. A short time since Mrs. Lewis was awakened by the child's cries. Lighting the gas, the mother saw a big rat disappear. A physician was summoned and the wounds were cauterized, but the child did not escape infection.

Cutting off his own hand with a razor after it had been crushed in a corn shredder, J. Bruce Vaughan, at Eureka Mills, Charlotte county, Virginia, carefully bandaged the stump and calmly awaited the arrival of a surgeon to put the finishing touches to the operation.

Little Mary Houseal, the 2-year-old daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Edward Swinder, died as the result of having swallowed a number of matches at Newberry, S. C. The child, while alone at a neighbor's house, ate the matches and the fact was not discovered until she had swallowed them. Medical aid was at once summoned, but all to no avail.

A. W. Link, a traveling salesman for the Great Northern Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, committed suicide at Roanoke, Va., in a hotel by shooting himself in the head. Death was instantaneous. Nothing is known as to the man's home or family. He was about 35 years of age.

John Ferguson, a farmer, living near Anderville, S. C., was shot and killed by his son, Jim. The alleged trouble was over a dividing boundary line between farms. Young Ferguson was brought to Allbeville. He claims his father was cutting him and that he was forced to shoot.

Mack Dopson, a young white man, was found dead near the track of the Interstate Lumber Company's logging road near Quitman, Ga. He was horribly mangled by the logging train. No one witnessed the accident. Dopson was an employee of the lumber company and very well connected.

The hunting season of 1910 cost 11 lives, according to statistics from 31 states collected by the Chicago Tribune. This is considerably more than were killed during any previous season of which there is a record. The list of 1909 was 87; in 1908, 87; in 1907, 82, and in 1906, 74.

A. G. McGhee, a policeman on the Birmingham force, was struck by a taxicab driven by Robert Burns, white, and was so badly hurt that he died a couple of hours later at St. Vincent's hospital, where he was taken immediately after the accident.

Fifteen fishermen are supposed to have been drowned off Charleston, S. C., their smacks having been missing for several days. A report that a smack was sighted floating bottom upward.

A woman giving her name as Anna O'Neal, and saying she came from Charleston, S. C., died at the Savannah hospital from a dose of poison taken evidently with suicidal intent.

A $10,000 loss was caused at Bay Minette, Ala., when the Hotel Planter, the largest hotel in town, was burned to the ground. The fire was beyond control when discovered.

American Boy Scout Band Leading Parade.

When the American Boy Scouts of Philadelphia paraded a short time ago they were headed by a military band composed of boy members. They turn out 5,000 strong. Over the entire route of the three mile march hundreds of thousands of people cheered and waved flags and otherwise encouraged the lads, and as the bands broke into martial strains the lads swung along like so many veterans. Those who witnessed the parade were amazed at the soldierly appearance and the precision with which the boys performed their evolutions.

There were many features in the parade, showing the scout from the first stage to the finished product. There were Red Cross patrols, the members of which are being trained in first aid work; the bicycle patrol, composed of dispatch bearers; the girl scouts, who act as nurses, and the signal corps, composed of boys who are learned to use the semaphore and "wigwag" as well as those who are using wireless telegraphy.

With the exception of a few recruits, the boys wore the olive drab uniform. Some of them carried blankets and other camp paraphernalia, and the company was armed with rifles.

An Oddity In Numbers.

Ask some one to write in order the numbers 1 to 9, leaving out 8. Then ask him which of the figures he has written he considers least well formed. Whatever one he decides is the worst simply by 9 and use the result as a example for the line of figures. The answer will be expressed all in the figure chosen as poorest. For example, suppose 3 is considered as imperfectly formed. We will multiply 3 by 27, which is 9 times 3.

You can then say to the victim, "If you keep on practicing that way you will soon improve on 3's."

RUBBING UP THE ARMS.

Said to Have Excellent Results In Cases of Fainting.

When my wife faints, which is miserably often, says a writer in the London medical journal, the Lancet, I do not apply friction in the usual absurd way—rubbing backward and forward, which must alternately check and accelerate the passage of the blood—but, taking hold of one of her hands with my left hand, I place the thumb and finger of my right hand tight round her wrist and then pass them firmly up toward her elbow.

Having brought them back loosely to the wrist, I pass them firmly up again, and when I have repeated the operation two or three times, sometimes on both arms, I have the pleasure of hearing the ejaculation, "I feel better now." When I first had recourse to this means of resuscitating my lady she exclaimed instinctively on two different occasions, without being at all aware that I had had any particular intention, "Oh, that is what I seem to want!"

From the invariable and immediate effect of this mode of friction I flatter myself that it is not unworthy the notice of the medical practitioner in the friction of cholera patients, a process which should be much oftener resorted to and more energetically persisted in than it generally is.

GERMAN RED TAPE.

A Lesson In Picking Up Things In the Streets of Berlin.

Take care how you pick up a thing that is lost in Berlin. The other day one of our deputies going through the Prussian capital on his return from a convention at Frankfort noticed a key at the edge of the sidewalk. He picked it up to hand it to a police agent. The representative of the city police refused to take it, saying, "You should take this key to the special bureau of things that are lost."

"Very well. Where is it?"

The agent named the street.

"Is it far from here?"

"A half hour, three-quarters of an hour if you don't walk rapidly."

The deputy replaced the key on the pavement. "Some one else will pick it up," he said.

"Not at all," said the agent in a commanding tone. "You should have left it where it was, but now you are obliged to go to the bureau. If you don't I'll make a complaint against you and you'll be fined, perhaps given a day in prison. That's the law."

The deputy was compelled to obey orders. Since that day he carries his hand in his pockets.—Cri de Paris.

The Hangman's Stone.

There is a large bowlder lying in a field near Foremark, England, which is known throughout Derbyshire as the "hangman's stone." The exposed portion of the bowlder rises about six feet above the surface of the surrounding field and has a narrow ditch or indentation running across the top. The mark, so tradition says, was made in this way: A sheep thief in the dead of night, while leaning against the bowlder to rest, placed his booty above on the flat surface of the stone. The man had the sheep tied with a rope, and in its effort to escape the creature slipped on the opposite side, and the rope, catching under the thief's chin, choked him to death. The indentation in the rock was made by the friction of the rope while the dying man was engaged in an effort to extricate himself.

A GIFT FOR CHRISTMAS.

The Umbrella In a Very Up to Date Guise.

THE AEROPLANE UMBRELLA.

When in doubt give an umbrella. You'll never make a mistake if you take this advice. Men can lose as many as are given to them, and women like an umbrella nowadays to match the trotting gown, so match up a parapluie to milady's walking suit and she'll be pleased to receive it Christmas morning.

But if she likes to be up to the minute get her one of the new aeroplane styles. The illustration gives you a fine idea of the very eccentric shape of this useful article.

Germany Solves Servant Problem.

Germany with a paternal form of government has done far more than any other country to eliminate the troubles of the servant girl question. Rules have been worked out so a housewife is sure to get an honest girl and, furthermore, has a complete history of the girl before hiring her. If a woman in Germany wants a servant she goes to an employment bureau and files an application. The servant appears with her official service book, which shows when she began to work and which gives a personal description and history of herself. It shows the names of the persons for whom she has worked and the reasons for leaving. Each entry is stamped by the police and bears proof of their investigation. If the girl is dismissed she cannot lose her service book, because she would not be permitted by the police to get another job until the book was accounted for and her past record investigated. When the servant gets a new place she must report at once to the police station and have her service book stamped. In still another way has the comfort of the servant been provided for. Every Monday the servant's mistress must paste in her book a five cent stamp, which is credited to the girl's insurance fund. This means when the girl reaches a certain age she will receive a pension from the government.

College Girl Fad.

Instead of putting fancy embroidery on their shirt waists college girls are embroidering the front lapels and cuffs of their waists and the cuffs and stiff collars with plain scallops done in white or color to match the suit skirt to be worn with them, and the effect is very trig.

A Good Loser.

Arthur's, Almack's, Bootle's and White's were the chief clubs of the young men of fashion. There was play at all, and decayed noblemen and broken down senators fleeced the unwary there. Charles Fox, a dreadful gambler, lost £200,000 at play. Gibbon tells of his playing twenty-two hours at a sitting and losing £500 an hour. That indomitable punster said that the greatest pleasure in life after winning was losing. What hours, what nights, what health did he waste over the devil's books! "I was going to say what peace of mind, but he took his losses very philosophically. After an awful night's play he was found on a sofa tranquilly reading an eclogue of Virgil.—From Thackeray's "The Four Georges."

The Poster.

The poster may be said to date from 1830, when a design by Leiance was used in France to advertise a book, "Commend 'Meurent les Femmes." His example was very quickly followed, most of the early designs being printed in black on white or tinted paper. The color poster began about 1860 and attained to the dignity of a high art with Jules Cheret, "the father of the pictured placard." The first English theatrical placard to attract widespread attention was one of Fred Walker's advertising a dramatic version of "The Woman In White."—London Chronicle.

A Hurry Call.

The political boss of a small city drove his buckboard at top speed down the main street on the morning of an election.

Those Dear Girls.

Young Bride—I didn't accept Harry the first time he proposed. Miss Rival—No, dear; you weren't there.—Boston Transcript.

An Unreasonable Friend.

Several young artists in Philadelphia are telling a story on another wielder of the brush who is a fellow member in a little club. One of the rules of the club is that each member must keep his finished paintings up to a certain number. The artist on whom the story is told is noted for his indolence. He keeps up to the requirement regarding the number, but never exceeds it. But for his distaste for work the artist probably would be very comfortably fixed financially, as he has considerable talent. As a matter of fact, he is usually on the edge of penury. Several days ago, when his exchequer was unusually low, a friend visited him in his studio. The friend looked at several of the paintings, while the artist lay on a couch, smoking a pipe.

"I like this," the friend finally said, pointing to one of them. He named a good price which he was willing to pay. The artist looked at him mournfully.

"Aw, don't do that," he said. "If you do I'll have to paint another."—Philadelphia Times.

Ancient Bridge Superstition.

A primitive notion existed among the Romans and other races that a bridge was an offense and injury to the river god, as it saved people from being drowned while fording or swimming across and robbed the deity of a certain number of victims which were his due. For many centuries in Rome propitiatory offerings of human victims were made every year to the Tiber. Men and women were drowned by being bound and flung from the wooden Sublician bridge, which, 'till nearly the end of the republican period, was the one and only bridge across the Tiber in Rome.

A Reader Cures His Constipation—Try it Free

Simple way for any family to retain the good health of all its members

The editors of "Health Hints" and "Questions and Answers" have one question that is put to them more often than any other, and which, strangely enough, they find the most difficult to answer. That is "How can I cure my constipation?"

Dr. Caldwell, an eminent specialist in diseases of the stomach, liver and bowels has looked the whole field over, has practised the specialty for forty years and is convinced that the ingredients contained in what is called Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has the best claim to attention from constipated people.

Its success in the cure of stubborn constipation has done much to displace the use of salts, waters, strong cathartics and such things. Syrup Pepsin, by training the stomach and bowel muscles to again do their work naturally, and with its tonic ingredients strengthening the nerves, brings about a lasting cure. Among its strongest supporters are Mr. John Cravelins, of 98 Milwaukee Ave., Detroit, Mich., Mr. J. A. Vernon of Oklahoma City and thousands of others. It can be obtained of any druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, or if you want to try it first a free sample bottle can be obtained by writing the doctor.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specialized in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 602 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

Saved from Awful Death.

How an appalling calamity in his family was prevented is told by A. D. Mcdonald, of Fayetteville, N. C. R. F. D. No. 8. "My sister had consumption," he writes "and was very thin and pale, had no appetite and seemed to grow weaker every day, as all remedies failed till Dr. King's New Discovery was tried, and so completely cured her, that she has not been troubled with a cough since. It's the best medicine I ever saw or heard of," for coughs, colds, la grippe, asthma, croup, hemorrhage, all throat troubles, it has no equal. 50c. $1.00. Trial bottle free. Pale-Faced Women

You ladies, who have pale faces, sallow complexions, dark circles under eyes, drawn features and tired, worn-out expressions, you need a tonic.

The tonic you need is Cardui, the woman's tonic.

It is the best tonic for women, because its ingredients are specifically adapted for women's needs. They act on the womanly organs and help to give needed strength and vitality to the worn-out womanly frame.

Cardui is a vegetable medicine. It contains no minerals, no iron, no potassium, no lime, no glycerin, no dangerous, or habit-forming drugs of any kind.

It is perfectly harmless and safe, for young and old to use.

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

"After my doctor had done all he said he could for me," writes Mrs. Wm. Hilliard, of Mountainburg, Ark., "I took Cardui, on the advice of a friend, and it helped me so much. "Before taking Cardui, I had suffered from female troubles for five years, but since taking it, I am in good health. "I think there is some of the best advice in your book that I ever saw." Your druggist sells Cardui. Try it.

Cruelty to Women.

We wonder what death the man will die or what tortured life he will be caused to lead who discovered the little "trick" by which a woman's age can be ascertained beyond a doubt—that is to say, while her health is normal. The only instrument required is an ordinary watch. The wrist of the lady whose age is in question is the telltale, for when you count her pulse and it registers sixty-nine beats per minute you know that she is between twenty and twenty-five years old. During the next five years seventy-one beats go to the minute, and the "femme de trente ans" and over is entitled to seventy throbs. It is a pity the man of science who established these facts is not more exact when dealing with the women of riper age, for, according to rumor and tradition, it is only after she is thirty that a woman begins to leave off having birthdays.—Westminster Gazette.

Dropping Coaches on the Run.

The ingenious means by which one of the great railroad systems of England drops passenger coaches off at intermediate stations without slowing up the locomotive, even for a fraction of a second, in its speed of sixty or more miles an hour is called the "slip coach" system and is described in Popular Mechanics. It is a system never tried in America and consists in dropping, or "slipping," one or more of the rear coaches just before the station is reached. Undoubtedly many American tourists in England after alighting at their destination have been amazed to discover that the coach which they occupied was still beside them, while the locomotive and the remainder of the train were nowhere to be seen.

As George Sees the Peers.

"David Lloyd George," said the miner from Wales, "is a very witty speaker. I've heard him many a time in Carnarvon. Speaking in Welsh, he once ridiculed in Carnarvon the house of lords. He said the average peer thought so much of himself at family prayers he always made one well known passage run:

"'Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of lords forever.'"—London Globe.

His Wish.

"Life is something of a game after all," said the cynical person.

"Perhaps," replied Mr. Meekton, "but I wish Henrietta wouldn't regard it as bridge, with me forever playing opposite as dummy." — Washington Star.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The first week of circuit court was concluded last Saturday, the Grand jury made its report and court adjourned.

REPORT OF GRAND JURY.

To Hon. W. W. Pearson, Judge of the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit:—

We, the Grand Jury regularly empanuelled and sworn for the fall term 1910, of the Circuit Court of Chilton county, Alabama, beg leave to make the following report:—

We have investigated 58 alleged violations of the law, examined 160 witnesses and returned 29 true bills.

We are glad to report that general lawlessness seems to be on the decrease. The prohibition law, so far as we can gather, to be violated generally; but we are unable to get such evidence as will warrant indictment.

The general Conditions of the public roads is about as usual, however, there are instances in which the overseers seem to have been derelict and have failed to work them in the manner needed or to have the time put upon the roads which the law requires. Wherever the evidence warranteed we have returned indictments against such overseers who have failed in their duty.

We have inspected the jail and find the same in a clean and sanitary condition, however we do not think that the bedding in the jail is as clean as it should be, in fact we saw a mattress which was filthy in the extreme, mergly a bunch of dirty rags and straw. We insist that the sheriff supply the jail with such bedding as may be needed for the comfort of the prisoners at once and present the jail for same to the Commissioners Court.

We have investigated the books of the several County officers, as required by law, and as far as we have been able to determine, all are correctly kept and the balances on hand and such as they should be. All the offices were extremely courteous and gave us such assistance as was requested.

A committee of the grand jury visited the poor house, and report that they found the poor of the county amply and comfortably provided for, and that the inmates of same expressed themselves as being as contented and as happy as their condition would permit, that they were well fed and humanly treated. There are in the poor house eleven inmates, eight females and three males, all white.

We have investigated charges against all unindicted parties confined in jail, and have returned indictments against all of them except James Bishop, charged with arson, there being no indictment found against him, we recommend his release or discharge from jail.

As to the condition of the county property, we beg to say that all the property seems to be in good condition, except the basement of the jail. We find that there are several lights out of the windows in the basement, and some of the woodwork torn from the windows. We recommend that the Commissioners court have such repairs as are needed made at once.

We would recommend also, it being brought to our attention, that the vault room for public records is inadequate, that the court house be so changed as to provide sufficient fire protection and room for the public records, and in so doing, we would also recommend, should the nuances of the county permit, that any additional office room needed for the county officers, who are required to have offices at the court house, be provided at the same time, as money would be saved by doing both at the same time.

Having completed our labors, we respectfully ask that we be discharged. However, we feel that we should compliment the sheriff J. S. Catts for the able manner in which he has assisted the grand jury in their labors, and sought to secure law and order in Chilton county. Thanking your Honor for the able charge and the bailiff for his services to the grand jury, we again request to be discharged.

Respectfully submitted,
F. R. WOODYARD, foreman.

Monday morning, as soon as judge Pearson arrived, the criminal week was commenced, and the following cases were disposed of:

Herman Hodgens, assult to murder, continued.

Joe Wilson, murder in first degree, in supreme court.

Jim Chambers, selling liquor without license, not guilty.

Will Kenned7, incest, not guilty.

Alice Shepperd murder in first degree, in supreme court.

Jim Parker, assault to ravish, guilty.

Nick Hall, selling or exchanging choking horse, guilty, fine assessed by the jury at $100.00, half of the fine when collected to be paid to R. W. Scott, the party injured.

Walter Arledge, a special venire of 45 was summoned for this case.

The trial of Mrs. Hattie Pope has occupied all day Wednesday. A special venire of 45 was summoned.

Keen Interest Centered in the Staging of KLAW AND ERLANGER'S New and Greater Production of "BEN-HUR."

In Birmingham, Ala., Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday matinee, December 15-16 and 17.

Much interest has been manifested concerning the mechanical methods of the thrilling chariot race employed in Klaw & Erlanger's new and greater production of General Wallace's spectacle, "Ben-hur", which is to be presented at the Jefferson Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday matinee, Dec. 15-16 and 17th.

In this great arenic contest the spectator sees eight horses galloping at break-neck speed and straining every muscle to gain the advantage in the race within the ampitheatre. Bedind each quartet of horses is a Roman chariot. The whee's revolve rapidly; the chariots lurch and sway and the fluming beribboned garments of the drivers flutter behind them, adding intensity to the realism of the scene. The illusion is still further increased as the interiour wall of the ampitheatre moves along and the dust flies in blinding clouds beneath the crushing wheels of the chariots. The clatter of the rushing hoofs of the horses and the rumble of the chariots are distinctly heard.

Elaborated mechanism and applications electricity produce this great effect. The mechanism of two great cradles, twenty feet in length and fourteen feet wide, and which are movable back and forth on railways, is supported by a bridge structure capable of holding twenty tones. The tops of the cradles are two inches above the level of the stage. Each cradle bears the four horses and the chariot of each contestant. On each cradle there are four runways and treadmills of hickory slates two inches wide and covered with rubber; they are twelve feet long and two and a half feet wide. On each of these treadmills a horse is secured by steel cable traces, which hold him in place and prevent him from moving forward off the runways. As each horse gallops, the treadmill revolves under his feet, thereby eliminating the forward pressure created by the impact of his hoofs which would force him ahead on an improvable surface. By this mechanical arrangement it is possible for the horses actually to gallop with all their speed within the space of their own length. It is considered the most realistic effect ever seen upon the stage.

For the accomodation of out of town visitors who will want to witnes the staging of "Ben Hur" in Birmingham, the management of the Jefferson Theatre announce that special attention will be given to all orders for seats received by mail. Seats for "Ben Hur" will be placed on sale Monday morning, Dec. 12th. Prices will range from 50¢ to $2 00.

TAKE CARE!

Remember that when your kidneys are affected, your life is in danger. M. Mayor, Rochester, N. Y. says: "my trouble started with a sharp shooting pain over my back which grew worse daily. I felt sluggish and tired, my kidney action was irregular and infrequent. I started using Foley Kidney Pills. Each dose seemed to put new life and strength into me, and now I am completely cured and feel better and stronger than for years." Upchurch Drug co.

Mortgage Sale.

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in the mortgage executed by Myrtle L. Marcus and T. C. Marcus to J. P. Hayes on the 11th day of November, 1909, to secure a debt of $2,500 00, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Judge of Probate of Chilton county, Alabama, in the Record of Mortgages, in Volume 97, on page 213, and on default having been made in the payment of the indebtedness secured by said mortgage, the said J. P. Hayes will proceed to sell at the Court House door in Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama, at public outcry to the highest bidder, for cash, on Monday, the 2d day of January, 1911 the following described real estate, situated in Chilton county, Alabama to wit: The S½ of the SW¼ and the NW¼ of the SW¼ of Section 22, and the E½ of the E½ of the SE¼ of Section 21, all in Township 22 of Range 14.

Said sale will be made for the purpose of paying the entire debt secured by said mortgage and the expenses incident to said sale, including attorney's fees.

This, the 1st day of December, 1910. J. P. HAYES, Mortgagee.

A BLOOD TAX.

Payment by a French Town to Spain For an Ancient Crime.

Seven hundred years ago some shepherds of the valley of Roncal, in Navarre, were murdered by shepherds of the valley of Bareton, in Bearn, the crime taking place on the high pasture lands of Arias, in the Pyrenees. It would have been difficult to bring the murderers individually to justice, and the Spaniards were preparing to make war upon the valley from which the French murderers had come when the French villages proposed that peace be maintained at the price of a yearly tax or tribute, to endure for all time, and this proposition was accepted.

The payment of this blood tax—originally three white mares, but later three cows of a particular breed and color—has been made ever since, the custom (it is nothing more) having survived even the great wars in which both France and Spain have engaged and the storm of the French revolution.

Yearly the representative men of the two valleys meet on the frontier at a certain stone remote from any town and go through the ceremony of presenting and receiving the cattle. The order of procedure, which is elaborate and impressive, is fixed by a document bearing the date 1375, though the tax was paid a hundred years prior to that time. The records of each yearly meeting and payment are duly attested and deposited in the archives of the Roncalais.—New York Tribune.

The Sanity of Paris.

The French live within their means and by a sense of economy wholly unknown to us manage to save and retire to enjoy whatever fortune has stored up for them, says F. Berkeley Smith in Success Magazine. To them France is sufficient. They voyage rarely and gamble less. The spendthrift or the man who plunges on the bourse, the races and the gaming table is regarded by the masses in the light of a rogue and a fool. The Parisians work hard enough for their leisure, but they never eliminate it nor allow their work to encroach upon their traditional daily vacation, as luncheon, the aperitif hour, dinner and fete days. They work, not to amass millions and die in harness, but to save enough to give their daughter her dot, without which she may never marry; start their son in his chosen trade and have enough income left to retire before they are too old to enjoy their freedom.

A Canoe Accident and What Came of It.

By PORT BRIDGE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Clifton clung to the overturned canoe, his dripping countenance in close proximity to another one on the other side, staring him out of countenance with its blue eyes, dancing and mischievous.

"Did you save the luncheon basket?" asked Rose anxiously.

"It saved itself," replied Clifton.

"There goes the paddle," announced Rose sweetly. "Can you paddle with your hands? Jim Wright can, but he's a regular fish in the water anyway."

"I have noticed he was something of a lobster," remarked Clifton, staring after the vanishing paddle. "As I can't swim I suppose you'll have the glory of saving my worthless life. You see, I was born and brought up on the prairie, and, except for rock bottomed streams, there are not many temptations to learn."

Rose balanced herself gracefully in the water, her heavy serge skirt weighing her downward. "Let's walk ashore," she suggested.

Clifton thrust his feet down and felt bottom. "Oh, I say, you knew it was shoal water all the time," he protested hotly.

"Of course I did," retorted Rose impishly. "That is why I upset the canoe."

"You did?"

She nodded.

"Why? Just to make a silly ass of me?" His young face burned resentfully. He had been a source of amusement for Rose Burton this past month. He was glad his four weeks' leave of absence was drawing to a close. He looked at the disappearing paddle in an agony of shame that he could not swim that little distance and recover it. Because he could not they must wait on the shore on the lonely island until fate sent some hulking, brown limbed athlete from the hotel, combing through the waves with the long overhand strokes that Clifton yearned to duplicate, and the paddle would be brought back or another would be fetched from the mainland or the amphibious athlete would paddle with his hands or his feet—anyway to get Rose Burton to the hotel in time for the hop that evening.

At this point in his meditations Clifton found himself on the beach tugging the canoe high on the sands. An instant later Rose dripped ashore, wringing the water from her skirt and tossing the wind swept curls from her pretty brow.

For a brief instant she stared at the green canoe, and then, with a little contemptuous toss of the head, she bent down, seized the gunwale and pushed the light craft back into the water, where it bobbed to and fro tantalizingly out of reach.

"Why did you do that?" demanded Clifton impatiently.

"It is of no use without the paddle," remarked Rose carelessly. Then, peering into the stranded luncheon basket, she exclaimed: "I declare if there is a drop of water or anything! That was a splendid idea of Maggie's, putting enameled cloth under and around everything, almost as if she knew we might be upset!"

"Of course she knew I was going out and took every precaution," muttered Clifton, pulling off his sodden shoes and socks. "But I thought I heard you telling Maggie to wrap the whole business in enameled cloth before you put it in the basket."

"Perhaps you did," soothed Rose as she gathered dry sticks for a fire and piled a heap of driftwood about it.

"Where did you get matches?" demanded Clifton, peering into the water soaked compartment of his match safe.

"In the basket. Between this fire and the hot sun we ought to dry off quickly. Yes, bring up all the wood you can find, and there are two blocks that will serve for seats and that huge flat stone for a table. Why, we shall be quite Robinson Crusoes or Swiss Family Robinsons, whichever you choose," she cried gayly.

"I choose to be the Swiss Family," said Clifton, with rising spirits. "What could be better than to find oneself on a lone island with Rose Burton for a companion?"

"Why?" asked the girl, pausing in her task.

"Oh—er—they led a most domestic life, you know," said Clifton.

"I choose to be old Robinson Crusoe, and you may be my Man Friday," said Rose graciously.

"That suits me."

"Well, stop loafing then—it's not Sunday, you know, and Friday should be busy."

Fetching wood for the crackling fire, searching for water in the thicket, finding none and coming back to discover the great bottleful contained in the basket, Clifton waited upon his companion with all the devotion that the real Friday might have offered his master.

Boiling coffee over the blaze, cooking eggs, and toasting bacon were delightful tasks to Clifton, the engineer, whose clever head was filled with details of great bridges and other structures he loved to build. It was pleasant indeed to watch Rose Burton flitting about the beach barefooted like the humblest fishermaiden, while her little white shoes toasted before the fire, and he was privileged to turn them occasionally that they might dry evenly.

Most domestic it was, indeed, to sit opposite to Rose with the table of rock between them spread with the dainty lunch he had ordered and she had attended to preparing at the hotel. She poured the coffee, and as she passed him a tin cup filled to the brim his hand trembled until the hot liquid spilled on the sands.

"I'm a clumsy brute," he growled impatiently.

"We are really on a desert island," said Rose after a little silence.

"You don't mind?" asked Clifton rather shyly.

"Oh, no; it will be only for a little while—somebody will see the boat—will miss us and come over," she said carelessly.

"Some heroic soul will swim across from the mainland, I suppose," he said a little sullenly. "Do you know—I wonder why you've chosen to spoil your pleasant day by coming with me."

Rose blushed hotly. "Perhaps because I want to give you a good time before you go home."

"How do you know I haven't had a good time?"

"Perhaps you have—I was jesting," she said with a wistfulness he did not comprehend.

The meal cleared away they sat on the beach, Rose striving gaily to add picturesque horrors to their situation. She made a flagpole from a piece of spar and flung her handkerchief to the breeze to attract some passing vessel. As there were motorboat races on the other side of the point every available craft was in attendance there.

"I'm very sorry it has happened, Miss Burton," said Clifton remorsefully. "I suppose there's no use my waiting till the tide runs out and then attempting to walk across the shoals to the mainland. I heard some of the chaps talking about it the other day."

"Don't you try, please," she protested. "It's really dangerous—there are quicksands."

"I seem to be quite helpless," he said, resuming his gloomy inspection of the empty waters.

"You are," said Rose sharply.

"Eh?"

"And stupid!" she added tearfully.

"Any more?"

"Isn't that enough?"

"It is. I'll get you off this island if I break my neck in the attempt," said Clifton loftily, arising and walking away with as much dignity as the pricking sands under his bare feet would permit.

He disappeared in the thicket and was gone such a long time that Rose became alarmed. She heard the sounds of distant hammering and searched in vain for him along the shore or nearby in the woods. In the depths she dared not venture.

Alone she sat on the sands and wept bitter, angry tears, until Clifton's voice close at hand startled her to dashing them away and confronting him with impatient eyes.

"You needn't cry any more," said Clifton joyously. "I've made a raft. Look there! I'll get you to the mainland in a jiffy. And, say, I forgot to ask you for some dances tonight."

"I'm not going to the hop," announced Rose coldly.

"I suppose you're all tired out. Well, I don't believe I'll go either. Hops are stupid things," said Clifton somewhat dispiritedly. He had been screwing up courage all day to ask Rose for those dances.

"Not as stupid as some people," retorted Rose pointedly.

"You mean me?" he asked quietly.

She made no reply. Her pretty head with its ruffled hair was turned toward the sea, and there was a pathetic droop to her lips.

"I shall keep away from the hop, Miss Burton—Rose. I didn't know you disliked me quite so much. I'm afraid I've forced myself upon you many times when you'd rather be alone," he said steadily, his kind eyes fixed on her dejected profile.

"If you'll just look at my raft—it's quite safe—you'll see I can easily put you ashore. I'm going home tomorrow, you know. I really won't be at the hop if it annoys you."

"I don't wish to go to the mainland," said Rose in a muffled tone. "I want to stay here."

"Why?" He was bewildered with her moods.

"Stupid again! Oh, Jack Clifton, you'll never have another chance. I knew you wanted—and I upset the canoe and everything!" She flamed defiantly at him as he drew near and took his chance.

"Stupid!" she whispered again, so softly that, although Clifton heard, it seemed to him the sweetest word in the world.

SETTLED OUT OF COURT.

Racing For the Honest Lawyer in a Town in Denmark.

In telling of his boyhood home in Denmark, "The Old Town," Jacob A. Riis says that he does not remember that there were at any time more than two lawyers in the place. One was good, the other bad—not a bad lawyer perhaps, but reputed to be tricky, whereas the other was known to be honor itself.

It is therefore perhaps the best character I can give my people when I record the fact, writes Mr. Riis, that when two farmers quarreled, each sure that he was right, they made haste to hitch up to get first to the honest lawyer, and usually that was the end of the quarrel, for the last in the race was willing to make peace.

They used to tell of two well to do neighbors who had fallen out over a line fence and started simultaneously for town. Both had good teams, and they were well matched in the race.

For half an hour they drove silently alongside, each on his own side of the road, grimly urging on their horses, but neither gaining a length. At last as the lights of the town came into sight, for it was evening, a trace broke on one of the rigs, and the horses stopped. The other team whirled away in a cloud of dust.

"Hans," the beaten one called after him, and he halted and looked back, "are you going after Lawyer —?" naming the square one.

"I am that!" came back.

"Then let's go back. I'm beat." And back home they went and made it up.

A MERCENARY MARRIAGE.

Romance of Lady March and the Second Duke of Richmond.

One of the mercenary marriages which turned out happily was that of the second Duke of Richmond. He was married to Lady Sarah Cadogan as part of an agreement that her father's gambling debts should be canceled, Lord March (as he then was) being eighteen and the bride thirteen. Immediately after the wedding Lord March's tutor took him off to the continent for the grand tour, and Lady Sarah went back to her nursery. This is the sequel as told by Lady Russell in "The Rose Goddess:"

"Three years elapsed. Lord March returned from his travels, but, having such an uninteresting recollection of his bride, was in no hurry to claim her and went the first evening of his return to London to the opera. There he noticed that all eyes—and lorgnettes—were directed to one box, where, surrounded by several persons, sat a most beautiful young creature. Turning to a man beside him, he asked who she was. 'You must be a stranger in London,' was the answer, 'not to know the reigning toast of the town, the beautiful Lady March!' Lord March lost no time in going to the box and introducing himself to his bride, with whom he ever after lived so affectionately that their devotion to one another became proverbial."

What Would You Say?

If you should see
A big green tree,
With candles all alight,
With popcorn strings
And pretty things
And tinsel shining bright,
With stars that swing
And bells that ring,
All green and red and blue,
And lots of toys
For girls and boys
And lots of candles, too,
And you should hear
Somebody near,
Call out in cheery way,
"What sort of tree
Can this one be?"
I wonder what you'd say?

TOURISTS IN JAPAN.

Troubles of Those Ignorant of the Language and Native Ways.

All Japanese inns, of course, charge a great deal more to the globe trotting European tourist who does not speak the language, since he or she is not content to travel strictly a la Japonaise and worries the entire household with a variety of strange demands—extra quilts to sleep on because they find the floor hard, an improvised pillow, special food (the ordinary guest takes what is given him and at the hour that his host pleases and is thankful), knives, forks and spoons because he has neglected to practice eating his food with chopsticks, a bath with fresh water in it because he will not follow the custom of entering the bath as soon as he arrives, thus getting the opportunity of first bath and the water while it is fresh, and half a dozen other requirements. He reserves his chodai also until he leaves, and often the host misunderstands this action and, fearing he will get no recompense for his extra trouble, augments the bill accordingly.

These visitors not unusually treat the waitresses like so many novel playthings, especially travelers of the sterner sex, who sometimes fall hopelessly to distinguish between professional geishas and ordinary maidservants.—Vera Collum in Wide World Magazine.

MANYUEMA CANNIBALS.

African Savages That Grind Their Teeth to Sharp Points.

The most terrible species of cannibals living are the cruel, bloodthirsty Manyuema of Tanganyika, in central Africa. Living to the west of Tanganyika, these cannibals, clothed in primitive fashion with a piece of bark cloth rudely hammered out from a neighboring tree, have an appetite for human flesh which is well nigh insatiable.

They exercise the most fiendish cunning in tracking down their quarry, choosing fat, well covered people in preference to those who are lean and bony. Their favorite practice is to waylay their victims at eventide so that they may have before them a long night in which to effectually dispose of their prey by cutting it up into strips and drying it over a low fire in the woods. These dried strips of human flesh are carefully preserved for future use, and on two occasions these grewsome forest food depots were discovered and their owners killed by the Wafipa people, who inhabit east Tanganyika.

Most of these cannibals file their teeth to sharp points so as to enable them more easily to tear the flesh from the bone when they have to eat their abominable meal in a hurry.—Wide World Magazine.

How Did He Know?

Joe, the fat boy in the "Pickwick Papers," spent most of his time in slumber. He was happier that way. Probably there are a good many other people in the world a good deal like Joe, but most of them do not get the chance for sleep that he had. This scrap of conversation, recently overheard, would seem to indicate that, although this is a nervous age, the desire for sleep is not wholly dead.

"I don't feel well," remarked Smith as he took off his coat in the office, preparatory to sitting down at his desk. "The trouble with me is that I haven't slept as I should. I don't feel well unless I've slept."

"That's the same way with me," remarked his partner. "In fact, I think I feel best of all when I'm sound asleep."—Youth's Companion.

The First Oyster Eater.

The gluttonous Vitellius is reported to have eaten 1,000 oysters at a sitting. "He was a very valiant man who first ventured on eating of oysters," King James was wont to declare, a sentiment echoed by the poet Gay:

The man had sure a palate covered o'er
With brass or steel that on the rocky shore
First broke the oozy oyster's pearly coat
And risked the living morsel down his throat.

FAITH IN THE WYANDOTTE.

Chief Points of the Breed Explained by Successful Poultry Raiser.

In the New England Homestead F. S. Williams of Litchfield county, Conn., a successful poultry raiser, explains as follows his faith in the White Wyandotte:

"I am making poultry my principal occupation and, like any business man, naturally wish to produce that which will return the largest profit. Formerly I tried having several of the most popular breeds and carefully watched results. One by one I discarded the other breeds and after about twelve years' experience with White Wyandottes have decided in favor of them.

"Other breeds did splendidly at times, but after averaging up year after year and for all purposes combined I found nothing to equal White Wyandottes. The birds are of blocky shape and tender flesh, making the finest of broilers and roasters, and are fit for market as broilers at an earlier age than nearly any other breed, putting on flesh from the start, while other breeds are growing an abundance of feathers. Wyandotte pinfeathers, being white, make them easier to dress and give the carcass a neat appearance. As layers White Wyandottes are steady and will produce eggs every month in the year and many of them. The largest proportion of them will be produced when eggs sell high, therefore the profit. They are not persistent sitters, although making the best of mothers, and are excellent foragers."

The incubators are started by Mr. Williams the middle of January, and the combined capacity is about 1,500 eggs. The hatching is continued up to July 1. Mr. Williams built a two story incubator brooder house, which he calls his chicken factory.

Burning Stumps.

In the early part of the winter bore a two inch auger hole to a depth of about three inches in the top of each stump to be removed, fill the hole with ground nitrate of potash and drive a pin tight on it. Let it remain until the spring, when the potash will be absorbed. Pour a little oil on the top of the stump and set afire. The entire stump and in a great many instances all the roots will be consumed by a slow burning.—Rural New Yorker.

Farm losses will pay for first class rural improvements. He who drains his barnyard bores a hole into the lowest corner of his safety deposit vault.

Chemical Fertilizers.

There is one thing which all farmers who use chemicals should remember: These chemicals should be spread as evenly as possible. They are all concentrated and will burn or injure vegetation if they are dumped in handfuls upon growing crops. They should be spread out all over the ground.

Orchard and Garden.

Take precautions against apples heating in storage. Where there is danger from freezing set a large tub of warm water in the cellar to raise the temperature. If freezing occurs allow the fruit to thaw slowly.

The farmer who finds it cheaper to buy fruit than to raise it usually goes without it most of the time.

Plum trees set from sixteen to twenty feet apart will need good, vigorous pruning to keep them in bounds in after years.

The ground in the newly set strawberry bed should be kept stirred and clean to enable the plants to go through the winter in good shape.

A simple rule for the arrangement of dooryard trees and shrubs is never to set them in straight lines, but in groups with curving boundaries.

An ideal peach orchard location is a cool, rolling elevation where the very best air drainage is obtainable, and if the land slopes toward the northwest so much the better. Never set peach trees in a hollow.

The man who thinks it is a woman's work to keep a garden going was not born on right lines. The garden should be considered as important as any other part of the farm and treated accordingly.

Do not bury cabbage until there is no more of very hard freezing.

EXPERIMENT FARMS' VALUE.

They Open the Eyes of Farmers to the Possibilities of Their Land.

The demonstration farm is just as necessary to the agriculturist as are the open air encampment and the sham battle to the militiaman. The reading of military tactics can never teach a man either to stand steady under fire or to capture an entrenched enemy. We know this because of the many instances where even a brief visit made by some neighboring farmer to these experimental farms has utterly changed practices which have existed for generations, practices which during some seasons have proved fairly successful and which have caused absolute failure only at intervals.

For example, shallow plowing got a black eye during the season of drought when the farmers noted the result at the experimental stations of deep plowing aided by frequent shallow cultivation, a method which kept corn green without wilt and produced a big crop of fully filled ears, to say nothing of keeping the potato plants green and healthy until a normal crop was matured.

The early planting of such extremely hardy vegetables as carrots and onions, which with them assures a good start because of the invariably copious rainfall of early spring, was only adopted when dry weather set in earlier than usual, and we by this method had assured ourselves a crop. In like manner the spraying of fruit trees annually, systematically and thoroughly was only brought about in the neighborhood by the extremely healthy appearance of the small demonstration orchards at the experimental stations, the farmers saying little, but being quick to note the dark green of the foliage and the handsome appearance and juiciness of the highly flavored fruit.—H. B. Fullerton in Craftsman.

STRONG FARM SLED.

Easily Built and Substantial Without Tenons or Mortises.

A writer in the Rural New Yorker, from which the picture shown herewith is taken, says that every farm should be provided with one or more goods sleds, and one built as shown in the drawing will prove very satisfactory. It is easily built and substantial, as there are no tenons to make nor mortises, both of which require much labor and seriously weaken the sled. The frame of the sled is made of 4 by 4, excepting the blocks marked X, which are 4 by 6 by 10 inches. Upon these blocks rest the crosspieces A A A, and upon these the upper part of the sled frame rests, all being bolted together with half inch bolts. Besides the bolts, spikes should be driven through the blocks X to prevent their turning should the bolts become loose. Next come the diagonal brace B and the crosspiece at the rear end of the sled just behind the standards. The top of the sled may be floored over if desired. The tongue is bolted loosely on top of the front crosspiece and braced with chains or heavy strap iron braces. Iron soles should be used if possible, and good ones are easily made of old wagon tires.

HANDY FARM SLED.
[From the Rural New Yorker.]

This sled, as described and shown in diagrams, should give satisfactory service, but it may be made higher if desired, though greater height is not needed unless to be used in stony or stumpy fields. Crosspieces X X X may be 2 by 6 instead of 4 by 4, when two bolts at each joint can be used and the diagonal brace B be dispensed with. The bottom of the sled frame is nine feet long, and the top from standard to standard is twelve feet.

The place of the thinking farmer is just the opposite to that of the "let well enough alone" man. The fertility of his farm, the yield of his crops and the general appearance of his place improve every year.

For that dull Feeling after eating.

I have used Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets for some time and can testify that they have done me more good than any tablets I have ever used. My trouble was a dull heavy feeling after eating.—DAVID FREEMAN, Kemp, Nova Scotia. These tablets strengthen the stomach and improve the digestion. They also regulate the liver and bowels. They are far superior to pills but cost no more. Get a free sample at all dealer's drug store and see what a splendid medicine it is.

Lesson XI.—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 11, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xxvii, 15-50. Memory Verses, 41, 42—Golden Text, Isa. liii, 5—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

We have come to the last scene in the greatest event in history, and we can scarcely do more than read it and write it. Yes, we can believe it firmly, and our hearts can say: "All for me—for my sins. He was wounded for my transgressions, bruised for my iniquities. He hath redeemed me from the curse of the law, being made a curse for me." Since the death of Abel all that have lived on the earth and have passed off it have, with but two exceptions, gone by dying; but, of all the millions upon millions of deaths, there never was one like this. Of all the others each died because of sin, for there had been no death if there had been no sin. But this man had no sin. He knew no sin. He died for our sins. All others had to die—they could not help it. This man laid down his life of his own accord. No one could take it from Him (John x, 17, 18). All others were ordinary mortals, but this man lived before the world was. He talked with Adam and Eve, with Enoch and Noah and Abraham and the patriarchs, with Moses and Joshua and David. He made them all and all things. He was God manifest in the flesh. He still lives, and He will come again, and all who have ever lived must give account to Him. Let us remember these things as we meditate upon Him.

In the lesson of two weeks ago we left Him before Pilate, accused by the Jews as an evildoer and by them delivered to the Roman governor to be put to death. He had passed a sleepless night—a night of the most cruel abuse at the hands of His tormentors. It was now early morning, and Pilate, persuaded that he was an innocent man, had made five attempts to release Him, for he knew that for envy the chief priests had delivered Him (verse 18). It was the custom to release a prisoner at this feast, one whom they might select, and he suggested that he should release Jesus who is called Christ. His wife had sent him a message urging him to have nothing to do with that just man, for she had suffered many things in a dream because of Him. Meantime the chief priests and elders were perusading the people to ask for the release of a very wicked man, a notable prisoner called Barabbas, a murderer. So when Pilate made his seventh and last attempt to release Jesus and asked whether it should be Jesus or Barabbas they asked for Barabbas. Listen to Peter after Pentecost concerning this: "Ye delivered Him up and denied Him in the presence of Pilate when he was determined to let Him go. But ye denied the Holy One and the Just and desired a murderer to be granted unto you and killed the Prince of Life" (Acts iii, 13-15). When Pilate asked, "What shall I do, then, with Jesus who is called Christ?" their united and persistent cry was, "Let Him be crucified!" Pilate then took water and washed his hands before the multitude, saying: "I am innocent of the blood of this just person. See ye to it." Then they cried, "His blood be on us and on our children" (verses 24, 25). So Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas, scourged Jesus and delivered Him to be crucified.

What can any follower of Jesus expect in a world whose highest civil and religious authorities so treated the Son of God? It is the same evil world. Religion, so called, has no more use for Jesus Christ than the Jews had. The civil authorities have no respect for Him beyond lifting their hats to Him for the sake of politeness, and the devil is the one who is really worshiped, and he is the father of lies and a murderer. Stay, if you can, and see what followed as the Holy One is delivered to their will. After being scourged the soldiers strip Him, put on Him a scarlet robe, crown Him with thorns, mock Him, smite Him on the head, spit upon Him, remove the robe, put His own clothes on Him and lead Him away to crucify Him. At first He bore the cross; then they compelled Simon the Cyrenian to bear it. And so they go forth, two malefactors led with Him to be put to death, a great company following and some wailing women, to whom he spake some weighty words. They reach Golgotha, and quickly the cruel work is done. The Son of God is crucified and a title placed over his head in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." That was about 9 a. m. on the most awful day that earth ever saw. They reviled Him as He hung there bearing my sins. They railed on Him, they mocked Him, until about noon the sun shone no longer and there was darkness over all the land until about 3 p. m., when He cried with a loud voice and said, "Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit," and He was gone. The earth quaked, the rocks rent, graves were opened, and in the temple in the city the veil which separated the holy place from the most holy was rent in twain from the top to the bottom. Consider all the Scriptures fulfilled by these events. Give heed to His seven sayings from the cross and in the first three see forgiveness and glory and all we need while here on earth waiting for His kingdom to come.

NATURE
Needs an Assistant.

The aim in this famous little booklet (sent free) is to show that Nature alone, when aided, always performs the restorative tasks that are so often forced upon her.

Nature Needs an Assistant.

Perfect health is the result of study and research. It has taken centuries to understand the human body and to find the best conditions and remedies to develop a healthful equilibrium.

Any one with a sick stomach, sluggish liver, bilious, constipated and nervous is not at all likely to regain their health unaided

Nature Needs an Assistant.

ST. JOSEPH'S Liver Regulator

IS NATURE'S BEST ASSISTANT.

This remedy has proven itself the true and tried friend of the human family by giving prompt relief when taken for Constipation, Indigestion, Biliousness, Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Malaria, and all other troubles incident to a disordered condition of the stomach, liver, bowels and nervous system.

It is a medicine of great power, and acts promptly and efficiently in the highest degree. It is made in both liquid and powder form, is pleasant and agreeable to the taste, prompt in action, and leaves no sickening, weakening after effects.

It is an Ideal Liver Medicine.

We have a large number of letters from satisfied patrons who have been benefited and cured by it.

St. Joseph's Liver Regulator is sold by druggists and general merchants, or you can send to us for it. Price, Liquid, 50 cents a bottle. Powders, in tin boxes, 25 cents a box. Sample of powders and booklet sent free on application.

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER
Sees all the Sights He Sees, and Sees He Sees Not.

On Monday a Christmas gift came to Postmaster Felix O Dud-ley in the shape of his commission from Washington, and after many days he is reappointed postmaster at Clanton. Under his able super-intendence the business of the post-office has largely increased; an ele-gant building has been leased and as general he has made us an effic. ient postmaster, and we congratu-late both him and the patrons on his reappointment.

But ten days more and The Ban-ner contest closes and the lucky winners will receive the prizes. Increased interest is being mani-fested; friends of the churches are working mightily for the first and grand prizes and Brother N. J. Calloway came in with a string of new subscribers adding several thousand votes to the church of his choice.

The young ladies are having a spirited race for the diamond ring, now sparkling brightly in the Alred Drug Company's store soon to dec-orate the hand of the fair winner.

J. C. Jones & Co. are sending in some big bunches of votes these days which are telling the tale.

The Business Scholarship is more valuable than we have been advert-ising it. Bryant & Stratton have put us a scholarship valued at $100.00 instead of $50.00 The lucky youth who gets it will have a good start in life given him by this well known college.

And the boys are making a stren-uous race for the bicycle which now reposes at the store of the Alred Drug Company awaiting for the lucky winner to come and ride gaily away with it.

Now, let all put their shoulders to the wheel for the final count and in your votes and remember that every yearly subscription to The Banner counts one thousand votes.

Now is the time to subscribe to the only newspaper printed in Chilton county.

If a man were to drop down from the moon at this time of year and would take a walk through the store-houses of Clanton, he would know at once that this was Christmas time, and would immed-iately put his hand in his pocket to see what loose change was there. And he would need all the change he could find to buy half of the pretty things displayed for presents.

Take a look in at some of our stores, and if you don't wish you had loads of money to spend, why you must be out of touch with Christmas time.

The youngsters fairly revel in the display of toys at the Alred Drug Company and at Upchurch's, while our older friends can find an un-limited choice of articles to suit their fancy and their pocketbooks. Higgins, the jeweler has a splen-did assortment of Christmas pres-ents, and for general utility J. C. Jones & Co., have an unrivalled display which would tempt the money out of any man's pocket. J. B. Wicks & Co., will show us a splendid line of goods, and the old reliable firm of E. M. Packard & Co., will be pleased to exhibit a fine display.

W. H. Sartor, always to the fore, has an especially attractive show of goods this Christmas, and Miss Annie Moss and the Clanton Millin-ery Company vie with each other in the things that ladies love.

The Gamble Hardware Co. and Gidney Co., have made extra of-fers for the Christmas trade, and you will take my advice first step in some of these stores and spend the cash you can get hold of.

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Thorsby.

Ira E. Sarber of Elmore, was in Thorsby last week negotiating with the Town Council for the purchase of his property here including the Water Works Plant the deal is not yet closed but there is fair prospect that we shall soon have a water supply system run by the town authorities.

On Friday and Saturday of last week the Ladies Guild of Thorsby, held their fifth annual Bazaar closing with an Oyster Supper Saturday night. This is an organization in which the qualification for membership do not consist of affiliation with any particular Church, but in the manifestation of a "Get together spirit" working for a better Thorsby." This year as for several years past they have considered Thorsby Institute the most worthy beneficiary of their efforts, and have been a most efficient force in helping to maintain the school, in which they are not alone when considering a worthy cause for their help. During the past two months Thorsby Institute has recieved donations amounting to about $1000 from people who believe in the substantial benefits of education.

With one of the best Preparatory schools in the State under a management of local trustees who place the expenses to the student far below the actual cost and then hustle to meet the deficit, and with no better standard High School in Chilton county, the attendance of our Boys and Girls indicates a great lack of appreciation of the opportunities that lie at their door.

On Friday night, Dec. 16th at 7:30 at Bates Hall in Thorsby, the Rev. George Eaves, D. D., of Birmingham and England, will deliver a very interesting discourse on "Gladstone the Man, the Statesman, and the Church Man. Dr. Eaves is peculiarly fitted for this work, as he was a personal friend of the "Grand old man of England. Furthermore he is a pleasing and forceful speaker who although heard in Thorsby many times is always welcome. Admission will be charged Adults 20¢, Children 10¢. Sereno E. Norton.

A Strange Likeness.

An extraordinary resemblance has recently been discovered at the London Natural History Museum between a specimen of the huge African elephant and the pygmy shrew mouse. Sir E. Ray Lankester suggested comparison of the two, and the result has been that practically every bone, muscle, blood vessel and nerve of the giant beast has been found identically reproduced in the little animal, which is scarcely two inches in length. In the museum a stuffed mouse has been placed between the fore feet of its enormous mounted prototype for the purpose of showing the curious likeness.

Consistency.

Mother—Aren't you goin' to wash up them tea things, Mariaranne, before you go out? Daughter—No, I ain't. I'm late enough for "mother's 'elp" class as it is.—London Opinion.

"If it's a better hill climber I don't blame 'em. Me for the French car every time."—London Punch.

His Biggest Mistake.

Death of Mrs W. J. Foshee.

A good old lady passed away in Coosa county, December 9, Mrs. W. J. Foshee, mother of W. J. Foshee of Clanton, from a stroke of paralysis. She was born in Georgia on Christmas day, 1829 and for many years has been a resident of Coosa. The funeral took place at Quincy on Dec. 11, a large concourse of mourning friends attending. She would have been 81 years old this Christmas day

No new crop should be planted on a large scale, until a few acres have been grown for a year or two and the culture of the crop learned

It is safe to stick pretty close to the well known crops, corn, oats, hay, sweet potatoes, and such other crops as there is a ready market for and those we know how to grow and for the production of which experience has proved the county is adapted.

New crops should be sought and thoroughly tried, but only small acres should be planted until their culture has been learned and it has been demonstrated that they can be profitably produced. This can be done before the arrival of the boll weevil so that when it becomes necessary to largely discontinue the growing of cotton, which should always be done for two or three years after the appearance of the weevils other tried crops with the culture of which we are familiar may be substituted—Starkville (Miss) Progressive Farmer and Gazette.

In Memoriam

Monday morning Dec. 5, witnessed the sadest death that has occurred in this town or community, the death of Mr. Clifford Baker, aged twenty-four. The deceased has served as mail carrier for the last three years in a most acceptable manner.

Interment took place at the cemetary Tuesday afternoon and was attended by a large concourse of friends and relatives.

Mr. Baker is survived by his wife and daughters, father and mother, three sisters and one brother all who reside at Clanton.

A more efficient and accommodating mail carrier never served the government than the deceased Truly did he live a beautiful and sunshine life.

The grief stricken wife, little daughter and other relatives have the sympathy of many friends.

HIGGINS THE JEWELER

Another Chilton County Citizen convinced that Dr. Higgins, at Clanton, understands the human eye. When a few days ago a certain citizen of Chilton came into Dr. Higgins' Office and his case was diagnosed examined and pronounced toxic ambliopice, the eye sight being distroyed by excessive use of tobacco or toxicants. The patient doubting as to Dr. Higgins' understanding his business. This certain citizen paid his R. R. fair to Atlanta to see Dr. Calhound, one of the state of Georgia's great eye specialist about his eyes and the above citizen of Chilton county again called and when Dr. Higgins asked what he could do a second time for the patient. The gentleman only stated as follows: "Doctor I just called in to congratulate you by telling you that I have been to Atlanta and saw Dr. Calhound and he said you were exactly right about what is the matter with my eyes e.c. and I thought, Dr. Higgins you, being a young man, would appreciate receiving congratulation on your work by an old skilled eye-Doctor from other states beside Alabama.

Now after reading the above as many other congratulations extended to Dr. Higgins, such as that of Mrs. J. M. Powe, near Montevallo who said she would not take $50.00 for a pair of glasses Dr. Higgins charged her $4.00 for; that letter written by Judge Reynolds; the letter received from Camic Moor Verbena Route 2; that congratulation from Mr. Wells, Verbena Route 2; the one I heard of from the pair I fitted, H. B. Olever, Verbena and by calling in at Dr. Higgins' office and getting the address of 139 more if then, you are not convinced that Dr. Higgins understands fitting glasses to the human eye. MR. TAFT'S MESSAGE BRIEFLY OUTLINED

Some Important Features Are Touched Upon.

CORPORATION LEGISLATION

Refers Tariff Change to the Next Congress—Against Another General Revision—Asks Canal Fortifications. The Civil Service, Etc.

The outstanding features of President Taft's message, sent to congress Tuesday, are these:

He declares it is time to stop legislating with reference to regulation of corporations and to witness the effect of a vigorous execution of the laws already on the statute books. The exact limitation upon business methods imposed by law will doubtless be made clearer by pending decisions of the supreme court.

Just at this time, the president says, he believes the activities of the government, in addition to enforcement of the laws, should be directed toward economy of administration, the enlargement of opportunities for foreign trade, the building up of home industry and the strengthening of confidence of capital in domestic investment.

Mr. Taft recommends strongly some form of ship subsidy to increase American shipping, especially to South America.

Refers Tariff Question.

The tariff board is not ready to submit a report on any of the schedules of the Payne law and Mr. Taft says he will not recommend any tariff legislation until the new congress convenes in December, 1911.

He urges that the tariff board be made permanent and that all future revisions be made schedule by schedule. He vigorously opposes another general revision.

Recommendation for anti-injunction and federal incorporation laws are renewed.

It is proposed that second-class mail rates should be readjusted so as to charge magazines a much higher rate on their advertising sections.

New Currency System.

Strong representations are made for the establishment of a new banking and currency system.

Estimates for government expenditures during the next fiscal year have been cut to $630,494,013.12, which is $52,964,887.36 less than the actual appropriations for the current year. The estimated receipts for the next fiscal year are $630,000,000.

The president urges the extension of the civil service principle to all classes of postmasters and to the diplomatic and consul corps and the acquisition by the government of residences and offices for its diplomatic officers.

Some criticisms of the Payne tariff act are just, says the president, but more are unfounded.

There should be more officers for the army. The engineer corps should be increased by 60.

Regarding the Panama canal the president says:

"The progress of the work is most satisfactory. It will be completed well within the time set, January 1, 1915, and within the estimated cost of $375,000,000. The slides in Culebra Cut offer no great reason for delay."

Must Fortify Canal.

Failure to fortify the canal would leave the United States powerless to enforce the universal and equal use of the waterway against a desperate and irresponsible enemy and would defeat the object of the canal in increasing the military effectiveness of the American navy.

Regarding the courts the president declares the crying need of the United States is cheapening the cost of litigation by simplifying judicial procedure and expediting final judgment. The supreme court should be relieved from unnecessary appeals. The salaries of federal judges should be increased.

Postal savings banks will be established in a number of cities January 1. A parcels post on rural delivery routes is recommended. Postmaster General Hitchcock is given high praise for putting the postoffice department on a self-sustaining basis.

Prosecute Census Padders.

The present census promises to be the best ever taken, but is not perfect. The census padders are to be vigorously prosecuted.

A bureau of health should be established.

Heavier fines should be imposed against steamship companies for violating the immigration laws. The facilities at Ellis Island, New York, should be so increased as to offer an inducement to the steamship companies to concentrate their immigrant business at one port. Immigrants are needed in the rural districts.

Some provision should be made for retiring superannuated government clerks.

The only amendments suggested to the interstate commerce law are an appropriation to enable the interstate commerce commission to ascertain the valuation of railroads and fixing the responsibilities of public carriers in the issuance of bills of lading.

James Tunney, a native of Baltimore and for several years past a wealthy resident of Gulfport, Miss., dropped dead in the Harrison county court. He was a spectator.

MRS. EDDY LAID TO REST.

Services Were Simple and Attended By Few Devoted Followers.

After services attended by her family, relatives, the members of her household, officials of the Christian Science church and publishing society and her personal students residing in Greater Boston, the body of Rev. Mary Baker Eddy was placed in the receiving vault at Mount Auburn cemetery. The funeral services at the Chestnut Hill home were conducted with quiet dignity. There were about 120 persons present.

Among those in attendance were Mrs. Eddy's son, George Washington Glover, of Leod, S. D.; his daughter, Mary Baker Glover, and his son, George Washington Glover, Jr.; Dr. E. J. Foster, of Watertown, Vt.; Mrs.

MRS. MARY BAKER G. EDDY.

Eddy's adopted son, and other relatives including General Henry M. Baker, of Bow, N. H., Mrs. Eddy's cousin; John B. Baker, of New York, another cousin of Mrs. Eddy, and his son, Rufus; Calvin A. Frye, Mrs. Laura Sargent, Adam H. Dickey, the Rev. I. C. Tomlinson, Mr. and Mrs. William R. Rathven and Mrs. Martha Wilcox, members of Mrs. Eddy's household.

Judge Smith began the services by the reading of a lesson sermon composed of selections from the Bible and correlative passages from "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures."

The casket was then carried to the hearse and the journey to Mount Auburn cemetery begun.

There was no service at the receiving vault other than the reading of the 23d Psalm by Judge Smith and the last verse in Jude.

The casket was then taken within by the pallbearers, the vault was sealed and there a guard will be maintained until a mausoleum has been built on the plot chosen for the final resting place of the body. The management of the cemetery closed the gates before the arrival of the carriages and excluded from the grounds all who were not of the funeral party

WILL SURRENDER PORTER CHARLTON

Secretary Knox Has Granted Italy's Request.

WIFE MURDER IS CHARGED

Nation Compelled, Under Its Treaty, to Deliver Fugitives to Italy—Question of Charlton's Insanity One for Courts to Decide.

Secretary Knox has granted the request of Italy to surrender Porter Charlton, charged with the murder of his wife at Lake Como.

The secretary holds that the fact that Italy refuses to surrender her citizens to the United States for trial does not relieve this country from the obligation of the extradition treaty to surrender to Italy fugitives from justice from that country.

The question of the insanity of Charlton, it is suggested, is one for the courts and not for the department to determine.

Had Secretary Knox refrained from acting upon this case for six days, Porter Charlton would have been a free man, as the statutes required final action in the case within sixty days from the date of his commitment.

MET DEATH IN FLAMES.

While Woman Was Hanging Pictures Clothing Caught Fire.

Mrs. Spurgeon Simpson met a horrible death by burning at her home in Rocky Creek district, near Lawrenceville, Ga. She was engaged in hanging some pictures and was standing on a table in front of an open fireplace when her clothing ignited and the flames rapidly spread over her body. She was at home alone, and before assistance could be secured she was burned so badly that death resulted in a short time.

Mrs. Simpson was 23 years of age, the wife of Spurgeon Simpson, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Will Smith. Her tragic death caused great grief in the community.

The remains were interred at Harmony Grove, the funeral being conducted by her old pastor, Rev. J. S. Askew, of Isman, Ga.

CHANGES IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

Lodge May Succeed Reid at St. James' Court.

GENERAL SHAKING UP

Many Important Changes Are Determined Upon—Banker Schmidlapp Goes to Russia—Huntington Wilson Will Be Ambassador to Turkey.

A general shake-up in the diplomatic service is scheduled for February 1, according to gossip around the dinner tables in Washington official society. It is stated that President Taft has decided to leave all diplomatic selections save one to Secretary of State Knox and his departmental advisers, and that a number of important changes have already been determined upon. The one personal appointment which the president will make is that of J. G. Schmidlapp, of Cincinnati, to be ambassador to Russia, to succeed William Woodville Rockhill.

Mr. Schmidlapp, who is a prominent banker and a man of great wealth, is a warm personal friend of President Taft.

Senator Henry Capot Lodge, of Massachusetts, is slated to succeed Whitelaw Reid, of New York, as ambassador to the court of St. James. Rumor to this effect has been current from the time it appeared that Mr. Lodge would have difficulty in securing reelection to the senate. It has been denied, but the report is most persistent now that the senator is preparing to announce his retirement from the contest for the senatorship, and will enter the diplomatic service.

Huntington Wilson, now assistant secretary of state, will be made ambassador to Turkey, according to this gossip, which has it that Mr. Wilson is exceedingly desirous of securing this berth.

Thomas J. O'Brien, of Michigan, ambassador to Japan, will be transferred from Tokio, it is said, to one of the important European posts, just which one it has not been determined as yet.

Former Vice-President Charles W. Fairbanks, of Indiana, will garner one of the ambassadorial plums, and may be named as the successor to Mr. O'Brien, although it is understood that he prefers to go to Europe.

Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, who is one of the more prominent senatorial lame ducks as a result of the recent election, is talked of for a diplomatic appointment, but it is understood that the president has not waxed enthusiastic at the suggestion, and it is altogether improbable that more than one ambassadorship would be given to Indiana. Nothing less than an embassy would be inviting to Senator Beveridge.

It is stated now that no changes will be made for the present in the diplomatic representation at Paris or Berlin, but in view of the tip that a general shake-up is at hand shifts may be made in these important posts.

WOULD BE BURDENSOME.

Through Bills of Lading Proposition Stirs Up Furore.

President's Taft recommendation in his annual message to congress relative to the guaranteeing of through cotton bills of lading has stirred up a furore among the cotton interests of the south, who assert that the president's suggested plan would result in a heavy load upon this industry.

President W. B. Thompson, of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, has issued a statement in which he sets forth the injustice of the plan to the southern cotton growers and merchants. Official action is expected to be taken within the next few days by the New Orleans exchange and by commercial bodies generally throughout the south as a protest to congress against the adoption of any such plan as that outlined in the president's message.

COTTON MARKET EXCITED.

Cotton Traders at New Orleans in Frenzy of Buying.

Traders on the floor of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange were precipitated into a frenzy of buying which rivaled the most exciting occurrence of the history of the exchange following the posting Friday of the department of agriculture's estimate of the cotton crop for this season.

There was an immediate advance from 34 to 39 points in the most active positions in the future department.

The department of agriculture reported the total production of cotton as 11,426,000 bales. The 1909 crop was 10,004,949 and the 1908 crop, 13,587,306.

700-FOOT FALL.

Boy Plunged to His Death in Home-made Aeroplane.

Beneath the rock upon which he fell from the 700-foot plunge in his "home-made" aeroplane, the body of Walter Archer, the 17-year-old inventor, of Salida, Cal., was buried by his parents, and on the grave they burned what was left of the wrecked machine.

The burial of the lad at the spot where he met death was in accordance with his own wishes, expressed to his mother a few days before the accident.

VICTOR BERGER.

First Socialist Ever Elected to United States Congress.

$748,,414861 NEEDED BY U. S.

Secretary MacVeagh Submits Estimates for Appropriations for 1912.

The estimate of appropriations required for every branch of the federal government during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, aggregating $748,414,861, were submitted to congress by Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh. This grand total stands against estimates of $745,067,197 and appropriations of $805,294,513 for the current fiscal year, which appropriation included over $10,000,000 for the census and over $10,600,000 for the postal deficiency and other deficiencies.

The estimates were distributed as follows:

War department, $205,257,546; interior department, $189,151,875; treasury department, $141,599,997; agriculture, $19,681,066; navy department, $128,942,758; commerce and labor, $16,276,970; District of Columbia, $13,602,786; legislative, $13,426,806; justice, $10,063,576; state, $4,875,576; independent offices including interstate commerce commission, $2,638,695; postoffice department proper, $1,697,490; deficiency in postal revenues, no estimate yet; executive, $998,170; territorial governments, $202,150.

BEDOUINS MASSACRE.

More Than One Hundred Christians Were Killed.

A telegram from Jerusalem states that Bedouins have massacred the Turkish garrison at Kerak, a town in the Turkish villayet of Syria, and killed more than 100 Christian inhabitants of the place in revenge for the execution of a Bedouin chief.

The Bedouins, the dispatch adds, now hold the fortress, in the vicinity of which there had been desultory fighting between tribesmen and the government troops for the past year and a half.

Kerak, formerly the capital of Moab, has a population of 8,000, of whom 6,000 are Moslems. The town is the last on the road from Damascus to Mecca, where Christians reside. It stands on the mountains of Moab and may be seen from Jerusalem, 50 miles away.

There are no American missionaries there, the only missionary station being that of the British church missionary society for Africa and the east. This is a branch of the organization at Es Salt and is composed of one missionary, his wife and one native worker.

END TO ABSOLUTE REIGN.

Political Events in China Are Moving Rapidly.

It seems safe to announce that the ancient absolute regime in China will exist only historically after the Chinese new year, in January, 1911. It is stated that the throne has decided to accede to the resolution of the imperial senate praying for the immediate creation of a constitutional cabinet.

Political events in China have moved with a rapidity that appears almost revolutionary when it is considered that the provincial assemblies representing the first step toward popular government in the empire's history of thousands of years were inaugurated so recently as October 14, 1909.

BATH TUB TRUST INDICTED.

Criminal Proceedings Grow Out of Civil Suit to Dissolve Corporation.

The anti-trust campaign of Attorney General Wickersham has shifted to Detroit, with the result that indictments were returned by the federal grand jury against 16 firms and 32 individuals alleged to have control of 85 per cent of the annual output of enamel ironware bathtubs, sinks, lavatories, etc., in the United States. The combine is commonly known as the "bathtub trust."

The criminal proceedings grow out of a civil suit to dissolve the alleged combination, begun by the government in the federal court of Baltimore, hearings being held in Chicago, Pittsburg and New York within the last 40 days.

NOTES OF GENERAL INTEREST. Hankow and Hunan entirely prevails throughout the country. Martial law has been proclaimed in the capital and the larger cities of the republic and the jails are filled with political prisoners. Wholesale arrests of persons suspected of having some connection with the threatened uprising are being made on the orders of the president, it is reported.

A jury of twelve women sat at San Francisco in a superior court, when Judge Graham summoned that number of fair spectators to pass upon a modification of a decree of divorce, whereby Mrs. Mary A. Black acquired the custody of her son from Owen A. Black. Not being accustomed to jury service, the women failed to await instructions of the court, and agreed on a verdict without leaving the box. The court order was entered in accordance with this verdict.

Judge John R. Thornton, of Alexandria, La., was elected United States senator by the Louisiana general assembly, sitting in separate bodies, to succeed the late Samuel D. McEnery. Judge Thornton received a total vote of 106—32 in the senate, and 74 in the house.

Texas, the largest state in the United States in point of area, made greater progress in its increase in its population during the last ten years than any of the states which exceed it in the number of inhabitants and now takes rank as fifth state in population, passing Missouri, which in 1900 held that place.

Eugene B. Ely, in a Curtiss machine, made three successful flights at Columbia, S. C., inaugurating the two days' aviation meet in connection with the South Atlantic States Corn Exposition. He easily distanced an automobile in a three-mile race and glided to the ground from a thousand-foot elevation. These were the first aeroplane flights ever made in South Carolina.

A Washington dispatch says that in the estimate of appropriations needed for various public works for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, reported to the house, Georgia is well taken care of, the biggest items being an appropriation of $400,000 recommended for the Savannah harbor and $100,000 for the Savannah river. Brunswick harbor gets $30,000.

Attorneys for Joseph Wendling, convicted December 3 of the murder of Alma Kellner, and sentenced to life imprisonment, have filed a motion for a new trial. Nineteen reasons for a rehearing are given, chief among them being the affidavit that one of the jurors had formed and expressed an opinion before the trial. Judge Gregory set December 27 as the date.

Population statistics of the 13th census issued by the census bureau include figures for the following states: Arkansas, 1,574,449, an increase of 162,885, or 20 per cent. over 1,311,564 in 1900. The increase from 1890 to 1900 was 183,385, or 16.3 per cent. South Carolina, 1,515,400, an increase of 175,034, or 13.1 per cent. over 1,340,316 in 1900. The increase from 1890 to 1900 was 189,167, or 16.4 per cent.

Alabama produced 166,447 tons of pig iron during November, according to authoritative figures just given out, against 161,294 tons in October. For the first eleven months of this year Alabama is given credit for 1,763,000 tons of iron, against 1,532,950 tons for the same period a year previous.

The following are the announced cotton receipts for Athens, Ga., up to December 1, this year, and compared with the figures for 1909: General receipts to December 1, 68,840, against 75,090 last year; wagon receipts, 18,520, as against 16,228 last year at the same date. Over 2,000 bales were handled one day since December 1.

Andrew Carnegie has given $5,000 to the Uncle Remus Memorial fund, to aid in purchasing the "Wren's Nest," in Atlanta, as a tribute to the memory of Joel Chandler Harris. This last donation brings the fund to $13,000, and it is hoped that the remaining $12,000 will soon be raised.

Dr. Robinson James, a prominent physician, was killed and Samuel Dowty was badly injured at Bowie, La., by the explosion of a boiler in a shingle mill.

A CHAPTER OF CASUALTIES. Calvin Esele and Sylvester Peyton, negroes, were found hanging to a tree at Double Branches, two miles from Monroeville, Ala. They had been arrested on a charge of burning the barn and outhouses on the place of Edgar Bass, near Jones Mill, and confessed to the crime. A deputy sheriff of Monroe county had them in charge and was bringing them to Monroeville for safe-keeping when he was overpowered by unknown men, his prisoners taken from him and strung up to a neighboring tree.

John W. Schaum, formerly part owner of the Milwaukee Journal, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head with a revolver. Business troubles are assigned as the cause.

General Henry Edwin Tremain, one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, and one of the best-known lawyers of New York, is dead. Three weeks ago he passed his seventieth birthday.

Nearly $100,000 damage was done at Meridian, Miss., by a fire which raged for two hours in the residence section. Eight handsome residences were destroyed and for a time it appeared that several blocks of houses were doomed.

William Adler, former president of the defunct State National bank, pleaded not guilty in the United States circuit court, at New Orleans, to the new indictment which charges him with misappropriating funds of the bank. He waived examination and was released under bond of $10,000. Adler was convicted last year on a similar charge, but was granted a new trial by the appellate court. His trial on the new indictment is set for January 2.

John McGuire, 70 years old, who had been in the employ of the Louisville and Nashville railroad since the road came to Mobile 35 years ago, was burned to death in his tower at the crossing of that road and the New Orleans, Mobile and Chicago line. The supposition is that he overturned a lamp, setting his clothing on fire and was too weak to save himself.

Capt. William H. Scholes, who had been connected with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company since 1861, died at Mobile, Ala., after a long illness. He encountered the notorious train robber, Rube Burrows, when the latter was in his palmy days, and was fired at twice by the robber, but escaped under the coach unhurt.

General George D. Johnstone, one of the last surviving generals of the war between the states, died at his home in Tuscaloosa, Ala., at the advanced age of 78 years. He was born in Hillsboro, N. C., May 30, 1832, and came to Alabama with his parents in 1834.

Mrs. Lillie Easeley, wife of G. A. Easeley, a farmer residing five miles from Mobile, Ala., died from the effects of burns received while trying to light a fire with a can of kerosene. The oil touched a live coal and the can exploded. She was almost cooked from her waist down.

Her reason dethroned by brooding over the ravages of the boll weevil in her cotton fields during the past year, Mrs. J. R. Hudspeth, a wealthy woman planter of Yazoo county, Miss., committed suicide by jumping out of a boat into the waters of Wolf lake, about 9 miles from Yazoo City.

A freight engine on the Texas and Pacific railroad exploded at Odessa, east of El Paso, killing the engineer and fireman and seriously injuring the brakeman. The body of Engineer William Oliver was blown a hundred yards from the track.

John Brotous, the tallest Elk in the world, died at Paducah, Ky., of tuberculosis. He was 28 years of age and won the distinction he bore with the Elks' lodge at the Denver convention in 1907. He was 8 feet 11 inches tall. A special coffin had to be constructed for the body.

Charged with raising one-dollar bills to ten-dollar notes, R. V. Hickman, a young white man, was arrested at Macon, Ga., by United States deputies. The counterfeits were works of art and in general circulation in Macon, it is said.

Suspended by a piece of electric wire the body of Emil Muller, aged 51, was found by his wife hanging to a bedpost in his room at New Orleans. He had suffered with consumption a long time.

In plain sight of fifty fellow workmen, Charles Randall, a molder, leaped into a cupola of white hot metal at a foundry at Barnesville, Ohio. The man's flesh was entirely consumed and only the bones were recovered.

During a fisticuff at Grand Prairie, Tex., between Dr. O. B. Nicholson, a local dentist, and Hugh Foster, an 18-year-old youth, Nicholson was felled by a blow. In falling his neck was broken and he died within an hour.

W. L. Egan, of Watonga, a member of the Southwestern Normal football team, of Alva, Okla., died as the result of injuries received in a football game. He suffered a fracture of the skull.

Prof. Cooper D. Schmidt, professor of mathematics for 21 years in the University of Tennessee, and dean of the university, died at his home in Knoxville, Tenn., aged 51.

FOREIGN NEWS NOTES. An Italian aeroplane carrying an Italian officer and a private fell from a height of 80 feet at the military grounds at Centocelle. Both men were instantly killed. The aeroplane, which was a Farman machine, was in charge of Engineer Cammarota, and the accident appears to have been due to an attempt to make a short turn.

Landing at Orkney, Scotland, the crew of a balloon which left Munich reported the loss at sea of Herr Metzner. Driven by a furious gale across the north sea, the balloon dipped and a huge wave carried Metzner out of the basket, drowning him.

With a view to renewing relations with Colombia, the Panama government has commissioned Dr. Carlos Mendoza, formerly acting president of Panama, to go to Bogota on what is announced as a secret, confidential mission, but really to negotiate a treaty of peace.

At Rome, Italy, dispatch says: Francesco Tedesco, minister of the treasury, in making the financial statement to the chamber of deputies, announced that the net surplus for 1909-10 amounted to over 19,000,000 lire. The surplus for 1910-11 is estimated at 9,000,000 and that of 1911-12 at 10,000,000.

WATCHING THE FLIERS AT BELMONT PARK.

The aviation face is the latest. The hobble walk and motor stump have been distanced in popular interest by this new facial contortion.

The recent aviation meet at Belmont park, where bird men from this and other countries competed for "flying colors," produced a worried sky gazing expression which is now known as the aviation face, and masseurs will be busy for weeks to come ironing out feminine aeroplane wrinkles.

What to Do With Hats.

The most troublesome of a woman's minor possessions to take care of is the hatpin, for, no matter how carefully it is stuck in a cushion, something is bound to catch the head of the pin, and over goes the cushion, or else the fabric caught is torn. Even the tall decorative holders made especially for hatpins are likely to fall, as they become top heavy when several pins are put in them. The only sensible receptacle for them is a tall, thin necked vase of glass, glass and silver or of pottery. Thus, too, is employment provided for many a discarded ornament. One woman declares that from the cupboard for such buried treasures she has unearthed enough vases suitable for this purpose for all the bedrooms and has matched the color scheme in several instances in delicate Dresden affairs.

Telephone Hygiene.

A woman whose house telephone is necessarily used by many people keeps at hand a bottle of carbolic acid and a box of little squares of clean white cloth. Before using the phone she wets one of the squares with the solution and wipes the mouthpiece. This is an easy thing to do and may be the means of saving much misfortune.

The aviation face is the latest. The hobble walk and motor slump have been distanced in popular interest by this new facial contortion.

The recent aviation meet at Belmont park, where bird men from this and other countries competed for "flying colors," produced a worried sky gazing expression which is now known as the aviation face, and masseurs will be busy for weeks to come ironing out feminine aeroplane wrinkles.

What to Do With Hats.

The most troublesome of a woman's minor possessions to take care of is the hatpin, for, no matter how carefully it is stuck in a cushion, something is bound to catch the head or the point, and over goes the cushion, or else the fabric caught is torn. Even the tall decorative holders made especially for hatpins are likely to fall, as they become top heavy when several pins are put in them. The only sensible receptacle for them is a tall, thin necked vase of glass, glass and silver or of pottery. Thus, too, is employment provided for many a discarded ornament. One woman declares that from the cupboard for such buried treasures she has unearthed enough vases suitable for this purpose for all the bedrooms and has matched the color scheme in several instances in delicate Dresden affairs.

Cookery Points

Sift two quarts of flour, which would be eight measuring cupfuls, with a level tablespoonful of salt and one-half cupful of sugar. Heat two cupfuls of milk to the scalding point, add one-quarter cupful of lard, and when lukewarm turn in one-half yeast cake dissolved in a little cool water. Make a hole in the center of the flour, pour in the mixture, but do not stir. Cover and set away to rise light. When risen mix and knead and let rise again. Repeat the rising and cut down, then roll out, cut in rounds brush half of each with melted butter fold over and let rise in a pan set closely together. Bake in a hot oven.

Dutch Apple Cake.

Two cups of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one egg, one scant cupful of milk, four sour apples, three tablespoonfuls of sugar, three teaspoonfuls of shortening. Work in shortening, rubbing it with flour though a fork with a knife. Add beaten egg to milk. Combine ingredients, mixing with a knife and as little as possible. Spread dough one-half inch thick on a greased plate. Place the peeled and sliced apples evenly, shape edges of dough, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and add a few drops of melted butter before cooking.

in a sensible way. The bodice is of the peasant cut, and the skirt, though narrow, is not a hobble. The band of black satin is a modish feature, and the sleeves have the new flare at the elbow. It's altogether a most delectable little frock, and, let it be whispered low, it costs, ready made, only $15.

THEORY ABOUT WOMEN TESTED

A Queer Experiment and Its Happy Result.

"Good gracious, mamma," said Miss Louise Hewlett at the breakfast table, "just listen to this:

"Wanted.—A woman twenty years old, with artistic tastes, capricious, fond of golf, lawn tennis and dancing, to act as secretary."

"Singular," said the mother thoughtfully, "that the advertiser, whom I suppose to be a man, says nothing about beauty."

Since Miss Hewlett was looking for a position she answered the advertisement and was invited to call, which she did in the company of her mother. She found a man of thirty-five, serious, reticent and apparently in his right mind.

"I need also," said the advertiser, Mr. Dudley Vinton, "a housekeeper. If Mrs. Hewlett will take up her residence here with you in my apartments, filling that position, I will pay each a handsome salary."

The offer was accepted, and mother and daughter went to live in Mr. Vinton's apartments. From the first he treated them as guests, though Miss Hewlett was occasionally called upon to write a note or a letter or copy some papers relating to property. At the end of the first month Mr. Vinton paid the salaries and said that he would be glad to continue the arrangement indefinitely. Louise pouted. She filled the terms of the advertisement.

Another month passed. Mr. Vinton was absent occasionally, sometimes by day, sometimes in the evening. Once or twice he was away several days together. What called him, where he went or what he did he never told. Louise was piqued and delicately hinted that some reference to these absences would be at least civil. She did not like to be treated as a child or an entire stranger. Mr. Vinton failed to satisfy her curiosity, whereupon she tossed her head and declared that it was high time such a ridiculous arrangement was terminated. Mr. Vinton made no comments upon her action. Indeed, he seemed to be rather pleased with it, egging her on to more of the same kind. Finally she became angry and ended the interview in tears.

One morning a delicate little missive came for Mr. Vinton which fell into Louise's hands. She took it to him and watched him while he read it. His countenance was not to be read. Placing the note in his pocket, he went to his bedroom, and soon after Louise, who was watching him from a window, saw him go out with a suit case.

"Just what I expected," she said. "That note contained an invitation. He's gone to the country to visit some girl he's in love with."

Vinton remained away a week. When he returned Louise asked him when he intended to be married.

"I am not engaged," he replied.

They were sitting in the library at the time, and Vinton took up a book. Louise tried in vain to keep her tongue in her head. Finally she could endure the silence no longer and asked a number of inadmissible questions. Some of them Vinton answered, others he parried, while others he received in silence. But not for a moment did he manifest any dissatisfaction with her for attempting to pry into his affairs. Finally he told her that he had been to see an invalid who had died during his absence. Louise arose and strode silently out of the room. Vinton called her back.

"If you don't mind," he said, "I am curious to know what has offended you."

"You have led me to believe what was not true."

She stood waiting for him to continue the debate, but as he only said, "Thank you very much," she went out and spent the rest of the day in her room with the door locked.

At the end of the year Vinton invited mother and daughter into the library and announced to them that he desired to terminate their present arrangement.

"And now," he continued, addressing Louise, "I will satisfy your curiosity. A year ago I wished to make a very advantageous match. The lady's characteristics I described in my advertisement. I am a theorist and have a theory about women. It is that if a man wishes to know what a woman will do under certain circumstances he must infer that she will act exactly contrary to what he would expect. I desired to test this theory, and if it proved a law I would apply it to the lady I wished to marry and thus enhance my chances of success. During the past year I have applied the test to you seventy-eight times, and you have fulfilled the conditions sixty-nine times. You will readily see the advantage of having two women of like characteristics, the one to practice upon, the other"—

At this point in the theorist's exposition of his methods Louise rose from her seat and was sailing majestically out of the room when Vinton caught her about the waist and held her.

"Darling," he said, changing his tone, "there is one result of the experiment yet to be told. The practice piece became the object piece, and the object piece has passed from the problem. The invalid who died while I was away was the girl I was endeavoring to win. We never became more than strong friends, and while I was planning for the advantages that would have accrued in marrying her I was falling in love with you."

Banana Dainty.

Mix two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with a little cold milk, boil one cupful of milk in the chafing dish, stir in the mixed cornstarch, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar and stir till it boils, then let cook very slowly for fifteen minutes, stirring all the time. Stir in three yolks of eggs, half a grated lemon rind and the strained juice of the half lemon. Cook till it thickens, but do not allow it to boil. Peel and slice four ripe bananas, place the slices in a glass dish, sprinkle over with sugar and half a wineglassful of sherry wine. When the custard is cold pour it over the bananas and let it set.

Delicious Creamed Tongue.

Boil a calf's tongue the day before you wish to use it. Put it in boiling salted water and when tender let it cool in the same water. Peel and trim off all the rough places about the root and slice in small pieces. Melt two tablespoons butter in your saucepan, add one and one-half cups of rich milk; when hot blend in three level tablespoons of flour, one-half teaspoon salt, pinch of nutmeg, a dash of cayenne pepper and a teaspoon minced parsley. When smooth and creamy add two cups of sliced tongue and serve very hot with a good dish of French fried potatoes and fresh baking powder biscuits.

Sweet Potato Pie.

Parboil sweet potatoes and when done peel them and grate. Measure the grated potato, and to a solid pint of it allow one-half cupful of butter and three-quarters of a cupful of sugar. Cream butter and sugar together, add the beaten yolks of five eggs, beat in the potatoes and flavor with cinnamon and nutmeg to taste and the grated rind of a half lemon with the juice. Stir in a wineglassful of brandy and, last of all, the whites of the eggs, beaten very stiff. Pour the mixture into a deep tin lined with puff paste and bake.

Nut Cake.

One cupful of butter, two cupfuls of sugar, three and a half cupfuls of pastry flour, four eggs, one cupful of raisins, one cupful of walnuts, one cupful of milk, vanilla to flavor; cream butter and sugar, add eggs, then three cupfuls of the flour in which two teaspoonfuls of baking powder have been sifted twice. Add the milk alternately with the flour, and lastly add the fruit and nuts, chopped and dredged with the remaining half cupful of flour. Bake forty minutes.

Yorkshire Pudding.

A very nice accompaniment to a roast of beef. The ingredients are one pint of milk, four eggs, beaten separately; one teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder sifted through two cupfuls of flour. Mix very smooth, dip some of the drippings from the roast into a baking pan, pour the pudding in, put in hot oven, bake about half an hour, take out at last moment and send to the table hot with the roast.

Orange Marmalade.

Four tart oranges, two lemons, cut in small pieces; take out the seeds; put five pints of water over the oranges and lemons and one-half pint over the seeds and let stand twenty-four hours, then drain the water off the seeds and boil all two hours, then add five pounds of sugar and boil until it jells. This makes six or eight jelly tumblers.

One Way of Saving a Baby—Free to Try

The mother does not live who would not do all in her power to keep her child healthy, but often she does not know how. So when a doctor of standing points the way all can afford to listen.

It is an accepted fact that nine out of ten of the troubles of infants and children is intestinal. You notice it by the fact that the child is constipated, it belches, is peevish and cries. Don't give a remedy that contains an opiate, because the child will get in the habit of needing it, and don't become alarmed and run at once for a doctor.

Try a scientific laxative first. Give a small dose of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the remedy that is intended for the use of children. It is mild, gentle and non-griping. The remedy is absolutely pure and is guaranteed in every particular. Mrs. Toomey of Emingsville, Pa., and Mrs. Fred Croms of Alanson, Mich., never give their children anything else. These are only a few among thousands of women.

You can buy a fifty cent or one dollar bottle of any nearby druggist, for they have all sold it for a generation, but if you want to test it on your child first send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will cheerfully send you a free sample bottle.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specialized in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him, Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 602 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

Game of Elements.

To play this game seat yourselves in a circle, take a clean duster or handkerchief and tie it in a big knot, so that it may easily be thrown from one player to another. One of the players throws it to another, at the same time calling out either of these names: Earth, air, fire or water. If "earth" is called, the player to whom the ball is thrown has to mention something that lives on the earth, as lion, cat; if "air" is called, something that lives in the air; if "water," something that lives in the water, but if "fire" is called the player must keep silence. Always remember not to put birds in the water or animals or fishes in the air. Be silent when "fire" is called and answer before ten can be counted. For breaking any of these rules a forfeit must be paid.

Christmas After Dinner Trick.

Place three almonds on the table and cover each with a hat. Show your audience that you have nothing concealed in your hands and allow some one to mark the almonds so that there can be no question of any substitutes. Then pick up each hat, take the nut from under it and eat it, replacing the hats on the table. "Now," you say, "I will make all three nuts come under one hat. Which hat shall it be?"

After one of the three hats is selected you wave your hand mysteriously over the hat, say "Hocus pocus," and place the hat on your head.

This is an old trick, but it always takes. No one can deny that the three nuts eaten are under the hat on your head—now, can they?

The following from the Age-Herald's news columns of last Sunday is worthy of our consideration:

"Were it not for the fact that constitutional amendments are so unpopular it is possible that an effort would be made to correct this condition at this time. (Referring particularly to the stress of work placed upon the Governor at his inauguration.)

We doubt the correctness of this assertion. Amendments to the constitution are not unpopular, except when they are sprung upon the people unprepared for them. The constitution has stood the test of time and experience and should not be altered or amended at the whim of politicians. When an amendment is necessary, the people should be apprised of it, and after careful deliberation it should be submitted to them—if satisfactory it would be adopted, and if not satisfactory it would be dropped.

CIRCUIT COURT.

After a laborious session, which taxed the energies of Judge Pearson, Solicitor Loyd Tate and the juries, the fall term of circuit court was brought to a close Tuesday morning, when the Judge left for his home in Montgomery, Solicitor Tate following the same evening.

The trial of Mrs. Hattie Pope for the murder of her mother, nearly two years ago, with the details of which most of our readers are familiar, came to a conclusion last Saturday and the jury retired to consider their verdict, and it appears to have been a hard matter to decide, for it took the twelve good men and true from Saturday morning until Tuesday morning to arrive at the decision that Mrs. Pope was guilty of the murder of her mother and to affix the penalty at thirty-five years in the penitentary.

Mrs. Pope has consistently maintained her innocence of the crime, and the evidence has been entirely circumstantial, and the jury after, we believe, a longer deliberation than any jury in the previous history of the court, finally came to its decision.

Solicitors Tipton, Mullins and J. Osmond Middleton made an eloquent defense in behalf of their client, but it would not stand against the indictment preferred by Solicitor Tate.

The case of Walter Arledge indicted for the murder of his father last spring, was continued until the next term of court. Walter is out on bond.

David Knight and his son, Albert, were indicted for an assault with intent to murder Gil Gray, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty, sentencing David Knight to five years in the penitentary, and Albert Knight to ten years.

Jim Parker, a young white man, indicted for an assault on a young lady was sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary. Notice of appeal was given.

FROM SUPERINTENDENT HOBSON.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 27 1910

My fellow Alabamians:—I wish to enlist your cooperation in a movement of supreme importance to our state, that of improving education in the country districts.

Under our present system Alabama has dropped to a class by herself below the bottom of all the states. Comparative figures compiled for the years 1906 1909, show that Alabama's total funds for public schools are less than half the funds of Arkansas, are over $1,000,000 less than half the funds for each of our neighbor states of Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Georgia. The figures show that we devoted but $2 39 for each child of school age for the year 1909, while the average for the nine other Southern states was $3 52, nearly 50% more than for Alabama; the average in the United States being 1289 over five times as much. They show that on education we spent but 13 cents per 100 00 of our real property, while the average for the nine other southern states was 21 cents or 61% more in proportion to wealth and for the whole country it was 25 cents, nearly twice as much. The figures further show that Alabama's great lacking in the county and local funds, the very funds which in the raising create interest and local pride, the total funds from all county and local sources in Alabama being out 33% of the total, while in the southern states this average is over 72%. These astounding figures show our system in Alabama is improving our country schools and sapping their vitality, and is thus striking at the very root and foundation of our prosperity and our greatness.

The consequences are already appalling. Deaths from typhoid fever, dysentery, malaria, hook worm disease, anaemia and similar diseases resulting from ignorance have gone up to nearly double the average for the rest of the country. Our farmers have been selling their inheritance to outsiders, parting with priceless iron lands, coal lands, timber lands for a mere song simply because they do not know any better. Unless the standard of education is raited among our farmers, they will soon be dispossessed of their farm lands and thus complete their disinheritance by outsiders who possess an education.

No time can be lost. The Boll Weevil has crossed the state line. If we would avoid incalculable loss and a heavy depreciation of our already depreciated our whole system of farming must be fundamentally changed.

The Panama canal will be opened in a few years, and the eyes of the world will be turned to the South.

The close proximity of power, both coal and water power, to the raw materials of manufacture, cotton, iron and timber, is sure to make our state the greatest manufacturing region of the world. Producing as Alabama will, at minimum cost the finished product of the world's staples of clothing and materials of contruction, and coining in the former, as the south will, a world monopoly of a prime necessity of human life, there lies before us a future of possibilities of wealth and power beyond the dreams of men.

If our own people are to measure up to these possibilities, and are to restore our state and the south to the commanding position befitting our Anglo-Saxon blood, and if we are to fulfil our destiny, and cause southern ideas and devotion to principle once more to become the determining factors in moulding American institutions, then we must hasten the proper education of the masses of our people who live on the farms.

Unfortunately the constitution of the state now stands in the way, forbidding under all circumstance our country school districts from levying taxes for school purposes. Towns and cities can levy such taxes to properly educate their children, but the farmers are forbidden the same right, though this right is a fundamental part of the right of local self government. No other state in the Union, no other civilized comunity in the world has such an iniquitous law. Our rural schools being deprived by the Constitution of any adequate vital support, are necessarily in a langui hing condition.

I ask your hearty cooperation in the effort to remove this first great obstacle. Will you not confer with your members of both houses of the Legislature, in pearson or by letter, and ask them to use their influence to have a proper amendment authorizing local district taxation for school purdoses to be submitted by the coming session of the Legislature or a vote by the people, not later than next fall?

I should be glad if you would write to me here or to the state

TAKE CARE!

Remember that when your kidneys are affected, your life is in danger. M. Mayor, Rochester, N. Y. says: "My trouble started with a sharp shooting pain over my back which grew worse daily. I felt sluggish and tired, my kidney action was irregular and infrequent. I started using Foley Kidney Pills. Each dose seemed to put new life and strength into me, and now I am completely cured and feel better and stronger than for years." Upchurch Drug co.

Mortgage Sale.

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in the mortgage executed by Myrtle L. Marcus and T. C. Marcus to J. P. Hayes on the 11th day of November, 1909, to secure a debt of $2,300 00, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Judge of Probate of Chilton county, Alabama, in the Record of Mortgages, in Volume 97, on page 213, and on default having been made in the payment of the indebtedness secured by said mortgage, the said J. P. Hayes will proceed to sell at the Court House door in Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama, at public outcry to the highest bidder, for cash, on Monday, the 2d day of January, 1911 the following described real estate, situated in Chilton county, Alabama to wit: The S½ of the SW¼ and the NW¼ of the SW¼ of Section 22, and the E½ of the E½ of the NE¼ of Section 21, all in Township 22 of Range 14.

Said sale will be made for the purpose of paying the entire debt secured by said mortgage and the expenses incident to said sale, including attorney's fees.

This, the 1st day of December, 1910. J. P. HAYES, Mortgagee.

A SEA MYSTERY.

Showing That Hate Is Stronger Than the Elements.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

I have been on the sea for forty years and have passed through many dangers. Thus I have had ample opportunity to observe how different people will act in the presence of death. Three times have I been carried from a stranded ship over boiling seas in a breeches buoy and twice gone down with the ship. While I can't say that I have become used to it, yet I have gained self control in the presence of death, and this has enabled me to take notice of the action of others similarly situated.

Up to a certain point a marine disaster is like a battle, many on board being sustained by an endeavor to avert the catastrophe. But once all effort has become useless those exposed to the merciless waters sink to a condition of despair. Then the timid woman may rise above the vigorous man, and a little child may show more fortitude than all. Once, and only once, in my long experience have I witnessed a case where the fear of death from the waves was swallowed by something stronger.

In 187— I was captain of a steamer fitted up for the passenger service and running between New York and Bermuda. One trip we made at a season when travel was at a minimum and carried very few passengers. The day we sailed the weather was fair. The few passengers were supposed to be on board, and the gangplank was about to be drawn in when a man was seen running through the dock house for the steamer. I was leaning over the rail at the time to see that all was clear for pulling out, and as soon as the newcomer was aboard I turned away. Then I saw a passenger standing on the deck pale as a ghost.

"Did he get aboard?" he asked.

"Yes," I replied and gave the signal to move. I had too much on my mind to give any thought to the incident.

LET FALL HIS BLOWS WITH THE FURY OF A DEMON.

and it did not occur to me again till later in the voyage.

The next morning after breakfast as I was going up on to the bridge a man stopped me and said:

"Captain, since you have sailed one of your passengers has disappeared."

"How do you know that?" I asked.

"Never mind how I know it. I simply report the fact."

"Which one is missing?"

"His name is on the list as Elbert Carpenter."

"I will have a search made."

I called for the purser, went over the list with him and told him to find Elbert Carpenter. He made a search and reported that no such man was aboard the ship. A stateroom had been engaged under the name, but the key had not been called for. No one knew him, and it was not known whether he had come aboard or not. I sent for the passenger who had reported the matter and told him that it was probable the man had been left behind.

"No, he wasn't," said the informant. "I saw him on deck standing beside you when I came aboard."

"Are you the man who came late?" I asked.

"Yes. I was the last one to go up the gangplank."

Then I remembered the passenger who seemed to have been affected by the other's coming.

"What's your name?" I asked.

"Burton—Edgar Burton."

"Well, Mr. Burton, will you be good enough to tell me why you take so great an interest in this man Carpenter?"

Without reply he turned on his heel and left me. I asked the purser what it all meant, and he said he didn't know. A man had engaged passage under the name of Elbert Carpenter, but he had seen nothing of him. He had searched the ship and had not found him, but admitted that it was quite possible for a man to hide, especially by going away down into the depths of the hold. I took a look at all the passengers—there were but twelve of them—with a view to discovering if I could recognize the man who had stood beside me when we sailed. After examining them all I was sure he was not among them.

The affair was a mystery. The officers made it a topic of conversation while on and off duty, and the passengers in the smoking room talked and made bets about it. A pool was laid based on different solutions of the problem whether Carpenter had come aboard, was still aboard or had gone overboard. The only person from whom it seemed probable that information could be obtained was Mr. Burton, but when approached on the subject he shut himself up like a clam.

The more I thought about the missing man the more I recalled his appearance. He was rather long of body and short of leg, long neck and red hair, his face being sprinkled with freckles. Mr. Burton was in appearance his antipodes. His body was not long enough for his legs, which were like stilts. His complexion was dark, and his face wore a sinister expression. A scar on his left cheek was noticeable. His head was small, round as a bullet and set down on his high shoulders without any interval of neck.

I instructed the purser to continue to search for the missing passenger, for I had seen him, and he must have come aboard. Of course as soon as we made port his loss would be common property, the reporters would make a good deal out of it, and I preferred that we should be able to give an explanation. But the purser, I was told, poohpoohed both my evidence and that of Mr. Burton, which concurred, and made only a half hearted effort to find the man. His theory was that Carpenter had not come aboard.

But that occurred which put the mystery out of the heads of all of us. Before sailing the signal service had given a warning of a hurricane in the West Indies. I watched the barometer and one morning about four bells saw it drop like lead. It wasn't long after this that the wind began to send fragmentary clouds across the heavens, increasing hour after hour in violence till it was plain that we were in the teeth of the hurricane.

Our vessel was of average strength, but any ordinary ship having to stand the wind and waves of a hurricane is liable to give way. When a wave struck us it was as if several tons of rock had been hurled against us out of the mouth of a gigantic gun. The drops of water beating against my cheek struck like gravel stones. The only passenger on deck was Mr. Burton. I was on the bridge when I saw him come up the companionway, turn and look at the storm. It seemed to make no more impression on him than a twelve knot gale. Then, looking up at me, he sang out:

"This will drive him out."

At any other time the words would have seemed ludicrous, but now, knowing that if the hurricane did not blow itself out very soon our vessel would not be able to stand up against it, I had no interest in what the man meant. Indeed, soon after this I heard an ominous creaking and when the bow plunged down in between the monster waves and rose again I felt the ship bend at the waist. From that moment I knew she was liable to break in two.

It was half an hour after this that I left the bridge in charge of the first mate and went below to make an examination. By this time the passengers knew that the ship was about to go to pieces. Passing through the cabin, I found them all, except Burton, grouped while one of them was praying.

"Are we lost, captain?" asked all at once.

"I am going to see," I replied and hurried away. Passing down a companionway, I entered a lower deck. It was dark, but not so dark that I could not discern objects. And this is the sight I saw through the gloom.

There was the long bodied, short legged carpenter defending himself against the stilted Burton. Carpenter's weapon was a heavy furnace poker, Burton's a cutlass that he had stolen from among a lot of old arms that had been locked up in the ship for years. Burton made his thrusts and let fall his blows with the fury of a demon, while Carpenter, though on the defensive, had been driven to bay and was no less wildly vindictive. Both men were covered with blood.

The contrast between this picture and that of the huddled passengers I had just left occurring under the frightful conditions made my blood run cold. The ship and passengers were in my care. I was going to find out how great was the damage from the strain—whether, indeed, we had minutes or hours before being engulfed—and yet my steps were momentarily arrested by the sight of two human beings seeking to kill each other in the very presence of another, a more fearful, ending. Yet it was but a glance I gave them, then hurried on.

I found the strain great, but there were braces that bid fair to still hold the ship together for some time. Having noted this, I hurried back to the bridge by another route than that by which I had come, for I desired to shut off both the praying passengers and the fighting enemies. As soon as I reached the deck I noticed a lull in the wind and saw a yellow strip of light on the horizon in the direction from which the storm had come. I sent an officer to the passengers below to tell them the hurricane had passed and there was hope that the ship would not break in two.

It was not till the next morning that I considered the danger past. Then I went below to announce the good news to the passengers. All were in the cabin except Burton and Carpenter. As I left them I heard the voice of a passenger raised in thanksgiving for having been spared. I went on into the place where I had left the two men fighting and found them lying stone dead. What the elemental tempest had passed over the storm of hate had taken.

Their secret died with them. Nothing ever afterward came up to give a clew to the nature of the feud between them. We buried them at sea, sliding both over the ship's side together.

There Was No Applause.

Just before the operation began the operating surgeon said to the students, "Now, gentlemen, no applause, if you please."

When he was convalescing the patient declared that that warning remained his most vivid impression of the ordeal.

"I wondered then how any human being could have the heart to applaud an act that had brought another face to face with death, but later I understood. On account of heart trouble they did not dare administer an anaesthetic, so I was conscious of everything, and in spite of the pain I realized that the surgeon was doing a mighty skillful piece of work. No wonder the students wanted to applaud. They were justified in it.

"'Some years ago they would have clapped the house down after an exhibition of that kind,' an old hospital attendant told me, 'but nowadays doctors discourage any such demonstration.'"—New York Sun.

Forgery in Excelsis.

The most remarkable literary forgery on record was perpetrated in 1870 on Michael Chasles, a French scientist of European reputation. Chasles, who was in his dotage, purchased within a few years from one Vrain-Lucas no fewer than 27,000 autographs. A. M. Broadley tells the story in his "Chats on Autographs:" "Beginning with a supposed correspondence between the youthful Newton and Pascal, Vrain-Lucas proceeded to fabricate letters of Rabelais, Montesquieu and La Bruyere. Before he had finished M. Chasles became the possessor of letters in French, and written on paper made in France, of Julius Caesar, Cleopatra, Mary Magdalene and even of Lazarus after his resurrection." Vrain-Lucas was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and among other forged manuscripts from his pen there were produced in court letters from Alexander the Great, Herod, Pompey, Judas Iscariot, Sappho, Pontius Pilate and Joan of Arc!

The Llama With a Saddle.

In his native country the llama is trained as a beast of burden, and in this capacity is very useful for, hard and wiry by nature, he can carry as much as a 160 pounds. As a mount, too, he is quite easy to train. Indeed, both the llama and the oneiko take to the saddle as to the manner born when once they have assured themselves that their teacher wishes them well. Their most striking peculiarity as saddle animals, however, is a strong objection to having their heads in any way pulled about by their riders. So long as their mouths are left alone they will amble along quite contentedly at a fair rate of speed, but if they are ridden by some one with a heavy hand they show a tendency to stop at once, whipping round in a manner distinctly disconcerting to those who do not quite realize what is going to happen.—Wide World Magazine.

Turn About.

In a certain southern city the colored servants, as a rule, go to their own homes at night. The cook in the family of a clergyman not only does this, but of late has arrived at the rectory too late to cook breakfast. Hence her mistress lately told her that for each breakfast missed there would be a reduction in her weekly wages. Dinah passively assented to this, but next day the mistress heard the maid next door say to her:

"'Pears to me you get to work mighty late."

"I gets to work when I gets ready," was the reply.

"How does you manage about de brekfus?"

"Oh, I pays de missus to cook de brekfus.'"—Housekeeper.

FAMOUS NOVELISTS.

What Some of Them Did Before They Took to Writing.

Among those novelists who studied law we have Fielding, Scott, Charles Reade, Wilkie Collins, Blackmore, Washington Irving, George Meredith, Robert Grant, Henry James, Anthony Hope, Rider Haggard and Owen Wister. Journalism, which Mr. Kipling once defined as the one legitimate branch of the profession, is represented by Dickens, David Christie Murray, William Black, J. M. Barrie, Marion Crawford, George W. Cable, Stephen Crane, George Barr McCutcheon, Frank Norris, Richard Harding Davis and David Graham Phillips. The navy and merchant marine have given us Smollett, Captain Marryat, Fenimore Cooper, Clark Russell, Joseph Conrad and Morgan Robertson. Artists and architects include Thackeray, Du Maurier, Hopkinson Smith, Robert Chambers, Thomas Hardy and William J. Locke. Medicine and theology are not so well represented. Under the former head we recall for the moment only Smollett (naval surgeon), Holmes, S. Weir Mitchell and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle; under the latter, Sterne, Charles Kingsley, Henry van Dyke, Edward Everett Hale, Ian Maclaren, Ralph Connor and Thomas Dixon. College professors who have either given up their chairs to become novelists or have found time for occasional novels in the midst of their other duties are Sir Walter Besant, Robert Herrick and Brander Matthews.—Bookman.

PURE GLYCERIN.

It Is a Queer Substance Endowed With Peculiar Properties.

One of the great advantages of glycerin in its chemical employment is the fact that it neither freezes nor evaporates under any ordinary temperature. No perceptible loss by evaporation has been detected at a temperature less than 200 degrees F., but if heated intensely it decomposes with a smell that few persons find themselves able to endure. It burns with a pale flame, similar to that from alcohol, if heated to about 300 degrees and then ignited. Its nonevaporative qualities make the compound of much use as a vehicle for holding pigments and colors, as in stamping and typewriter ribbons, carbon papers and the like.

If the pure glycerin be exposed for a long time to a freezing temperature it crystallizes with the appearance of sugar candy, but these crystals being once melted it is almost an impossibility to get them again into the congealed state. If a little water be added to the glycerin no crystallization will take place, though under a sufficient degree of cold the water will separate and form crystals, amid which the glycerin will remain in its natural state of fluidity. If suddenly subjected to intense cold pure glycerin will form a gummy mass which cannot be entirely hardened or crystallized. Altogether it is quite a peculiar substance.

What She Did Wish.

"Well, why don't you say you wish you were a man?" asked Mr. Potts during a little discussion he was having with his spouse about some matters of domestic management.

"Because I don't wish anything of the sort," she retorted; "I only wish you were one!"

Quick Both Ways.

A Scotch laird once said to his servant, John, who had complained of his temper, "I am sure, John, it is nae suner on than it's off."

"Aye," said John; "but, laird, it's nae suner off than it's on."

Not at All Necessary.

"What was the cause of the quarrel with your husband?"

"I want you to understand, judge, that when we want to fight we don't have to have a cause."—New York Press.

MANURING THE GARDEN.

Work That Can Be Done in Winter to Make It Productive.

Cabbage, onions and other gross feeders require more manure than such vegetables as peas or beans. Henhouse droppings and hen manure are cold, but very rich, and should be put in large quantities on the plat where you expect to plant onions, cabbage or celery. Do not manure the potato patch with hen manure.

Ashes are good for the onion bed, as they are for most vegetables, if properly used, possibly being better for the grape vines and strawberries, as these plants require large amounts of potash, says a writer in Farm Progress. I have heard it said that tomatoes do not need fertilizer, but I have not found this true. Well rotted cow manure I consider the best for plants requiring warm soil, as the tomato, eggplant, okra and pepper. Peas and beans will require some manure, but less than any other vegetables. Lima beans will stand considerable fertilizing.

Stable and farm manure is better for the garden than commercial fertilizer, because it brings out a better mechanical condition of the soil, enabling it to stand both drought and excessive wet much better when it contains leaved vegetation. In case of beans or sweet potatoes, for instance, rotted straw, which contains but little elements of fertility, is ample because it is more essential to keep the soil loose and moist than to manure excessively.

I break the garden in the fall and apply manure in the winter, harrowing it in when the ground is dry in the spring. The plat where late cabbage and celery are to be grown should be manured heavily and replowed late in the spring after the weeds have started.

Every one should compost every available bit of manure. Build a rail pen in the garden, and into this throw all the ashes and trash about the place that will rot and become fertilizer. Pour the wash water into it, for it has some value. The pile will be ready to scatter over the garden in the spring.

There is a place for commercial fertilizer, too, though I use it sparingly. Two hundred pounds to the acre on the strawberry bed at blooming time will work wonders in both yield, quality and color.

If your neighbor's crops are better than your own don't be too proud to discuss them with him and find out why if possible. Then strive to raise better crops.

An Effective Farm Gong.

Get a disk from an old disk plow and drive a bolt through it into the top of a post as shown in the sketch. Then bore a small hole through the handle of a hammer and fasten it with a twenty-penny nail to the post about six inches from the top. A twelve foot post set eighteen inches into the ground is about right. This gives you a first class serviceable farm gong.—Farm and Fireside.

FARM GONG.

Keeping Cabbage In Fall.

Early in December turn each head over to the north and bank the soil over the stem and base of the head, leaving merely the top exposed. Some make the mistake of turning the heads south, and the heads will be certain to get damaged, for the stem and base of the head are the most tender parts, and these will be to the north, while the morning sun will strike the open head to the south when frozen and damage it, says Progressive Farmer.

A Schoolboy's Story of Jonah.

A school board boy, competing for one of the Peek prizes, evolved this confusion of widely different events. He had to write a short biography of Jonah, and he produced the following: "He was the father of Lot and had two wives. One was called Ishmale and the other Hagher. He kept one at home and turned the other into the dessert, when she became a pillow of salt in the daytime and a pillow of fire at night."—From Wheatley's "Literary Blunders."

Her Diplomacy.

"You could make my future brighter," he said, looking at her longingly.

"I could say the same," she replied, looking down.

"How?" he asked eagerly.

"Well, an engagement ring with a diamond in it would help some," she admitted.—Boston Herald.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson XII.—Fourth Quarter, For Dec. 18, 1910.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Matt. xxviii, 1-20. Memory Verses, 5, 6—Golden Text, Matt. xxviii, 20—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Those who know nothing of a risen Christ know nothing of faith or forgiveness of sins or life eternal and have no gospel to believe or preach (I Cor. xv, 14-19). It was the one great topic of Peter and Paul in all their preaching. "This Jesus hath God raised up." "The Prince of Life, whom God hath raised from the dead." "With great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus." "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus." "Him God raised up the third day and showed Him openly." "God raised Him from the dead" (Acts ii, 24, 32; iii, 15, 26; iv, 10, 33; v, 30; x, 40; xiii, 23, 30, 33; Rom. i, 4). Hear the Lord Himself to John in Patmos long after He had ascended. "Fear not. I am the first and the last; I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore, amen, and have the keys of hell and of death" (Rev. i, 17, 18). In Col. iii, 1, believers are spoken of as "risen with Christ" and are exhorted to seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.

After He died Joseph of Arimathaea went to Pilate and asked for His body, and he and Nicodemus took it and wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, with about 100 pounds weight of spices, and laid it in Joseph's new tomb and rolled a great stone to the door and departed. The women from Galilee, having seen where His body was laid, returned and prepared spices with which to anoint His body when the Sabbath should have passed and rested the Sabbath day. Was there ever a gloomier Sabbath to any believers? He in whom they had trusted as their Messiah, to whom they had lovingly ministered, for whom they had forsaken all, had been taken from them and crucified by the authorities as a wicked person, and now they were in great darkness, without any hope, for they looked not for His resurrection. "Having no hope and without God in the world" (Eph. ii, 12) is the condition of so many religious people today because they know not a risen Christ.

The first day of the week having come, they are found very early at the tomb to do what they had purposed for His dead body, but the tomb is open, the stone rolled away, and there is nobody to anoint, for as the angel from heaven said to the women: "Ye seek Jesus who was crucified. He is not here, for He is risen, as He said." Mary Magdalene, who came with the other women, seems to have run to tell Peter and John as soon as she saw that the tomb was open and the body gone. While she was gone the other women saw the angels and heard their message and went to tell the other disciples. Peter and John ran to the tomb, and, having seen for themselves that it was empty, the linen clothes lying just as when the body was in them, they went away again unto their own home (John xx, 3-10). Mary Magdalene returned to the tomb and stood weeping; then, stooping down and looking in, she saw two angels and heard them say, "Woman, why weepest thou?" Even as they spoke to her I think that she saw them looking beyond her, and, turning around, she saw a man whom she supposed to be the gardener, who also said to her: "Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou?" But not until He called her by name did she recognize Him. Thus He appeared first to Mary Magdalene even before He had ascended to the Father (John xx, 16-17) in His resurrection body. As she went to tell that she had seen Him He, having ascended and returned, met the other women and allowed them to hold Him by the feet and worship Him (verse 9). Part of the angel's message to the women was, "Go your way; tell His disciples and Peter" (Mark xvi, 7), the only one mentioned specially by name. Some time, somewhere, on that day He appeared to Peter alone (Luke xxiv, 34). In the afternoon He appeared to the two who walked to Emmaus, and He walked with them and opened to them the Scriptures. In the evening He appeared to ten of them (Thomas being absent), comforted them, showed them His hands and His feet and ate a piece of broiled fish and honeycomb before them (Luke xxiv, 36-43). Thus He appeared five times on that day, and we know that He appeared on at least five other occasions during those forty days. "He showed Himself alive after His passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God" (Acts i, 3).

At the end of the forty days, having commanded them to wait in Jerusalem till He should send them the Holy Spirit, He visibly ascended from the Mount of Olives, and when He shall come again to that same mount, bringing His saints with Him, Israel shall receive Him, and He will set up His kingdom (Acts i, 10-12; Zech. xiv, 4, 5, 9). Our commission during His absence is to be His witnesses in the power of His Spirit, in all the world, in the consciousness of His presence and the manifestation of His power, that from all nations may be gathered His body, the church, that so He may come again (Acts i, 8; Matt. xxviii, 19-20; Acts iii, 19-21).

This is an exact representation of the carton containing a bottle of St. Joseph's Liquid Liver Regulator, but it is much larger than this illustration, and printed in black ink on a yellow carton. Druggists and general merchants sell it at 50 cents a bottle, or you can get it direct from us at the same price. This is a delightful liver medicine—prompt, effective, and exceedingly pleasant to the taste. Try just one bottle to satisfy yourself—and you'll buy more.

will find, after a proper trial, that they feel much better and stronger from the use of St. Joseph's Liver Regulator, either liquid or powders. It removes toxic accumulations from the bowels and thus gives Nature an opportunity to build up the system and insure good health. It is good for adults and children. A few doses will prove its efficacy. Druggists and general dealers sell it, liquid, 50c a bottle; powders, in tin boxes, 25c a box, five boxes for a dollar. Avoid substitutes—be sure to get St. Joseph.

That Necessary Magazine

thinking man—for the professional man—for the busy business man—and his family; in short, it's for You

25 cents per copy

$3.00 a year

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

OUR 1909-10 CATALOGUE

of all American magazines is a money-saver. You can't afford to order for next year without first seeing it. If you appreciate superior agency service, and demand maximum magazine value for the fewest dollars, write for it—today. It's free to YOU.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

$25.00 REWARD.

I will pay $25.00 Reward for the arrest of Thomas F. Kernan, a white printer, who burglariously entered and feloniously took a number of articles from The Banner office on the night of December 20, 1910. Kernan is a man about thirty years of age; about five feet 7 inches in height; black hair; has two gold filled teeth, and weighs about 160 pounds. He is a member of the Typographical Union, and I respectfully request all Unions to look out for him. I will pay the above reward for his arrest and conviction.

DEATH OF ORR MAHAN

On Tuesday the 20th instant while engaged in operating the saw-mill of Mr. O. E. Latham, Mr Orr Mahan, was striken upon the forehead by a piece of bursted fly-wheel and so badly injured that he died at an infirmary in Montgomery where he had been taken. Mr. Mahan was about 22 years of age, was the son of Henry M Mahan Sr. of Clanton and held in high regard by a large circle of friends. His death is universally regretted and mourned.

Thursday morning early we had a touch of winter, in a slight fall of sleet.

HIGGINS THE JEWELER

Another Chilton County Citizen convinced that Dr. Higgins, at Clanton, understands the human eye. When a few days ago a certain citizen of Chilton came into Dr. Higgins' Office and his case was diagnosed examined and pronounced toxic ambliopice, the eye sight being distroyed by excessive use of tobacco or toxicants. The patient doubting as to Dr. Higgins' understanding his business. This certain citizen paid his R. R. fair to Atlanta to see Dr. Calhound, one of the state of Georgia's great eye specialist about his eyes and the above citizen of Chilton county again called and when Dr. Higgins asked what he could do a second time for the patient. The gentleman only stated as follows: "Doctor I just called in to congratulate you by telling you that I have been to Atlanta and saw Dr. Calhound and he told you were exactly right about what is the matter with my eyes and I thought, Dr. Higgins you, being a young man, would appreciate receiving congratulations on your work by an old skilled eye Doctor from other states besides Alabama.

Now after reading the above and many other congratulations extended to Dr. Higgins, such as that of Mrs. J. M. Powe, near Montevallo who said she would not take $50.00 for a pair of glasses Dr. Higgins charged her $4.00 for; that letter written by Judge Reynolds; that letter received from Camie Moore, Verbena Route 2; that congratulation from Mr. Wells, Verbena Route 2; the one I heard of from the pair I fitted, H B. Clever, Verbena and by calling in at Dr. Higgins' office and getting the address of 139 more if then, you are not or one not be convinced that Dr. Higgins understands fitting glasses to the human eye. Why you just pay your R. R. fare to Atlanta and be convinced as the above patient did. The R. R. Co. will appreciate your "pocket change."

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite a heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Mulberry

The friends of Mrs. Maude Veazey, wife of the late W. T. Veazey, regret very much that she has been taken to the Infirmary at Clanton. Mrs. Veazey has Typhoid fever and has suffered much. She was taken to the Infirmary for skilled nursing. We earnestly hope that she will soon be well again and at home with us, for she is greatly missed.

We regret also to note the sickness of Grandpa Rasberry. We hope he will soon be up again.

Mrs. W. M. Oden is also exceedingly ill, we are sorry to say, but we hope she will soon be up again, for she is the pride of the home.

Thorsby.

Dr. L. V. Stubler, who moved from Thorsby to Greenville about a year ago, paid a short visit to old friends and neighbors here Saturday.

C. E. Northrup, president of the Northrup Manufacturing and Supply Co., left Sunday night to pay his respects to his mother who is said to be dying in Connecticut.

The lecture on Gladstone, by Rev. George Eaves, D. D., of Birmingham, gives at Bates Hall under the auspices of Thorsby Institute, was well attended and greatly appreciated.

Thorsby Institute is receiving so many books that the management have made arrangements to double the capacity for storage at once.

There is activity in real estate in Thorsby these days that indicates a healthy growth rather than a boom.

Dr. A. C. Mastin of Fort Payne bought a 20 acre farm in town and expects to arrive with his family about January 1st.

U. M. Williams of Jemison has bought from W. E. Thomas the state building formerly occupied by Enoch Adams, and will open in a few days with a stock of general merchandise.

John R. Parnell now occupies the old Thorsby Savings Bank building in addition to his store on the corner, and has just opened a fine stock of grocery and granite ware. Other improvements in the way of new counties and show cases are also in evidence.

James M. Horn of Birmingham has bought a farm just north of Thorsby and will take possession within a few days he expects to engage somewhat extensively in poultry business.

A Mr Lacy of Birmingham has bought the Talafson home in Thorsby and will take possession early in January.

W. E. Louis of Marquette, Michigan spent a couple of days here looking for a large track of colonization purposes. When he left from Florida he expressed himself as well pleased with this section and liable to return to further investigation.

E. McPherson and wife, of Birmingham, were among the recent home seekers in Thorsby.

There is not a desirable house in Thorsby that is not occupied, and new house built for renting are snapped up before the roof is on.

Mary at the Tomb.

The Christ had died a shameful death,
And all the world was wrapped in gloom;
The shadows darkened in one soul,
When Mary looked into the tomb.

Her heart was turned from earthly things,
To Jesus Christ the Son of God;
Her soul was filled with joy supreme,
To walk the paths that Jesus trod.

Because she loved the Lord of Life,
She stood before His tomb in tears;
When in she looked and saw him not,
Her soul was filled with sadder fears.

Instead of Jesus whom she loved,
Two angles came before her eyes;
One said in tones so calm and low,
Why weep you, woman, for your prize?

She said with voice so worn and sad,
I see the tomb where Jesus lay,
But now I know not where he is,
For they have taken him away.

In bitter anguish of her soul,
She turned the way from whence she came
And saw before her standing there,
A man, but did not know his name.

The question of this man to her,
Came out in tones all bold and deep,
Why stand you there so sad, alone,
O woman, say, why do you weep?

She raised her voice in saddened tones
That showed her depths of grief and pain
Because her Lord was dead, and was
Not in the tomb where he had lain.

O, gardener, tell me true, said she,
Where tho hast laid my Lord, I pray;
Just let me know where now he rests,
And I will take him soon away.

Then in a voice she knew quite well
He sounded "Mary" in her ears;
She recognized the voice of Jesus,
Which drove away her saddest fears.

In joy she tried to touch his feet;
She thought her anguish then was ended,
He said to her, you must not touch,
For I have not to Father ascended.

But go and tell my brethren all
That I will soon ascend to glory.
She went away with rapturous heart
To tell to all the woodrous story.

The first case to be [illegible] is one dealing with cotton [illegible]

The Standard Oil and tobacco trust cases are numbers 5 and 6.

These will be reached for argument during the week of January 3.

There was never any opposition to the confirmation of Justice Lamar.

The judiciary committee of the senate met this morning and received the report of the sub-committee, and immediately agreed to a favorable report to the senate.

Realty Dealers Size Up Lamar.

The real estate dealers of Washington, being keen, alert men, are already sizing up Justice Lamar with an eye to business. After the new associate justice was confirmed this afternoon a large fat envelope reached the clerk of the supreme court addressed to Justice Lamar and marked in large black letters, "Please forward."

Real estate in Washington sells by the square foot. Many an aspiring statesman has found the possession of a few square feet to be a puzzle to a suspicious constituency and a bid to ambitious rivals. But with a justice of the supreme court it is different. He is a fixture in Washington's social and political firmament. He looks down from a serene height on the ephemeral statesman. Others may come and go, but he stays put.

FOUR HELD FOR ONE MURDER.

And Grand Jury Is Not Yet Done Indicting.

After having delved into the Barksdale murder case for three days, during which time a large number of witnesses were examined, the Baker county grand jury, in session at Newton, Ga., returned a batch of indictments, of which the following are four: Jesse F. Hudgins, charged with murder; Lloyd Lewis, a negro, charged with murder; P. H. Leary, stepfather of Hudgins, charged with being accessory before the fact, and Mrs. Joseph Leary, mother of Hudgins, charged with being accessory before the fact.

Hudgins has been in jail at Newton for several weeks. The negro, who was released after a committal hearing, has been rearrested.

Joseph Leary and Mrs. Leary were arrested in Albany by Sheriff H. H. Bickford, of Baker county. Mrs. Leary's bail has been fixed at $1,000.

These are the latest developments in the case, which has grown out of the finding of the body of Ernest E. Barksdale, a well known Tampa commission merchant, in an abandoned well on a Baker county farm on the 28th of October. It is believed that other indictments have been returned by the grand jury, though it is impossible to obtain information on this point. This will be the most sensational murder trial in the history of Baker county, when it comes up early in the new year.

DIXON FILES SUIT.

Author Seeks Damages From the City of Americus, Ga.

Charging conspiracy on the part of two ministers of the gospel and five members of the city council of Americus, Ga., to prevent the presentation of his play, "The Sins of the Father," in that city, Thomas Dixon has filed suit in the United States circuit court against them as defendants for $100,000 damages, actual and punitive.

In the suit the Southern Amusement Company, as owner and producer of the play, joins Mr. Dixon, the author and the leading actor in the cast, charging that Rev. L. Burroughs entered into conspiracy with Rev. R. L. Bivins to prevent the presentation of "The Sins of the Father" in Americus, assigning as a reason for their action, "immoral tendencies on the part of the play."

CLIMAX TO DARING ROBBERY.

Lone Man Loots Bank, Then Takes His Life When Cornered.

Ira Ward, 30 years of age, who, it is said, this morning robbed the State Bank of Paradise, at Paradise, Kan., securing $2,500, killed himself when surrounded by a posse of farmers 14 miles north of that place.

Ward's suicide came as a climax to a most sensational robbery. He had made a hard ride for liberty, but as the farmers over the entire section had been notified by telephone the posse easily picked up his trail.

For five hours he eluded the farmers, but about sundown he was surrounded.

CHANGES IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

Lodge May Succeed Reid at St. James' Court.

GENERAL SHAKING UP

Many Important Changes Are Determined Upon—Banker Schmidlapp Goes to Russia—Huntington Wilson Will Be Ambassador to Turkey.

A general shake-up in the diplomatic service is scheduled for February 1, according to gossip around the dinner tables in Washington official society. It is stated that President Taft has decided to leave all diplomatic selections save one to Secretary of State Knox and his departmental advisers, and that a number of important changes have already been determined upon. The one personal appointment which the president will make is that of J. G. Schmidlapp, of Cincinnati, to be embassador to Russia, to succeed William Woodville Rockhill.

Mr. Schmidlapp, who is a prominent banker and a man of great wealth, is a warm personal friend of President Taft.

Senator Henry Capot Lodge, of Massachusetts, is slated to succeed Whitelaw Reid, of New York, as ambassador to the court of St. James. Rumor to this effect has been current from the time it appeared that Mr. Lodge would have difficulty in securing reelection to the senate. It has been denied, but the report is most persistent now that the senator is preparing to announce his retirement from the contest for the senatorship, and will enter the diplomatic service.

Huntington Wilson, now assistant secretary of state, will be made ambassador to Turkey, according to this gossip, which has it that Mr. Wilson is exceedingly desirous of securing this berth.

Thomas J. O'Brien, of Michigan, ambassador to Japan, will be transferred from Tokio, it is said, to one of the important European posts, just which one it has not been determined as yet.

Former Vice-President Charles W. Fairbanks, of Indiana, will garner one of the ambassadorial plums, and may be named as the successor to Mr. O'Brien, although it is understood that he prefers to go to Europe.

Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, who is one of the more prominent senatorial lame ducks as a result of the recent election, is talked of for a diplomatic appointment, but it is understood that the president has not waxed enthusiastic at the suggestion, and it is altogether improbable that more than one ambassadorship would be given to Indiana. Nothing less than an embassy would be inviting to Senator Beveridge.

It is stated now that no changes will be made for the present in the diplomatic representation at Paris or Berlin, but in view of the tip that a general shake-up is at hand shifts may be made in these important posts.

STUDENTS ARRESTED.

Trouble at the North Georgia Agricultural College.

The entire student body of the North Georgia Agricultural college at Dahlonega has been under arrest, following the bursting of the big government cannon in the barracks, which resulted in much damage to surrounding property.

It is said that some of the students loaded the cannon with fifty pounds of giant powder and attached fifty feet of fuse and lighted it. When the explosion followed, all were snug in their bunks. The missing breech block of the weapon was substituted with heavy chains and scrap iron.

The barracks and contents were completely demolished and hundreds of windows about the school were blown out. The school is under $6,000 bond to the government as a guarantee for the security of the cannon.

As fast as the students sign affidavits to the effect that they had nothing to do with the blowing up of the cannon they are released and allowed to go to their homes for the holidays.

FIGHT IN MEXICO.

Federal Troops Routed and Several Hundred Killed.

Federal troops were completely overthrown in an engagement lasting several hours at La Junta, a small town near Mineca, on the Mexico Northeastern and Orient railroad, according to authoritative information received by the officials at El Paso, Texas.

The remnant of the federal troops, numbering 150, surrendered their arms and ammunition and were allowed to depart in the direction of Chihuahua.

As telegraph wires were cut in many places, no details of the battle can be obtained. A telephone wire running north through the mountains brought the news to the Juares branch of the Mexico Northwestern that the federals were overwhelmingly defeated and that the survivors had surrendered.

The federal forces were supposed to number more than 1,000 men and were in command of Generals Nevarro and Hernandez.

Prof. Cooper D. Schmidt, professor of mathematics for 21 years in the University of Tennessee, and dean of the university, died at his home in Knoxville, Tenn., aged 51.

SIDNEY ANDERSON.

This Young Man Takes Tawney's Place in Congress.

ATHENS CHOSEN BY FARMERS.

As General Headquarters for the Agricultural Federation.

The general headquarters of the Federated Agricultural Association of Georgia were fixed at Athens in the concluding session of the farmers' meeting held in Macon. State Entomologist W. L. Worsham at the morning session thoroughly discussed the boll weevil, and he presented his subject in splendid manner.

Professor A. G. Soule presided during the day until President Scott, of Forsyth, was introduced. The latter was enthusiastic in his talk.

The educational train to be sent out in charge of Dr. Soule was indorsed by the body. The next session will be held in Athens January 17 and 18, when more will be accomplished toward enlisting all agricultural organizations in the movement for the good of the farmer.

BROTHERS HAVE A FATAL DIFFICULTY

Duel to the Death Over Gray Mule.

SHOCKING ALABAMA TRAGEDY

John and Will Benefield Quarreled Over Mule—White Benefield Tried to Make Peace in Vain, and Then Shooting Began.

As the result of a quarrel over the ownership of a small gray mule, Will Benefield, John Benefield and White Benefield, brothers and well-to-do farmers, who reside near Hopewell, Ala., just across the Georgia line, engaged in a duel with revolvers and all three were killed.

During the fight, the mule, which was the innocent cause of the fight, was also killed.

It seems that the mule was in the possession of John Benefield, but Will Benefield claimed to be the owner, and had demanded the return of the animal. John Benefield refused to surrender the mule, alleging that his brother's claim was unjust.

A bitter quarrel between Will and John Benefield followed, and White Benefield, the older brother, tried to act as peacemaker and have the ownership of the mule submitted to arbitration.

John Benefield was willing, but Will Benefield said the mule was his property and he intended to have the animal.

Will Benefield tried to lead the mule away, and was warned to stop by his brother John. There was another exchange of bitter words, and then both John and Will Benefield drew their revolvers and began firing at each other at close range. Both men emptied their revolvers, every shot taking effect.

When the smoke cleared away, John and Will Benefield and the mule were dead, and White Benefield, who had tried to stop the quarrel, was dying. He lived only a few minutes.

All three brothers were prominent in their section, and each of them leaves a wife and children.

While the dispute over the mule was the immediate cause of the tragedy, it is said that the real bitterness between John and Will Benefield was due to an alleged insult which Will Benefield is said to have offered John's wife.

HEAVY VERDICT.

Pennsylvania Roads and Steel Co. Convicted on Rebating Charge.

The United States district court at Philadelphia has refused to grant a new trial to the Philadelphia and Reading railway, the Lehigh Valley railroad and the Bethlehem Steel Company, recently convicted on charges of rebating.

There are a large number of counts in the indictments against the three companies, and if the maximum penalty were imposed against each defendant, the Bethlehem Steel Company would have to pay a fine of $9,200,000, the Lehigh Valley railroad $2,560,000 and the Reading railway $1,740,000.

The jury, in rendering its verdict of guilty, however, recommended the companies to the mercy of the court.

PARTIES FILE REPORTS.

Democrats Spent Less Than G. O. P. in Late Campaign.

The republican congressional committee received $77,461 and disbursed $74,273, while the democratic congressional committee received $27,790 and disbursed $27,771 during the recent campaign, according to reports filed with the clerk of the house of representatives.

These reports were made in accordance with the act of June 25, 1910, providing for publicity of contributions.

Democratic expenditures of $300 each are shown for the campaigns in a number of congressional districts, including the third Kentucky, the eighth Tennessee, the tenth North Carolina.

Of the amount contributed to the republican cause, $47,039 was cash on hand at the time the publicity act was passed. The democratic balance on hand then was only $13,258.

The republican report shows fifty-two contributions in excess of $100 and the democratic report thirteen.

The largest individual contribution to the republican fund was made by Representative William McKinley, which amounted to $5,000. The republican state committee of Louisiana contributed $2,000.

The largest individual contribution to the democratic fund was $1,000, from William E. Berber, of New York city.

GUILTY OF FRAUD.

Charge Against Huston, Former U. S. Treasurer.

James N. Huston, treasurer of the United States from 1889 to 1891, was convicted at Washington with Harvey M. Lewis, of Cincinnati, and Everett Dufour, of Washington, by a jury in the criminal court, on indictments charging the use of the mails to defraud in connection with the operation of the National Trust Company and other concerns.

The trial lasted five weeks, but the jury was out only a few hours. The maximum penalty for the offense is two years' imprisonment and a fine of $10,000.

The three men indicted were allowed to remain at liberty on their bonds pending the hearing of a motion for a new trial, which will be made within a few days.

The trio was indicted January 2 last by the federal grand jury, following a raid on the office of the National Trust Company by post-office inspectors in September, 1909. The company, which was incorporated in Delaware, with a capital stock of $1,000,000, it is alleged, guaranteed the stock of other companies on a commission basis. The inspectors declared at the time that they failed to find any material funds to justify the guaranty assertions.

RIVIERA RAVAGED BY FLOODS.

Valuable Cultivated Lands Devastated. Residents Flee For Their Lives.

The Italian Riviera has suffered greatly from the recent storms and the weather threatens even more loss. Miles of cultivated farms have been devastated. San Remo is flooded, and many of the residents of that city were compelled during the night to escape from windows, their houses being surrounded with water. Several persons have been drowned.

The railway between Bordighera and the french frontier has been interrupted on account of washouts. All the rivers in the north are at the flood point. The Tiber also is rising fast. A hill on its banks on which the village of Pontenuovo stands is being rapidly undermined, and its collapse is threatened.

CONGRESSMAN COOK STRICKEN.

House Adjourns Out of Respect to Pennsylvanian's Memory.

Congressman Joel Cook, of the second Pennsylvania district, comprising part of this city, is dead. Mr. Cook was stricken with apoplexy in Washington last Saturday, and failing to show any improvement, he was removed to his home in Philadelphia. He was 63 years old.

After a session lasting less than a quarter of an hour, the house adjourned out of respect to the memory of Representative Cook.

White Woman's Clothing Caught Fire.

Mrs. Spurgeon Simpson died at her home in Rocky Creek district, near Lawrenceville, Ga. She was engaged in hanging some pictures and was standing on a table in front of an open fireplace when her clothing ignited and the flames rapidly spread over her body. She was at home alone, and before assistance could be secured she was burned so badly that death resulted in a short time.

Mrs. Simpson was 23 years of age, the wife of Spurgeon Simpson, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Will Smith. Her tragic death caused great grief in the community.

The remains were interred at Harmony Grove, the funeral being conducted by her old pastor, Rev. J. S. Askew, of Inman, Ga.

END TO ABSOLUTE REIGN.

Political Events in China Are Moving Rapidly.

It seems safe to announce that the ancient absolute regime in China will exist only historically after the Chinese new year, in January, 1911. It is stated that the throne has decided to accede to the resolution of the imperial senate praying for the immediate creation of a constitutional cabinet.

Political events in China have moved with a rapidity that appears almost revolutionary when it is considered that the provincial assemblies representing the first step toward popular government in the empire's history of thousands of years were inaugurated so recently as October 14, 1909.

CABINET DINED BY PRESIDENT.

Brilliant Assemblage Gathers at White House—Musicale Follows Dinner.

The first cabinet dinner of the season was given by the president and Mrs. Taft at the white house Thursday. Among the guests were the vice president and Mrs. Sherman; members of the cabinet and their wives; several senators and the governors of Delaware and New Jersey; the governor of Virginia and Mrs. Mann; Governor Deneen, of Illinois, and Mrs. Deneen; Governor Gillett, of California; Major General Wood, chief of staff of the army, and Mrs. Wood, and many others.

The table was decorated with pink roses and maidenhair ferns. A musicale followed the dinner.

HUGHES FOR PRESIDENCY.

Republicans Have Eye on the Jurist.

Quiet talk of Charles E. Hughes, associate justice of the supreme court, for the republican presidential nomination in 1912 has been heard among prominent republican members of both branches of congress this week. The suggestion has been made in event President Taft does not care to stand for renomination or that his renomination would seem inadvisable.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES. An emergency fund of several thousand dollars has been raised among some of the leading Baptist educators of Alabama as the beginning of a sum of money which is to be regularly set aside to aid in eliminating expenses of the Baptist institutions of Alabama. The work is in charge of J. C. Carter, of Roanoke, who is chairman of the educational commission of the Baptist church.

In the space of twelve months a reduction has been made in the deficit of the postoffice department of $11,500,000, according to the annual report of Postmaster General Frank H. Hitchcock. While a year ago the fiscal records of the postal service disclosed a deficit of $17,500,000, the largest in the history of the country, the excess of expenditures over receipts for the year ended June 30, last, amounted to only $5,848,566.

Six new cases of cholera have been reported from Palermo, Italy, all being among the patients in the asylum for the insane. One death has also occurred there. In addition, two cases are reported from other districts.

What is said to be a new record for quick coaling of a naval vessel was made at Charleston, S. C., when the converted gunboat Yankton took aboard 140 tons in two hours and 59 minutes, or at the rate of a ton per man per hour. Nearly two hours more were allowed for the work. The Yankton sailed for Bermuda, resuming her cruise.

Lela Dean, the young woman who was arrested in Atlanta while she was parading the streets, shorn of her locks and dressed in the attire of a man, was fined $25 and costs in the recorder's court in addition to being bound over under $300 bond for carrying concealed weapons.

The list of candidates for United States senator from Louisiana has been increased to four, with the formal announcements of Congressman Robert F. Broussard, of New Iberia, and L. E. Thomas, of Shreveport, a member of the legislature.

The Oklahoma legislature has attached to the capital removal bill the emergency clause, which makes the law effective immediately. The bill was engrossed and sent to the governor. He has fifteen days to consider it.

Abe Attell, of California, easily defeated Palmer, of Philadelphia, in a ten-round bout before the Fairmont Athletic club in New York City.

A CHAPTER OF CASUALTIES. Robert and Charles Ferris, aged 9 and 5 years, were burned to death at Reynoldsville, Pa., and their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Grover Ferris, were fatally injured, and the only other members of the family, Maud, aged 11, and a baby, were badly hurt in a fire which destroyed the Ferris home.

While attempting to arrest a bunch of negro gamblers at Pine Park, Grady county, Ga., Marshal Prevatt was wounded and one of the negroes killed. The marshal, with three deputies, went out to arrest the negroes, who resisted them, and began shooting at the marshal, wounding him through the hand. One of the negroes was killed by a deputy as he was aiming his gun at Marshal Prevatt.

Naval Constructor Washington L. Capps has started for the Philippines to consider plans for the establishment of American fortifications in the Pacific. He is going to make a careful study of the navy yard at Cavite in Manila harbor and the naval station at Olongapo, on Subig bay. Part of the general scheme of naval development in the Pacific is to create an American Gibraltar at Pearl harbor.

Sixteen Chinese concealed in a box car were arrested at Ysleta, below El Paso, and two Americans were also arrested, charged with smuggling the Chinese into this country. The car had been lined around the sides with baled hay, leaving a space in the middle of the car, and into this space the Chinamen had been let down from the roof.

Sam Reighley, of Moweaqua, Ill., was shot and killed at Hot Springs, Ark., by Patrolman Willox Ford, while resisting arrest. Reighley was arrested for being disorderly. It is said he recently inherited considerable money, and had come to Hot Springs in search of his health.

Robbers held up Cashier J. H. Comer, of the Prue State bank, at Prue, Okla., at the point of a revolver, took what money was available and escaped. The amount taken has not yet been ascertained. Citizens formed a posse and pursued the robbers.

John J. Smyth, a bartender, who shot and killed his wife and young daughter at their home in Norfolk last August, was electrocuted in the penitentiary at Richmond, Va. Jim Stuang, a negro, who murdered a 70-year-old white woman in Rockingham last August, was also put to death.

E. D. Boseman, a farmer about 65 years old, was shot to death and his son, Otto Boseman, aged 22, badly, if not fatally, wounded by Coy Blackman, a youth of 22 years, at Hartsville, S. C. Blackman made his escape. The shooting occurred as the result of a quarrel over the ownership of a pistol, it is said.

Vice-President Edward Van Wyck Rossiter, of the New York Central lines, died at his home in Flushing, L. I., of a complication of diseases. His life had been despaired of for several days and his wife and family were at his bedside. Mr. Rossiter spent his life in the service of the New York Central.

The supreme court of the United States has held that the federal court of New York had erred in dismissing certain counts of indictment against F. Augustus Heinze, charging misapplication of funds of the Mercantile National bank of New York. Further proceedings must now be had in the lower court.

Mrs. Lillie Easeley, wife of S. A. Easeley, a farmer residing five miles from Mobile, Ala., died from the effects of burns received while trying to light a fire with a can of kerosene. The oil touched a live coal and the can exploded. She was almost cooked from her waist down.

A dozen passengers were injured on the Hudson Valley railroad, north of Schuylerville, N. Y., when a passenger trolley car crashed into two freight cars which had broken from an electric engine. None of the passengers escaped injury, although there were no fatalities.

During a fistfight at Grand Prairie, Tex., between Dr. O. B. Nicholson, a local dentist, and Hugh Foster, an 18-year-old youth, Nicholson was killed by a blow. In falling his neck was broken and he died within an hour.

Great credit must be given to Percy Haughton, head coach of the Harvard eleven, for the showing of the team this season. While it must be admitted that Haughton was fortunate in having many veterans left from last year's team, it was his splendid idea of the opportunities that the new rules offered that enabled the Crimson eleven to win the eastern football championship. Every day during practice three squads could be seen at work on the new rules. So good were Haughton's second and third teams that the head coach said several times that he could have won the championship with No. 2 or 3. With the wealth of material for the 1911 team on hand Harvard men think that they will capture the laurels next year.

Maher to Become a Trainer.

The present racing season will see the end of Danny Maher as a leading figure in the saddle on English racing tracks on the flat.

He cannot do less than 126 pounds, and this is almost a prohibitive weight for any man who aspires to be a leading jockey in England. The English racing track will, however, continue to know him as a trainer, and occasionally he may be seen in the saddle in hurdle races and steeplechases.

For some time he has been looking out for favorable training quarters in Ireland where he will combine the breeding of high class thoroughbreds with training horses for some of the owners who have so long and faithfully patronized him for his skill and integrity as a jockey.

He is at the moment in negotiation for the stables on the Curragh, in County Kildare, which were at one time occupied by Richard Croker. But if the deal does not go through he means to build an establishment of his own near Nenagh, in Tipperary.

It is computed that at the end of the present racing season Maher will be $1,000,000 strong at his bankers, so there can be no question of monetary considerations to interfere with his schemes.

New Style Billiard Table.

New York amateur billiard club players are practicing on a new style table which is 5 by 5 feet instead of the regulation size—9 by 4½. On the new table balk line billiards are being played, and the square form does away with the long drive, so that there is no advantage which rail is selected by the player. It has upset the play of some of the cracks and puzzles them when angles and forces are considered. The three cushion shot is very difficult to execute, and simple caroms, single cushion shots, draws and follows are about all the style of shots any one but an expert can make. Another innovation is the use of two red balls and one cue ball in some games. Each player uses the same ball and so eliminates very largely the safety play. This game has been popular in Paris for several years.

FOR THE CHILDREN

How to See Sun Spots.

We are indebted to accident for many a useful discovery, and a Massachusetts gentleman has now by chance found out something which, if not valuable, is at least interesting.

What he found is that it is quite possible to see the larger spots that appear on the sun's surface without glass or lens of any kind.

It has long been known that when these objects attain unusual dimensions they can be glimpsed by direct vision through smoked glass, similar to the appliances used to view solar eclipses. But that sun spots can be seen without the assistance of this sort is something new.

The shutters of the observer's house happened to be closed, and through a tiny hole near the top of them a beam of sunlight found its way to the floor. There it left an image, clear and round, tinged at the circumference with a fringe of blue and orange. The whole appearance of the beam as projected reminded the spectator of the image of the sun taken on paper through a telescope, and he at once got a sheet of white note paper in order to test his surmise.

The result confirmed it. A beautiful round image of the sun fell on the paper, and near the center thereof could be seen a bluish spot which moved about with the image whenever the paper was shifted.

The bluish colored object was a veritable sun spot, and the observer watched it by the simple means described for several days until the revolution of the sun had carried it out of sight.

Indoor Hunting.

Fred heard a sudden snapping clang, and then he saw something fly along above his head. Fred is a dog, and his business in life is going hunting birds with his master, who is the chief of police of Portland, Ore. Fred saw the something above his head and quite naturally thought that it was a bird. So he set off to catch the bird. He did not stop to remember that he was in a drug store with his master and that a drug store is no place to go hunting in. He was thinking only about the bird. Over counters and displays he went, scattering behind him all the bottles and packages that drug stores usually have put out for people to buy, and he ended his chase at the cashier's cage. There the bird had stopped, and as the drug store proprietor and the chief of police came running through the ruin that he had left behind him Fred understood at last. It was not a bird. It was only the basket that runs on wires from the salesman's counter to the cashier and back again.—Chicago News.

Conundrums.

I am the captain of twenty-six soldiers. Without me Philadelphia could not exist. What am I? The letter A.

Why is the woodman's ax an inconsistent weapon? Because it first cuts a tree down and then cuts it up.

Why is an innkeeper like a multitude of people? Because he is a host himself.

Why is the blush of modesty like a little girl? Because it becomes a woman.

Why is a bad joke like a useless pencil? Because it has no point.

If you should see a counterfeit coin on the street, why should you pick it up? Because you might be arrested for passing it.

Why is a king like a hat? They both have crowns.

Why is love always represented by a child? Because it never reaches the age of discretion.

What key sometimes opens the prison? Whisky.

Elastic Spider Web.

The common garden spider, sometimes called the geometric spider, makes a beautiful radiated net which shows great skill in the way it is placed, in its strong framework made of strong threads or ropes and its net spun between them. The threads are elastic, so that they yield to the wind even when the web is tightly drawn. When the wind is more than ordinarily violent, so that the net is dangerously stretched, the spider hangs pieces of wood or stone or other substances to the web to steady it.

The web is nearly circular and is composed of a number of straight lines radiating from a common center and having a spiral line wound regularly upon them. The radiating lines are smooth and not elastic, whereas the spiral line is thickly studded with minute knobs and is elastic. The little knobs are made of a sticky substance which holds insect wings and legs.

The Boy Who Forgets.

I love him, the boy who forgets.
Does it seem such a queer thing to say?
Can't help it. He's one of my pets,
Delightful at work or at play.
I'd trust him with all that I own
And know neither worries nor frets,
But the secret of this lies alone
In the things that the laddie forgets.

He always forgets to pay back
The boy who has done him an ill,
Forgets that a grudge he owes Jack
And smiles at him pleasantly still.
He always forgets 'tis his turn
To choose what the others shall play,
Forgets about others to learn
The goodly things that "they say."

He forgets to look sulky and cross
When things are not going his way,
Forgets some one's gain is his loss,
Forgets in his work time his play.
So this is why I take his part,
Why I say he is one of my pets.
I repeat it with all of my heart,
I love him for what he forgets!
—St. Nicholas.

HINTS FOR THE BUSY HOUSEWIFE

Novel Hooks and Eyes That Require No Sewing.

A new kind of hook and eye that has some distinct points of difference from the other types has been designed by a Pennsylvania woman. The chief feature of the new article is that, except in places where there is great strain, it is not necessary to sew either part fast to the clothing. Both hook and eye are equipped with safety pin devices, by which they are attached to waist or skirt, and it requires a very short time to affix them. Furthermore, if the positions are not exactly right they can be easily and speedily adjusted without the bother of unripping thread and sewing it over again. If there is too much strain on the pins a few turns of thread will make the parts secure. The throat of the hook is unusually deep and protects it from being easily disengaged, while a bump, after the style of all modern hooks and eyes, retains the eye in its adjusted position on the hook.

Camphorated Vaseline.

In the early stages a cold can frequently be broken by rubbing the afflicted parts with camphorated vaseline. This is especially good to relieve the stuffy, tight feeling of a cold in the head. The grease should be well rubbed in the bridge of the nose, particularly between the eyes, and on the upper lip and upward on each side.

An incipient raw throat, often a precursor of bronchitis, is also relieved by thorough greasing of throat and chest with camphorated vaseline or oil. Both of these mixtures can be bought at a druggist's and should be included in every medicine closet. For an emergency the mixture can be made at home, twelve drops each of turpentine and spirits of camphor into two tablespoonfuls of yellow vaseline.

Cranberry Pudding.

Pick over and wash one quart of cranberries and stew them just enough to break them up a little with two cupfuls of sugar and one-half cupful of water. Butter well some thin slices of bread; if a little stale it will do no harm. Place a layer of the bread on the bottom of a buttered pudding dish, then a thick layer of the hot berries, and so on until all are used in alternation, having the top layer of the bread buttered side up. Cover with a paper and bake about twenty minutes in a moderate oven, then remove the paper and brown the top slightly. Serve hot with a sauce made by boiling one cupful of sugar and one cupful of water five minutes and cooling before serving.

A Workbasket Hint.

Keep in your workbasket several large sized safety pins and use them to string loose buttons, hooks, eyes, etc. Keep those of the same size on the same pin, black hooks on black pins, white eyes on white pins, etc. Thus you never will have an untidy workbasket or be delayed by not being able to find instantly what you are looking for. Fasten the safety pins to one side of the lining of your basket and your method of securing neatness will be complete.

Sweet Pickled Limes.

One gallon of salted limes, one gallon vinegar, three pounds sugar, one-quarter pound stick cinnamon, one-half pound allspice and three ounces cloves. Boil the limes in water till very tender, and to get rid of the salt drain and pierce. Boil the vinegar and spices together and pour over the limes. Keep hot for twenty minutes, but do not boil the vinegar again.

Mocha Caramel Butter.

Mocha caramel butter for filling cakes is made by adding one-half cupful of freshened butter to one and one-half cupfuls of confectioner's sugar and beating together until creamy. Then flavor with two tablespoonfuls of mocha caramel filling.

A delicious frosting may be made by using whipped cream and mocha caramel butter in equal portions.

Maple Sugar Biscuits.

Make a biscuit dough with one quart of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of butter and just enough milk to make a soft dough. When ready to roll out stir in quickly one cupful of maple sugar, cut in pieces the size of a pea. Roll out, cut into small biscuits and bake quickly in a hot oven.

Bran Gems.

Two cupfuls of bran, one cupful of flour, one-half cupful of molasses, one and one-half cupfuls of milk, one teaspoonful of baking soda and a scant half teaspoonful of salt. Bake in gem pans or as biscuits twenty minutes to half an hour.

Remedy For Bunions.

Wear shoes at least a size longer than you have been in the habit of wearing them and paint the bunion daily with this lotion: Carbolic acid, two drams; tincture of iodine, two drams; glycerin, two drams.

Salt Pork in Batter.

Fry four or five slices of salt pork until brown, beat two eggs, add a heaping tablespoonful of flour, two tablespoonfuls of milk and salt and pour over the pork. Turn so as to cook it on both sides.

The Transformation.

They sat hand in hand on the yellow sands, in the shelter of a bowlder, watching the fleecy wavelets creep timorously shoreward.

"Frankie," she sighed, "say I'm oos ickle petsie once more."

"Oo's my ickle petsie, blessums ickle heart," came from the youth in the puce socks.

Up to the blue heavens rose a fat guffaw from the other side of the bowlder.

"Ickle petsie! Ickle petsie!" chuckled a corpulent gentleman with a four day stubble growth.

"Go it, Frankie! You ain't arf done yet. Eight years ago"—

"'Enry!" interrupted a shrill voice from the cliffs above. "You'll sleep wot little sense you 'ave got away if you ain't careful. Thought you was goin' to get some wheiks for tea!"

"Eight years ago, Frankie," continued the stout gentleman, mournfully, jerking his thumb cliffward, "she was my ickle petsie!"—London Tit-Bits.

Florence Nightingale.

There is a story that after the return to England of the troops from the Crimea Lord Stratford at a dinner suggested that those present should write on a piece of paper the name of the person whose Crimean reputation would endure longest. When the votes came to be examined it was found that not a single soldier had received a vote. Every paper bore the same two words—Florence Nightingale.

The "Lady With the Lamp" used to relate the following story: "Calling one day on one of her humble neighbors, she was surprised to see the usually tidy cottage in a state of great disorder. 'Why, Mrs. ——,' said Miss Nightingale, 'what is wrong with you? I never saw your home looking like this.' 'Beg your pardon, miss,' said the abashed woman, 'but you see, I am expecting the visiting lady, and if she seed my place looking clean and tidy she'd think I didn't need no helpin'!'"

Chihuahua Dogs.

The true Chihuahua breed is the smallest race of dogs in the world. They are also the most highly strung, sensitive and valiant of their kind. Their sense of sound, sight and smell is developed to a marvelous degree, and they have a bark which would rise supreme above the noises of a boiler shop. A strange step sets one of the little hair trigger animals into a frenzy of ear splitting rage, and yet they are so keenly intelligent that they can distinguish between friend and foe almost at first sight, sound or whiff. Long before the duller senses of man can detect a foreign presence these little marvels of nerve force will have "sized up" the intruder, and if not satisfied that all is well their staccato warning will wake the echoes.—Los Angeles Examiner.

The Ruling Passion.

Among the well known figures of the Paris salons mentioned in "An Eighteenth Century Marquise" was Bossut, mathematician and abbe, who had translated Maria Agnesi's work on the infinitesimal calculus. "When he was dying Maupertius was by his bedside. No one knew whether the agony was ended. 'Twelve times twelve?' asked Maupertius in a distinct voice. 'One hundred and forty-four,' came the automatic answer as Bossut breathed his last."

Appearances.

It is the appearances that fill the scene, and we pause not to ask of what realities they are the proxies. When the actor Aitken moved our hearts as he clasped the burial urn and burst into broken echo how few then knew that it held the ashes of his son!—Bulwer-Lytton.

What They Ate.

Tobias Smollett wrote his "Humphrey Clinker" in 1771, the last year of his life, giving therein a spirited account of the society and customs then prevailing in London town. He exposed the iniquities practiced by the purveyors of provisions at that time. Oysters were "bloated" and "floated" then as now; veal was whitened by repeated bleedings of the live animal; greens were boiled with brass half pence to improve the color; the wine in common use was a "pernicious sophistication, balderdashed with cider, corn spirit and the juice of sloes," and other revelations not suited to repetition in this polite age indicated that almost every article of diet was profitably "treated" before it reached the ultimate consumer. That "bleached" flour is no new commodity was also shown, while Smollett's added comment furnishes excellent food for reflection:

"The bread I eat in London is a deleterious paste, mixed up with chalk, alum and bone ashes, insipid to the taste and destructive to the constitution. The good people are not ignorant of this adulteration, but they prefer it to wholesome bread because it is whiter than the meal of corn."—Washington Post.

Fires and Insurance.

The agent of a well known insurance company stood on the fringe of the crowd watching the firemen retiring from the scene of a small blaze in an uptown flathouse.

"I'll do business tomorrow morning," said he grimly, "and most of it will be with women who have 'forgotten' their insurance has run out. There's nothing like a blaze on the block to set thoughts in the direction of insurance. Last week a woman was waiting for me when I opened my office. Her husband had given her money to take out insurance weeks before, and she had spent it for a new hat. The night before a fire had broken out on the second flat above theirs, and, believe me, that woman must have suffered tortures until the fate of the house was settled. She paid the premium in small change, which I believe she took from a child's bank, rather than confess her neglect to her husband."—New York World.

The Poor.

We all love the poor. It would be entirely unnecessary, if not positively caddish, to say that we hate the poor. But there are two kinds of poor—the individual poor and the collective poor. It is not the individual poor that we love; it is the collective poor. It is not the poor that we know and see, but the poor that we do not know and have neither time nor inclination to look at. We are afraid if we see them we shall cease to love them. We never say, "God bless the iceman, or the coal heaver, or the motorman." For them we find our execrations for not contributing to our comfort just so and so and so.

It is with great fervor, however, that we can say, "God bless the poor," because the poor do not interfere with our comfort to the slightest degree.—Life.

Fielding at Lisbon.

Lisbon contains the grave of Henry Fielding. It was on Oct. 4, 1754, that Fielding died in the Portuguese capital, and it was in 1830 that his tomb was erected in the English cemetery. And Fielding didn't like Lisbon. "As the houses, convents, churches, etc., are large," he wrote, "and all built with white stone, they look beautiful at a distance, but as you approach nearer and find them to want every kind of ornament all idea of beauty vanishes at once." At that time a voyage to Lisbon was an undertaking not lightly to be contemplated. It took Fielding exactly fifty days of foul weather.—St. James' Gazette.

Good Liver Remedy Free

When you suffer from any form of indigestion it is always well to take something for the liver, as usually the trouble lies there. If you are bilious, have a bloaty feeling after eating, if you belch, if your skin is yellowish you may be sure it is liver trouble.

What you need is something to stir up the liver, to arouse the gastric juices so that they will aid in the digestion of your food. A very good remedy for this, and one highly recommended by those who have used it, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which you can obtain of any druggist at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle. But if you have any doubt about its merits, and would prefer to try it first, send your address to Dr. Caldwell and he will promptly send you a free sample bottle.

Thousands of people first learned of this remarkable cure for stomach, liver and bowel troubles through a free sample. Mrs. Frank Lilly of Plainview, Ill., sent for one and it cured her and she is open in saying that she will never take pills or strong cathartics again, as Syrup Pepsin acts so mildly. Mr. W. L. Bryant, the Postmaster at Sardis, Tenn., says he will never be without it again. No sick person can afford to ignore a remedy so highly endorsed as this. It is good for all the family from infancy to old age, because it is mild, free from griping and yet promptly effective. Furthermore, results are absolutely guaranteed or money will be refunded.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specialized in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 68 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

Rural Telephones and the South.

An unusually interesting description of the part the rural telephone has come to play in the affairs of the south is continued in a paper which Mr. M. N. Allen, of Atlanta, Georgia, read before the Twelfth Annual convention of the Southern States Association commissioners of Agriculture and other Agricultural workers in the senate chamber of the Georgia State capitol a short time ago. Among other things, Mr. Allen said:

In no part of the world can finer apples be raised than in the mountains of Southwest Virginia or north Georgia, but we had to go to Utah and Oregon to learn how. It is generally conceded that Florida oranges and grape fruit equal or excel those from California, but we had to go out there to learn how to pack and market them. South Carolina can soap her fingers at the famous corn belt of the middle west and if there were a championship belt, would give any state a run for the money on the basis of the average yield per acre planted, but it is within a few years that such corn crops have been raised here.

It is not alone in methods of growing and marketing crops that the south has had to learn from other sections. There are other things which tend quite as much to improving conditions and making country life sufficiently attractive for people to live there for other purposes than securing a bare living.

It is generally recognized that a nation's wealth comes from the productiveness of her fields. Any movements that tends to increase their fertility, or to improve conditions in the open country so as to turn the stream of population away from instead of into the cities and confessed manufacturing centers should receive constant encouragement.

Two things which have done most to hamper the South have been lack of adequate transportation facilities and adequate means of quick communication. The three things which will most quickly overcome these handicaps are good roads, rural free deliver and universal telephone service.

Of these three, the telephone by right stands first. It is the one most accessible in all sections of the country, weather near a large city or away off from the railroad, ten or twenty miles from the county seat where there is only a small settlement or group of farms. To receive the benefit of the good roads you must hitch up a team; you must wait for the whistle of the R. F. D. man to get your paper or letter; but with a telephone in the house, a turn of the crank puts you in touch with points near or far.

If a telephone is necessary in a large city, where distances are short and people accessible, how much more necessary is it in the country, where farms are far apart and the average roads poor in good weather and almost impossible in bad weather?

On January 1, 1905, there was a total of 202,666 telephone stations in the six Southern States of Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama. It is different to estimate how these stations were divided between exchange and rural subscribers, but it is probable that of the total number, only about 5% or 1500, were located outside of exchanges. On January 1, 1910 the grand total of telephone stations in the same territory had increased to 285,269, of which approximately 36,700 are rural sta-

Thirty Years Impressions of America.

The recent somewhat remarkable journey of William Ragg Holt, of the London Daily Mail, who left England for the United States, arrived in New York, interviewed President Taft and Speaker Joe Cannon in Washington and a number of other notables, saw an unequalled number of sights in the various cities, and expects to be back in England within twelve days from his departure, thirty six hours of which time was spent in the United States, is an astonishing record but what his impressions are remains to be seen; for a man of his intelligence and ability doubtless his remarks on his observations will be interesting. Under such circumstances Mr. Holt will no doubt present a good record of a "ripping time."

In point of time these observations are somewhat short of Mr Holts thirty-six hours trip, but as they embrace a period of thirty years they are offered for what they are worth.

Thirty years ago a sailing ship from New Zealand, after a passage of seventy-four days arrived at Portland, Ore., and about three o'clock in the morning made fast to the wharf. Some three or four youngsters started off up the streets to stretch their limbs after the voyage but had not proceeded many yards when they were stopped by a guardian of the law who informed them they could not proceed on their nocturnal journey unless they informed him whom they were going to visit—mentioning incidentally, that if they were going to so-and-so's saloon, and gently intimating that if he was included in the invitation, everything would be alright. As all were strangers in the city nothing could be done but return to the ship, and our first impression of liberty in the United States was roughly dispelled.

Five years afterwards, a crowd of passengers were disembarked at New York from a big steamship and were soon at liberty to proceed to their various destinations.

Strolling up Broadway, as a starter, one's first impressions were of a fearfully congested traffic; sidewalks crowded with a multitude of pedestrians of all nationalities, streets thronged with vehicles of all descriptions; the only oasis in this desert of confusion being City Hall park, mainly filled with the derelicts of all nations. Second impressions were not highly gratifying.

A longer acquaintance with New York city showed unexampled opportunities for any ambitious young man, and, today, we wonder not at the largeness of the city, but that it is not indefinitely greater. To the young man of ability with an inclination for greater opportunities, New York is an attractive point. It is very doubtful if any spot on earth offers better possibilities to the ambitious young man than New York city—but to be successful he must have attainments of the highest order. The impression New York city made upon us, if you can make good in any capacity, New York is the place for you—of mediocrity and the lesser lights the city already possesses plenty and has no room for more, and the same may be said of any other city in the world.

From personal experience it is possible to extend this article to an unlimited extent, but as we are giving, in a limited manner, an experience of thirty years in the United States it must of necessity be condensed.

Something more than twenty years ago we were attracted to the Sunny South—Birmingham, Ala., being our Mecca. We came, we saw, and Birmingham conquered us. Twenty years ago Birmingham was a small town, struggling for existence, which for a time appeared to be inevitally quashed, but, Phœnix like, arose from its surroundings to its present pre-eminent position in the galaxy of southern cities.

Eighteen years ago at the call of the people we came to Clanton and established THE BANNER, the paper of the people, for the people and by the people, and is the same today as it has ever been—it is yours to make use of in any way you choose. The columns of THE BANNER have never been closed to any of its subscribers. If you desire to express any opinion, whether Democratic, Republican, Socialist, or otherwise, where can you find publicity for them, unless in THE BANNER?

THE BANNER has given you its honest opinion upon all questions respecting your interests. If that opinion does not meet with your views, we are very sorry, but have no apology to make. We regret our inability to see things always in the same light that others see them, but honest convictions can not be denied.

Rural Telephones and the South.

tions. This shows an increase in rural stations alone of 740% in five years. The year 1910 is showing a greater proportionate growth than any previous period, the gain in farmer line stations alone for the first ten months being approximately 50,000 stations and the total of all stations on November 1, 1910, being 313,000.

Probably the first and most direct appeal of the telephone is to the farmer's wife. She has less opportunities of getting away from home than other members of the family, she sees fewer new faces and receives fewer new ideas, so that anything which will serve to break the monotony of her life is welcomed as a God send. And the amount of visiting which can be done over a long rural line is truly surprising. All of the neighborhood news spreads along the wire even quicker than the "grape vine telegraph" could tell it, and during bad weather or on cold winter nights, the "voice in the box" is a great comfort.

Besides its social side, though another and even greater appeal the telephone makes is as an aid in emergences. It is a watch-dog that never sleeps, but that is always ready to summon assistance in any crisis. Many cases where a telephone has saved a life come to my attention.

But it is in other and more practical ways that the real value of the telephone is shown. You have some cotton or other produce to sell. How many times in the old days did you hold that cotton for what you considered a fair price? After days of waiting you learned that your figure had been reached. You loaded up the cotton, and the next morning carried it to town, only to learn upon arrival that the market had gone off twenty or thirty points in twenty-four hours. You had to sacrifice the cotton, store it; or take it home again, perhaps, to repeat the same operation the following week. With a telepsone you get the changes of the market every time you care to call up, and are in just as close touch with it as though you your self were on the floor.

Or, you find you need some machine parts or something with which to repair a tool and can ill spare a hand or a mule to send to town for it. What is easier than to call up your supplier and arrange to have it sent out by a neighbor! One such experiance will save the annual expense of the instrument.

How quickly the millenium would come if we would only do the wonderful things today that we are going to do to-morrow.

Under and by virtue of the power of sale contained in the mortgage executed by Myrtle L. Marcus and T. C. Marcus to J. P. Hayes on the 11th day of November, 1909, to secure a debt of $2,300.00, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Judge of Probate of Chilton county, Alabama, in the Record of Mortgages, in Volume 97, on page 213, and on default having been made in the payment of the indebtedness secured by said mortgage, the said J. P. Hayes will proceed to sell at the Court House door in Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama, at public outcry to the highest bidder, for cash, on Monday, the 2d day of January, 1911 the following described real estate, situated in Chilton county, Alabama to wit: The S½ of the SW¼ and the NW ¼ of the SW ¼ of Section 22, and the E ½ of the E ½ of the SE ¼ of Section 21, all in Township 22 of Range 14.

Said sale will be made for the purpose of paying the entire debt secured by said mortgage and the expenses incident to said sale, including attorney's fees.

This, the 1st day of December, 1910. J. P. HAYES, Mortgagee.
By TIPTON MULLINS,
Attorney for Mortgagee.

Mrs. Cook tells truth

Dexter, Ky.—In a signed statement, Mrs. Cook tells the truth about how Cardui brought back her health and strength. She says, "I could not get any relief, until I tried Cardui, the woman's tonic. I suffered more or less for 10 years and was so weak and nervous I could hardly do my house work. Now I am in better health than ever before, am regular as clock work, do not suffer at all, and gain strength every day." Thousands of women have been helped back to health by Cardui. Try it.

Mr. L. More of Cooper was a visitor Friday.

Afraid to Stay Alone.

Cherry Valley, Ark.—Mrs. Carrie Moore of this place says, "I was afraid to stay by myself. I had headache nearly all the time; my heart would palpitate, and my vitality was very low. When I would lie down at night, I had no hope of living until day. I tried Cardui and now I feel better than I have for 5 years. I cannot praise Cardui enough for what it did." Are you a woman? Do you need a tonic? Try Cardui, the woman's tonic. Your druggist sell it.

Terrible Picture of Suffering.

Clinton Ky.—Mrs. M. C. McElroy, in a letter from Clinton, writes: "For six years I was a sufferer from female troubles. I could not eat and could not stand on my feet without suffering great pain. I had lost hope. After using Cardui a week, I began to improve. Now I feel better than in six years." Fifty years of Succes in actual practice, is positive proof, fully upheld by those who have tried it, that Cardui can always be relied on for relieving female weakness and disease. Try Cardui today, now!

FOUND—A POCKETBOOK

The Story of Its Restoration and Its Contents.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

It lay in the gutter as Pauline picked her dainty way across the street. She saw it and rescued it from the mud—a long flat pocketbook of Russia leather, such as a man might carry. It was bulky with letters or papers or perhaps money. Pauline slipped the pocketbook into her muff and hurried on her way home.

When she reached her own room she spread the contents of the leather book on her dressing table. There was a large package of banknotes, $400 in all, together with a picture, a portrait cut from some magazine of a girl in a black velvet gown wearing a black velvet picture hat and holding a long stemmed rose in one hand.

"YOU DON'T MIND, DAD?" SHE WHISPERED.

Pauline looked at the picture with rising indignation, for it was a half tone reproduction of Fleming's portrait of herself. The original picture hung in her father's study downstairs.

There was a single line under the picture which had evidently illustrated some special article on Fleming, the painter. It read, "An example of Fleming's delicate portraiture."

The next day Pauline caused to be inserted in a morning paper a brief advertisement:

Found.—A pocketbook. Owner may call and prove property. No. 66 W. —— street.

A continuous line of people who had lost pocketbooks of some description kept the Cameron servants to rigid attendance upon the door.

Four o'clock came and not one applicant had aroused that assurance in Pauline's breast that here was the man who had carried her picture within his pocketbook.

Again the bell rang, and the servant ushered in a tall slender man, immaculately dressed, whose air was that of Pauline's own world.

His quick glance swept boldly from Pauline's lovely dark face to the luxuriously furnished room, in one corner of which sat Pauline's maid, quietly alert.

"You have found my pocketbook, I believe," said the man pleasantly. "Awfully careless of me, you know, to drop it. Found it in Broadway, I suppose?"

"No," said Pauline graciously, "I didn't find it in Broadway. What color was the book you lost and what was its size?"

"Dark green Russia—about eight inches long."

"What did it contain?" asked Pauline.

"Money," hesitated the man—"several hundred dollars and a few trinkets."

"I'm sorry, but your description doesn't fit at all," said Pauline pleasantly, and she wondered at the ugly frown that crossed the man's brow. It was not so much a frown of disappointment as an expression of baffled rage.

The callers came at long intervals, and they were all men. Some were young and others were old, and each one offered a description that nearly fitted the pocketbook she had found. At last the callers dwindled down to one last straggler, a most prepossessing young man whose manners were especially engaging.

"I'm such a careless beggar," he explained to Pauline; "I'm always losing something or other."

"Of course I must ask you to identify the pocketbook," hesitated Pauline. Here, she felt, was the real owner of the article.

"It was a dark Russia leather, almost new, about ten inches long. It contained between $300 and $400 in bills—and something else. There was no mark of identification in the way of letters or anything of that sort. I dropped it somewhere near the park about the Sixties or Seventies—that is, I missed it shortly after I passed West Seventy-second street and went back to search for it, but it could not be found." He spoke rapidly and positively, and Pauline felt a little thrill that she had at last discovered the real owner.

Nevertheless she was rather piqued by the fact that although he might have cared enough about her picture to carry it within his pocketbook the claimant did not seem to recognize by any outward sign that the original of the picture sat before him. Consequently she pressed the point to her own chagrin.

"And the other article contained in the book?" she asked. "If you will identify that"—she paused suggestively.

For an instant he hesitated, then spoke with decision. "From its character you will understand why the subject is a delicate one."

"Here is the pocketbook," said Pauline smiling. "I am sure it is the one you lost, and I am very glad to restore it to you."

The owner almost snatched the book from her hand, so eager did he seem to recover his property. He stammered hasty words of gratitude and without opening the pocketbook thrust it in his pocket and took his leave with apparent relief.

When she was alone Pauline smiled rather maliciously as she took from a table drawer the clipped picture of herself and carried it to her room.

That night at dinner her father spoke somewhat vexedly. "Do you recollect Pauline, my dear, that I promised you should have that set of furs in Wickel's?"

"How could I forget, dad? You don't mean that you have really ordered them for me?" cried Pauline delightedly.

"I was about to do so yesterday when I lost my pocketbook. I'd been to the bank and drawn the cash, was bringing it home to you, when somehow, somewhere not far from home, I lost the confounded thing. You'll have to wait another week for the furs, puss."

"What sort of pocketbook was it, dad?" asked Pauline mechanically. The question seemed a natural one enough now—she had interviewed so many lost property owners that day.

"New one I bought a week ago, red Russia, had four hundred in it and a clipping of some sort about queer uses of electricity."

"Dad!" cried Pauline tragically.

"Well?" asked her father. "I know it was careless, but"—

"It isn't that, but I believe I found that very pocketbook yesterday. I advertised it in this morning's paper."

"Well, by Jove, where is it?" asked her father, with keen interest.

"I don't know where it is now," confessed Pauline. "I've interviewed dozens of people today. It does seem as though the streets must be strewn with pocketbooks, so many have been lost. I was most particular about identification, and it happened that the last young man who called described the pocketbook so accurately that I gave it to him."

Mr. Lester knitted his brows thoughtfully. "That's very queer, Pauline. You better tell me all about it and be sure and recollect all you can about the people who called in regard to the matter. You see, there are many dishonest men, and women, too, for that matter, who make a business of answering advertisements of that sort. Sometimes they can guess very accurately at the appearance of a lost article. Indeed, so clever are they that they manage to possess themselves of many articles to which they have not the slightest right. Did you find a clipping in the book?"

Pauline flushed at her own vanity in attributing the possession of her picture to some infatuated young man when it was that dearest of men, her father, after all, who had preserved her likeness.

"I didn't notice the clipping, dad," she said, "but I did find a magazine reproduction of my portrait—that and the money."

"I certainly did not have your picture, Pauline, but that is a detail. Tell me what you can about the people who came today."

Pauline did so, omitting no incident that she could remember and calling upon her maid to substantiate any doubtful points in her narrative. When she had concluded Mr. Lester shook mirthfully.

"Never mind, Pauline; but it is rather funny, you know. I'm afraid there was more avarice than romance in the situation. Very likely the last half dozen men who called were in league to claim the pocketbook. By clever guessing and the process of eliminating certain facts the last claimant was able to give a rather accurate description of the article and so assured you of his ownership. There, my dear, don't feel badly. Almost anybody might have been deceived in the same way. Suppose you come to my study and show me the picture. You say you kept that."

Quite mortified and very penitent, Pauline fetched the clipping from her room and laid it on her father's desk. Mr. Lester adjusted his eyeglasses and looked critically at the clipping. Then he nodded approval.

"Very good indeed, Pauline." Then he turned the paper over and smiled humorously. "Some Peculiar Uses of Electricity," he read, handing the clipping to her.

Pauline looked and blushed painfully. "What a vain goose I am! Are you not ashamed to have such a foolish daughter? But it was a coincidence, wasn't it?"

Mr. Lester drew her down to his knee and kissed her gently. "There is more to this matter, Pauline. I happened into Frank Seymour's office today and picked up this clipping from his desk. He had just cut it from a magazine, and it lay 'electricity' side up. I read part of it and asked him if I might borrow the clipping. He seemed rather embarrassed. I understand the reason now. The sly young dog!"

Pauline buried her blushing face on his shoulder. "You don't mind, dad?" she whispered.

"Yes and no, Pauline," he admitted between a sigh and a smile. "It is not unexpected, and when Frank comes send him to me, and you need not be afraid of the outcome."

A Fortune For a Tulip.

Though orchids frequently bring prices that make the poor man stagger, the highest price for a single flower was given for a tulip in Amsterdam by an enthusiast, who paid $250.00 for it.

Argentina.

Climatic conditions in Argentina are such that over the greater part of the country stock can live the year round on pasturage.

An Australian California.

Victoria, the Australian province, has often been compared with California, and, indeed, is almost a duplicate in nearly every respect of the state, the Murray valley, which contains the bulk of the irrigable country, being remarkably similar to the Sacramento valley.

The Word "Hero."

The word "hero" comes down to us from the Greek, signifying an illustrious man, exalted after death to a place among the demigods. For countless centuries the word retained its original meaning.

Wall Paper Paste.

Sour skimmilk added to flour paste gives a good sticking quality to wall paper put on with the mixture, even on whitewashed walls.

St. Thomas.

The little island of St. Thomas, in the gulf of Guinea, although only about 350 square miles in extent, produces more cacoa than any other region in the world, besides coffee and tropical fruits in abundance.

An Elephant's Hide.

Notwithstanding its thickness, an elephant's skin is very sensitive.

The Burmese Mile.

The Burmese equivalent for "mile" is a word that means "to sit" and is used to indicate the distance a man can ordinarily go without sitting down to rest.

Starfish and Urchin.

The starfish has an eye on the tip of each of its five rays or arms, and in the sea urchin, which is nothing but a starfish with the ends of its rays drawn close together, the five eyes are gathered in a circle around what is considered the hinder portion of its body.

The Onion.

The native country of the onion is not certainly known, but is probably either India or Egypt, in both of which countries it has been cultivated from the most remote antiquity.

Green For Jealousy.

A handsome, well dressed young woman told a London magistrate recently that her husband, who was intolerably jealous, on one occasion blackleaded her face and another day painted her face and neck green. He then spent two hours and a half removing the paint with petrol.

Honduras.

All traveling in Honduras is done on the backs of horses or mules. The Honduran horse is much smaller than the American animal and much less rounded.

The Color Spreads.

An Eskimo baby is born fair, except for a dark round spot on the small of the back. From this center head of color the dark tint gradually spreads till the toddling Eskimo is as beautifully and as completely and as highly colored as a well smoked meerschaum pipe. The same thing happens among the Japanese.

Backs an Sure Thing now.

"I'll never be without Dr. King's New Life Pills again," writes A. Schingeck, 647 Elm St., Buffalo, N. Y. They cured me of chronic constipation when all others failed." Unequaled for biliousness, jundice, Indigestion, headache, chills, malaria, and Debility. 25c at Upchurch Drug co.

West Indian Hurricanes.

The West Indian hurricanes are vortexes of great force, and they have been known to blow heavy cannon out of a battery and carry a man over a ten foot wall.

Fruit Trees.

Some one has estimated from statistics that fruit trees and bushes will bear for the following periods: Apple, twenty-five to forty years; blackberry, six to fourteen years; currant, twenty years; gooseberry, eight to twelve years; pear, fifty to seventy-five years; plum, twenty to twenty-five years; raspberry, six to fourteen years.

Land of the Mirage.

The mirage can be seen nearly every day in the plains of lower Egypt and also to a limited extent in the plains of Hungary and southern France.

Mocha Coffee.

All the Mocha coffee grown in the world comes from the Yemen, a Turkish province in the southwestern part of Arabia, and is so called because the entire crop was formerly shipped from Mocha.

Epaulets.

It is probable that the epaulet was originally intended as a protection to the shoulder from sword cuts rather than as an ornament.

The Yak.

Yaks, which are the beasts of burden in Tibet, are very sure footed, and a good one will carry a load of over 200 pounds safely along the steepest hillside. They can exist on the scantiest grass, but grain food suits them for a few days only. Eight miles a day is good average work.

What We Are Coming To.

Soon shall returning passengers
Each don a convict suit
The while their own are ripped apart
In search of hidden loot.

Their books shall doctrines all be shaved,
That nothing there may hide,
And X ray pictures shall betray
What they conceal inside.

The cabins shall be bare and plain,
That goods may not go wrong,
And keepers shall remain on guard
Throughout the voyage long.

And when at last they shall have sped
Across the briny foam
Adown the gangplank, lock step marched,
The sovereigns shall come home.
—Brooklyn Life.

News to Him.

"When I was in Europe this summer," said Gayman, trying to entertain the minister, "I got quite interested in some of them old churches."

"Indeed!" replied Rev. Mr. Gasaway. "I suppose you know St. Paul's in London?"

"No. You don't tell me? What hotel's he stopping at?"—Catholic Standard and Times.

Silencing Complaints.

The town complains at noisy carts
And milkmen rattling far and near,
At all night locomotive shrieks
That rend the peaceful atmosphere.

It threatens fiercely and protests
Whene'er the huckster's voice ascends
And hastens to demand relief
When rags with apples loudly blends.

But when the heavens sundered are
And thunders in their anger speak,
Behold, the people bear up well!
Behold, how patient and how meek!
—Buffalo Express.

Something More In Demand.

Don't Be a Braganza.

Once the house of Braganza
Possessed a bonanza;
But, alas, that bonanza has vanished!
By the taxpayers' orders
From Portugal's borders
The house of Braganza is banished.

Here's a lesson to nourish:
In the days when we flourish
Let us not overwork our bonanza.
When you milk the cow feed her
Or she, gentle reader,
May cause you to be a Braganza.
—Chicago Record-Herald.

Unpardonable.

"I'm afraid we'll have to cut that man's acquaintance," said the woman of strictly correct ideas.

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne. "He uses the same sort of language that we pay two or three dollars a seat to hear at a theater."—Washington Star.

For that dull Feeling after Eating.

I have used Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets for some time and can testify that they have done me more good than any tablets I have ever used. My trouble was a dull heavy feeling after eating.—DAVID FREEMAN, Kemp, Nova Scotia. These tablets strengthen the stomach and improve the digestion. They also regulate the liver and bowels. They are far superior to pills but cost no more. Get a free sample at all dealer's drug store and see what a splendid medicine it is.

Her Evidence.

"I had a colored woman before me as a complaining witness," said a criminal court judge. "She had a man held for trial by a city magistrate on the charge that he had attacked her with a pair of scissors. 'He most' near gouge mah eye out, judge,' she said to me. 'Jes' come at me lak a lion, he did, a-cha'ge, sah. He poke me in de face wid dem scissors, judge, not once, but for four or five times. He jes' cut up my face lak it was a yahd of ribbon, judge. The magistrate what held him to dis fleah court says he nevah did hear tell of no more dang'erous man.'

"Well, I looked her over. She had a wide, smooth, yellow face that didn't have a mark on it. I told her to repeat her story, and she went all over it again, telling how the man had slashed her face with that pair of scissors.

"'But, madam,' I said, 'there isn't a mark on your face.'

"'Marks!' said she indignantly. 'Marks! What I care for marks, fem me ask you dat? I got witnesses, I tell you.'"—New York Cor. Cincinnati Times-Star.

She Had Courage.

A self possessed young woman who knew no French strolled into one of the larger downtown cafes. She spoke to the waiter in that decisive tone which distinguishes the initiated and glanced over the French bill of fare with the nonchalant air of a Parisienne.

"I'll have," she began firmly as she plunged into the sea of French dishes—"I'll have—let me see. Oh, yes, I'll have some bisque tortoni, a sultana roll, pommes de terre and a little of that fromage. And, garcon, you might as well bring me a cup of coffee."

The waiter gasped. He started to speak, but the young woman froze him with one of those icy stares peculiar to the thoroughly sophisticated.

And the order arrived—two kinds of ices, boiled potatoes and a piece of cheese. But she ate it as if she had been used to that sort of diet all her life.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Stories on Doctors.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle told several good stories of old fashioned practitioners he knew. There was one man, he said, who never used to wash out the half emptied bottles returned to him, but emptied them into one huge jar, from which he dispensed this mixture of medicines to his more obscure patients. "It is like grapeshot," he said; "one of them is sure to hit." There was another man who used to say, "When my patients are alive I don't know what is the matter with them and when they die I don't know whether they are dead." That was like the medical man who said to a lady whose husband he had been attending, "Madam, I have a very strong belief that your husband is dead, but if it is your wish I have no objection to a consultation."

Cute Little Girl.

One day while Katherine's mother was ill a cup of beef tea was prepared for her, but Katherine fancied it and drank almost all of it. Her father was about to scold her when her mother said:

"Never mind; it does me just as much good to see her drink it."

Shortly after this a dose of castor oil was prepared for Katherine, and she poured it into her doll's mouth.

"Why Katherine," said her astonished mother, "what did you do that for?"

"That's all right," Katherine replied, "it will do me just as much good if she drinks it."—Boston Herald.

The Danger of Criticism.

If you simply cannot help criticising at least be careful in selecting your victim.

A magazine editor to whom O. Henry had promised a story many times without delivering it sat down one day and wrote him thus:

"My Dear O. Henry—If I do not receive that story from you by noon today I am going to put on my No. 11 shoes and come down and kick you down your own stairs. I never fail to keep my promises."

Whereupon O. Henry replied:

"I, too, would keep my promises if I could do all my work with my feet."—Chicago Tribune.

The Battle of a Week.

The battle of a week was the great conflict at Tours in which Charles Martel overthrew the Saracens, A. D. 732. The members of the Saracen army are variously estimated at from 400,000 to 700,000, and the historians say that 373,000 were killed on the field. It is suspected that these figures are a gross exaggeration, but it is certain that few battles of history have been either so bloody or so decisive.

In the Mining Business.

"I think you said, Rastus, that you had a brother in the mining business in the west?"

"Yeh, boss, that's right."

"What kind of mining—gold mining, silver mining, copper mining?"

"No, sah, none o' those; calcimining."—Everybody's.

The Angel.

Wife—I am trimming up last year's hat to save the cost of a new one! Hubby—How good of you! You're a perfect little angel! Wife—Am I? Then give me $10 to buy wings.

His Impression.

Mrs. Knicker—Now, will you remember everything, John? Knicker—Yep. I'm to turn the flowers out at night and sprinkle the cat.—Harper's Bazar.

A LIFE OF PEACE AND SATISFACTION.

No one can know the pure delight of simple living whose nervous system is not in a state of tension by Constipation, Indigestion, Biliousness and other disorders due to inaction of the liver.

The Simple Life is to be found in

ST. JOSEPH'S
Liquid Laxative Regulator
(In Both Liquid and Powder Form.)

It has made life brighter and happiness and peace possible when all was dark and distressed. It reaches the centers of life and purifies them. It encourages the liver, stomach and bowels to a freer and more natural activity.

It is the Simple Way to a Simple Life of Health, Peace, Contentment.

Many persons attest this fact who have realized its truth by actual experience.

St. Joseph's Liquid Liver Regulator is prompt in action, exceedingly palatable and pleasant to the taste. It is sold by druggists and dealers at 50 cents a bottle.

St. Joseph's Liver Regulator in powder form is put up in tight tin boxes and retails at 25 cents a box, five boxes for a dollar. It may be taken dry or made into a tea or pitters. Full directions accompany every bottle and box.

The Review of Reviews

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.

¶ It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

OUR 1909-10 CATALOGUE

of all American magazines is a money-saver. You can't afford to order for next year without first seeing it. If you appreciate superior agency service, and demand maximum magazine value for the fewest dollars, write for it—today. It's free to YOU.

THE MAN ON THE CORNER

Some of the Sights He Saw, and Some He Saw Not.

A most enjoyable entertainment was that on Tuesday night at the court house, when the University of Alabama Glee Club, under the direction of Tom Garner, of Tuscaloosa, rendered an attractive program.

The court house was well filled and the performers were frequently recalled, Mr. Kennedy receiving no less than three encores. The club is well organized and shows every evidence of careful training.

The whistling solo by Mr. Bradley was well received and resulted in the recall of the gentleman for an encore.

Clanton was represented in the Glee Club by Mr. Sam Latham, whose histrionic abilities are appreciated by our home folks.

After the performance the Club was entertained at the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Pickard, and all were delighted at their reception. The hope is freely expressed that the University Glee Club will again give Clanton another performance.

The Banner Contest is over, the last few days bringing in a vast number of ballots, the counting of which occupied many hours of hard work.

The first prize—$100.00 in cash—was won by the untiring work of friends of Providence church. Beat [illegible], whose total vote amounted to 1,647,145, a magnificent showing for the popularity of that church. The cash will be handed to the properly accredited trustees of the church on application.

Jamuria made a gallant struggle for second prize, but polled less than one-half of the votes for Providence and the trustees of the church will get the second prize—$50 in gold—on presenting their credentials.

Liberty Hill put up a plucky fight for one of the prizes, but was defeated; the United Protestant Church of Thorsby coming in fourth on the list. The other churche in the Contest apparently never made a serious effort to capture one of the prizes.

For the Diamond Ring, value $75.00, there has been a spirited contest among the young ladies, whose sparkling eyes, diamonds themselves, glowed with anticipation. We would love to present every young lady in Chilton county with a diamond ring, and regret our inability to do so. The rules of the contest awarded the elegant ring to Miss Irene Jones, who polled the enormous vote of 2,454,355 votes against all competitors. We congratulate the winner and sympathize with those who were not so successful, and wish for them better luck next time.

The Business Scholarship in the Bryant & Stratton Business College, Louisville, Ky., which is valued at $100.00, was won in a canter by Miss Maddox, who polled 147,525 votes. With best wishes for this young man's future, in which he has a splendid start by this acquisition, the prize is awarded to him.

Perhaps of all the prizes in The Banner Contest, none excited a greater interest than the Bicycle offered to the boys, who each started with a determination to win. Alas! soon some became discouraged and gave up the fight, but [illegible] never get discouraged, no matter that apparently things are not going your way, keep on striving. Remember the race is not always to the swift at first, and every effort on your part is all your energies [illegible] to your success in

The Farmer and His Banker

Our bank never fails to give as good service to the farmer as it gives to any business man. As a matter of fact few banks could exist in this day and age of the world without the co-operation of the farmers. Often a farmer can make money by borrowing, and we are glad to advance money at any time. Do not hesitate to call on us when you want money. We welcome a responsible borrower quite as heartily as a substantial depositor. It will pay every farmer to carry a checking account with us. Our burglar proof safe, together with conservative management makes our bank an absolute safe place for your money. Deposit your savings and grow with a growing bank in a growing community. Why not come in and talk it over with us today? Accounts may be opened by mail and monies deposited or withdrawn in this way with equal facility. The rural mail route solves the problem. It is not necessary to come to town to do your banking. We make a specialty of serving the farmer.

CLANTON, ALA.

NOTICE

STOP THIEF! is what you would say if a highwayman knocked you down and robbed you or snatched your purse and ran.

But what would you say if a burglar entered your home at night and under cover of darkness, while you slept, carry away your wealth, from that "secret hiding place"?

Every few days the papers contain accounts of just such happenings, frequently life being taken to get the money, and who will guarantee you against such a misfortune?

Think and Act Now, before it is too late and always make it an invariable rule to keep your money in a good, safe bank.

Our Bank is safe, absolutely safe,

Because the integrity of our officials is not only unquestioned, but those who handle our funds are bonded in one of the strongest Guaranty Companies in America.

Because we own a good steel burglar-proof safe and also carry burglary insurance and fire insurance in the best companies and are thus guaranteed against loss from these sources.

Because we do not lend money except on good security that will protect us from loss in the event of the death or failure of the borrower. These provisions and safeguards make us AN UNBREAKABLE BANK, and we invite YOU to avail yourself of these facilities which we extend to all of our customers.

OBITUARY.

Died in the Marvel mines on the 15th inst., Mr. Lawson Waldrop, son of Isaac Waldrop His death was caused by being overcome with gas. His remains were brought to his father's home near Randolph, and the next day were laid to rest at Pleasant Grove, the funeral conducted by Mr. Honeycutt in the presence of a large concourse of people He was a popular intelligent lovely young man. Sad to think he is gone, but happy thought he will come back again, for a resurrection of both the just and unjust is assured. While now he knows not anything, and there is no change in the grave, yet in the bright joyful day of the world's judgment, which implies a trial as well as a sentence, a longer period than twenty-four hours, if in that trial he chooses life, love purity, justice and right, comes into harmony with Holy writ, he can have eternal life on the restored new earth Every parent will say I am glad it is true in that day now dawningf earths millions will be plucked from death's dominion and all the willing ones under the judgment of the then glorified church will be assisted and led up to eternal life, none lost but those who will not have life. Then to the sorrowing relatives of Lawson we would say this dark cloud over you has a silver lining The night of weeping must yield to the new dawning day, the grave cannot hold your darling forever.

ONE WHO LOVED HIM.

Stopped Those Pains.

Timberville, Miss.—Miss Gertrude Gatin, of Timberville, writes "I did not know anything could stop those womanly pains, from which I suffered for two years, until I tried Cardui. I had been troubled with various female ailments, but they were cured in a little while thanks to Cardui" Cardui is especially adapted for use by suffering women It relieves headache, backache, dragging feelings, irregularity, nervousness, misery and womanly weaknes. It is safe. it is reliable It does the work. will you try it? Please do.

New Chapter in Reynolds Case.

From The Montgomery Journal.

A new chapter was begun in the W. A. Reynolds bankruptcy proceedings when several creditors, including the Royster Guano Company and Armour & Company, filed objections in the federal court to a compromis of 50 cents on the dollar which had been offered by Reynolds and accepted by the majority of the creditors

Reynolds formerly conducted a large general merchandise store at Jemison, Ala. He was recently thrown into bankruptcy on petition of certain creditors who alleged that he had been speculating and sustained large financial loss in cotton. His brother, former Probate Judge L. H. Reynolds, of Clanton, came to the rescue by planking down more than $17,000 in cash as basis for a settlement of 50 cents on the dollar. The creditors held a meeting here a few days ago and it was then believed that the compromise had been accepted by the payment of 25 per cent in cash and the remainder in defred payments.

The objections now inserposed came as a bombshell and will delay further progress. Federal Judge Thomas G. Jones has set the matter down for disposition December 28. In the meantime he has instructed Referee in bankruptcy Asa E. Stratton to take testimy in the case.

A Simple Safeguard for Mothers.

Mrs. D. Gilkeson, 326 Eagles Ave. Youngston, Ohio, gained wisdom by experience. "My little girl had a severe cold and coughed almost continuously. My sister recommended Foley's Honey and Tar. The first dose I gave her relieved the inflammation in her throat and after using only one bottle her throat and lungs were entirely free from inflamation. Since then I always keep a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar in the house. Accept no substitutes. Upchurch Drug co.

Thorsby.

Thorsby Institute has just closed the most successful term since its organization five years ago, and there is good prospects for a large increase of attendance for the term which opens January 3. The members of the faculty and the boarding students have scattered to their respective homes for the holidays.

The Christmas exercise of the Congregational Sunday school were held at the church last evening; a very interesting program of songs by the school, the primary department and the church choir, interspersed with recitations by the children and addresses by members of the organized Bible classes, was followed by gifts for everybody present, taken from the Christmas tree and distributed by the young men of the Sunday school.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Congregational church, chiefly through the indefatigable efforts of their president, Mrs. A. K. Horn, have presented to the church a sweet-toned bell as large as can be swung in the belfry of the church Where it has been installed to add its part to "The Music of the Bells" for Christmas.

Paof. C. R. Ross, principal of Thorsby public school, has inaugurated an innovotion in the way of the weekly paper published by the scholars who are organized into a complete editoral staff. The paper is printed on a typewriter, but is of pretentious size, neat appearance and very creditably illustrated. with a profusion of colored pictures. While but one copy composes the entire issue each week the amount and quality of labor expended is doubtless developing a good deal of latent jurnalistic ability.

Miss Lila Mae Robinson and her brother Robert are spending the holidays with Mrs. R. M. Smith at Fairmount, Ga.

Miss Martha B. Binkley is spending the holidays with her parents at Denver, Tenn.

Miss Louis Thomas is visiting her mother at Central.

Theodore Lefstead and wife of Birmingham are thorsby visitors.

Miss Inez Duggan and Miss Elise Hall have returned from Montevallo for vacation.

Reno Villadson, Sereno E. Norton and William Crump, who are teachers, are home for the holidays.

Operation Thought Inevitable.

Ferris, Tex.—In a letter from this place, Mary says: "I was confined to my bed for three months with womanly trouble and during this time suffered untold agony, the doctor said an operation was inevitable. I tried Cardui. Now I am well and able to do a great part of my work." Thousands of ladies have testified to the benefit obtained from Cardui, the woman's tonic It prevents unnecessary womanly pains and builds up womanly strength. It is a true tonic, Try it, It will help you.

Hell may be paved with good intentions, but a man who sprinkles ashes on the icy sidewalks is paving his way to glory.

When a man meets his wife down town he wonders how much it will cost him.

A wedding ceremony is never a success unless there is a hitch somewhere.

The bonds of matrimony would be more popular if they paid cash dividends.

Kernan is a man about thirty years of age; about five feet 7 inches in height; black hair; has two gold filled teeth, and weighs about 160 pounds. He is a member of the Typographical Union, and I respectfully request all Unions to look out for him. I will pay the above reward for his arrest and conviction.

FRANK CRICHTON.

Happy as a Baby.

Valley Heights, Va.—Mrs. Jennie B. Kirby, in a letter from this place, says, "I was sick in bed for nine months, with womanly trouble I was so weak and hepless at times I couln't raise my head off the pillow, I commenced to take Cardui, and I saw it was helping me, at once. Now I can work all day." As tonic for weak women nothing has been found for fifty years that would take the place of Cardui. Try a bottle today. It will surely do you good.

It isn't necessary for you to be an acrobat in order to trouble to the fact that this book is a good thing.

FATAL FIRE OCCURS IN PHILADELPHIA

Burning Wall Collapsed Burying Firemen.

POLICE WERE ALSO VICTIMS

Sickening Horror Occurs While Brave Firemen Were Fighting Flames in Five-Story Building—Twelve Lives Were Probably Lost.

Probably twelve firemen lost their lives in a fire which destroyed the five-story brick building of D. Friedlander, leather dealer, 1116-20, inclusive, North Bodine street, Philadelphia.

More than a score of others have been taken to hospitals.

Of those taken to hospitals half a dozen have fractured skulls and are internally injured. Their chances of recovery are slight.

The blaze was first discovered about 10 o'clock at night and in less than half an hour the interior of the building was a seething furnace. Unable to fight the flames from the roof of the doomed structure, the firemen climbed to the roofs of three small dwellings adjoining the building. It was here that a sickening accident occurred.

Scattered about on the three small structures at every vantage point were nearly two score of men, while clinging to their icy ladder, which was leaning against the south wall of the leather factory, were Patrick Carroll, George Machlinsky and John Carroll, all of engine company No. 7.

The men on the houses saw their danger first and yelled a warning to their comrades on the ladder, but so sudden was the collapse of the wall that not a soul was able to escape the terrible rain of bricks and twisted beams and girders. With a terrific roar the five-story mass crumbled like a toy block house, carrying either death or injury to every man who a moment before had stood ice-covered trying to save adjoining property.

SCHOONER CATCHES FIRE.

Two Seamen Killed, Two Injured When Big Drum Explodes.

Two men were killed and two others were seriously injured when a 50-gallon drum of gasoline exploded on the schooner Lillie White, of Key West, at the Gulf Refining Company's docks at Tampa.

The schooner was wrecked and sank to the bottom almost immediately after the explosion. Fortunately for the two injured men, the accident happened at low tide and the vessel was not submerged.

Immediately following the explosion the boat caught fire. There were nearly 200 drums of gasoline aboard, and when the firemen arrived they feared that every moment would bring another explosion. Hearing the cries of the two wounded men, who were lying helpless in the hold of the vessel, Assistant Fire Chief Torres headed a squad of men to the rescue. Both men were dragged out and drums of gasoline in immediate danger of the fire were rolled beyond danger. The flames were quickly extinguished.

MARKHAM CHOSEN.

Will Be President of Both Illinois and Georgia Centrals.

The gossip of Wall street, New York, is that Charles H. Markham, formerly of the Southern Pacific, but now engaged in the oil business in Pittsburg, who became successor of J. T. Harahan as president of the Illinois Central railroad, will also succeed the late Major J. F. Hanson as president of the Central of Georgia railway, which is owned by the Illinois Central.

It is a peculiar coincidence that it became necessary to select a new president for each of these companies at the same time.

The retirement of President Harahan, whose resignation becomes effective on his seventieth birthday, January 12, brought about the necessity for the choice of his successor at the same time that the filling of the vacancy in the presidency of the Central of Georgia was under consideration.

CLASH OF FACTIONS.

Outbreak Is Feared in Town in State of Alabama.

Citizens of Georgiana, Ala., are excited over a mysterious shooting affray in which J. T. Smith, a prominent merchant, was killed by J. C. Brown, who is in the meat market business.

The mystery of the situation has been deepened by the spiriting away of a negro, Sam Singer, to the Greenville jail in order to prevent his being lynched by citizens for a part he is supposed to have played in the shooting.

The shooting occurred in the store of J. T. Smith. It is said that Smith cut Brown's clothing with a knife before he fell to the floor in a dying condition from four bullet wounds.

Both men belong to the most prominent families in this section of the country.

The authorities are making an investigation of the case and will make the facts known in order to prevent an open clash between the two factions.

Brown has been taken to Greenville and is in the hands of the authorities of that city, pending an investigation.

BROTHERS HAVE A FATAL DIFFICULTY

Duel to the Death Over Gray Mule.

SHOCKING ALABAMA TRAGEDY

John and Will Benefield Quarreled Over Mule—White Benefield Tried to Make Peace in Vain, and Then Shooting Began.

As the result of a quarrel over the ownership of a small gray mule, Will Benefield, John Benefield and White Benefield, brothers and well-to-do farmers, who reside near Hopewell, Ala., just across the Georgia line, engaged in a duel with revolvers and all three were killed.

During the fight, the mule, which was the innocent cause of the fight, was also killed.

It seems that the mule was in the possession of John Benefield, but Will Benefield claimed to be the owner, and had demanded the return of the animan. John Benefield refused to surrender the mule, alleging that his brother's claim was unjust.

A bitter quarrel between Will and John Benefield followed, and White Benefield, the older brother, tried to act as peacemaker and have the ownership of the mule submitted to arbitration.

John Benefield was willing, but Will Benefield said the mule was his property and he intended to have the animal.

Will Benefield tried to lead the mule away, and was warned to stop by his brother John. There was another exchange of bitter words, and then both John and Will Benefield drew their revolvers and began firing at each other at close range. Both men emptied their revolvers, every shot taking effect.

When the smoke cleared away, John and Will Benefield and the mule were dead, and White Benefield, who had tried to stop the quarrel, was dying. He lived only a few minutes.

All three brothers were prominent in their section, and each of them leaves a wife and children.

While the dispute over the mule was the immediate cause of the tragedy, it is said that the real bitterness between John and Will Benefield was due to an alleged insult which Will Benefield is said to have offered John's wife.

HEAVY VERDICT.

Pennsylvania Roads and Steel Co. Convicted on Rebating Charge.

The United States district court at Philadelphia has refused to grant a new trial to the Philadelphia and Reading railway, the Lehigh Valley railroad and the Bethlehem Steel Company, recently convicted on charges of rebating.

There are a large number of counts in the indictments against the three companies, and if the maximum penalty were imposed against each defendant, the Bethlehem Steel Company would have to pay a fine of $3,200,000, the Lehigh Valley railroad $2,500,000 and the Reading railway $1,740,000.

The jury, in rendering its verdict of guilty, however, recommended the companies to the mercy of the court.

ROCKEFELLER'S DONATION.

Billionaire Completes Rich Gifts to Chicago University.

John D. Rockefeller has completed the task he set for himself in the founding of the University of Chicago. The public announcement was made of a "single and final" $10,000,000, which includes all the contributions that Mr. Rockefeller had planned to make to the university. This sum, which is to be paid in ten annual installments, beginning January 1, will make a total of approximately $35,000,000 that Mr. Rockefeller has given to the university.

Mr. Rockefeller says he now believes the school should be supported and enlarged by the gifts of many rather than those of a single donor.

REMARKABLE GIRL.

Deaf, Dumb, Blind, She Performs Wonders.

A bill will be presented to the next Wisconsin legislature asking for an appropriation of $1,000 a year to further the education of V. A. Mabel Gammon, 16 years old, who has been unable to speak, hear or see since her birth. Miss Gammon has been in the Faribault school only three years, yet she writes on the typewriter with skill, has a vocabulary of 3,000 words, and recently wrote an essay of 5,000 words. She makes her own clothes, threading her own needles, and is skilled in fancy work.

FOUND $4,000.

New Jersey Woman Lifts Boards and Discovers Hidden Treasure.

No one in New Jersey has found house cleaning more profitable than has Miss Ida Simonson, who got $4,000 as the result of her annual overhauling of her homestead in Vernon, N. J.

While cleaning a closet she lifted a loose board in the floor and brought to light the treasure, $569 in gold and the remainder in bills of large denomination. The money was probably put there about 40 years ago by a relative who died soon after hiding it.

13 KILLED, SCORES HURT BY EXPLOSION

Double Explosion of Gas and Dynamite.

TWO WOMEN WERE KILLED

Electric Power House Blows Up, Wrecking Building, Demolishing Street Car and Shocking Neighborhood.

Thirteen persons were killed, two of them women, and 50 were injured in a double explosion of gas and dynamite in the new electric power house of the New York Central railroad early Monday morning.

The dynamite blast picked up a northbound trolley car, lifted it in the air, and sent it crashing down upon an automobile which was passing along the other side of the street. Four of the passengers were killed and every one in the cars was injured.

The railroad service was only temporarily interrupted. The new substation power house, where the explosion occurred, is at 50th street and Lexington avenue, which is half a dozen blocks north of the Grand Central.

The explosion, which could be heard for many blocks, partly wrecked the fire engine house nearby and prevented the firemen from getting their apparatus into the street.

WORLD'S COSTLIEST HOUSE.

Ex-Senator Clark's $7,000,000 Fifth Avenue Mansion Is Completed.

The $7,000,000 Fifth avenue home of ex-Senator W. A. Clark, of Montana, has been completed after eight years of work and will be occupied early in the next year. It is to be the costliest residence ever built in America. The taxes assessed on it by New York city amount to more than $200 a day.

The mansion contains 121 rooms, 31 baths and four picture galleries. No building in the world, according to experts who have inspected the interior, carries so much bronze as has been worked into this mansion.

Although the best architects and decorators in this country were employed, Senator Clark himself designed much of the interior, as well as the exterior of the mansion.

The building contains one of the largest pipe organs in the world, which was installed at a cost of $300,000. There are $2,000,000 worth of pictures and $500,000 worth of rugs.

MAJORITY FOR LIBERALS.

Final Ballot Is Cast in the British Elections.

With the final ballotings the general elections have come to a close. The results are not yet known, but these last three seats voted on were formerly held by a liberal, a nationalist and an independent nationalist.

The standing of the parties is as follows:

Government coalition: Liberals, 270, laborites 43, nationalists 72, independent nationalists 10. Total 395.

Opposition: Unionists 272.

Coalition majority 123.

The return of the nationalist and the independent nationalist in the constituencies yet remaining to be heard from is considered certain, but there is a possibility of a change in Wickburg's, in Scotland, which was represented in the last parliament by a liberal, R. Munro. The liberal majority in this district in the January election was 125, and it is considered doubtful if the unionists can overcome it.

CLEMENTS SUCCEEDS KNAPP.

Georgian May Head Interstate Commerce Commission.

The nominations of the two members of the interstate commerce commission, C. C. McChord and V. H. Meyer, have been confirmed by the senate.

Within the next two or three weeks the commission will organize and the probability is that Judson C. Clements, of Georgia, will be elected chairman of the commission, to succeed Judge Martin S. Knapp, who goes to the new court of commerce.

Judge Clements is now the senior member of the commission and according to usual custom would be the logical chairman. As he is very popular with his associates, his election is considered a foregone conclusion.

OFFICERS FIGHT IN DARK.

Federal Officer Is Wounded in Battle With Detectives Near Memphis.

A battle in the dark on a Mississippi river sand bar near Memphis between United States revenue officers and city detectives resulted in the wounding of Deputy Revenue Collector Thomas H. Baker and John Garnell, a 15-year-old boy.

The whole affair was a case of mistaken identity and of the effort of the two posses to capture the occupant of a shanty boat wanted for the violation of both federal and state laws. Baker and several special deputies were on guard about the boat when Detectives Shea and Nolan, on the same mission, ran into their ambuscade. A general fusillade followed, and before identities were established Baker and the boy had been wounded. Their injuries are not serious.

NEGRO KILLS THREE, THEN BURNS THEM

Brutal Crime Near Durham, North Carolina.

NEGRO HAS BEEN CAPTURED

Negro Said to Have Assaulted Little Girl, Killed Her Father and Daughter, Then Set Fire to Their Home.

A series of the blackest crimes ever committed in North Carolina was unearthed at the home of J. L. Sanders in Granville county, when a negro's criminal assault on a young girl, triple murder, and the destruction of the home of the victims, together with their bodies, were discovered by neighbors.

Nathan Montague, a negro, charged with the crimes, is lodged in the jail at Durham, after a long and exciting cross-country chase by the sheriff to escape a mob. Intense excitement prevails throughout the section of the Sanders home and in Durham as well, and trouble may develop any minute.

When neighbors, attracted by the sight of a burning house, rushed to the Sanders home a gruesome picture met their gaze. On the ground were traces of a struggle, parts of a girl's hair and clothing, and pools of blood. When the fire died down the charred bodies of Miss Mary Sanders, her father, J. L. Sanders, and his 12-year-old granddaughter were found in the embers.

Nearby was a bloody knife, the instrument of crime, and a neighbor instantly recognized it as one he had seen Montague helping kill hogs with the day before. He conveyed it at once to the sheriff and when the latter arrived at Montague's home he found the negro trembling and spattered with blood with hair sticking in it.

Keeping the presence of the negro a secret in Granville county, the sheriff rushed with him at once to Durham.

ATHENS CHOSEN BY FARMERS.

As General Headquarters for the Agricultural Federation.

The general headquarters of the Federated Agricultural Association of Georgia were fixed at Athens in the concluding session of the farmers' meeting held in Macon. State Entomologist W. L. Woraham at the morning session thoroughly discussed the boll weevil, and he presented his subject in splendid manner.

Professor A. G. Soule presided during the day until President Scott, of Forsyth, was introduced. The latter was enthusiastic in his talk.

The educational train to be sent out in charge of Dr. Soule was indorsed by the body. The next session will be held in Athens January 17 and 18, when more will be accomplished toward enlisting all agricultural organizations in the movement for the good of the farmer.

WOMAN TOO MODEST.

Chooses Death Rather Than Exhibit Nether Limbs.

Because she was too modest to allow the fastening of a tourniquet about her leg, Helen Gershen died at St. Vincent's hospital, New York.

Miss Gershen accidentally stabbed herself in her left leg with a pair of scissors while at work in a clothing factory. Her fellow employees rushed to her assistance, but she refused to permit anybody to bind the wound. She soon fainted from loss of blood and was hurried to the hospital. It was too late, however, to save her life, although the house surgeon said she would have recovered had a tourniquet been applied immediately.

REPORT ON LORIMER.

Chairman Burrows Says It Will Comply With Sub-Committee Views.

Senator Burrows, chairman of the senate committee on privileges and elections, has been authorized to prepare a report on the investigation of charges of bribery which were filed in connection with the election of Senator William Lorimer, of Illinois.

He announced that the report would be in compliance with the views expressed in the report of the sub-committee, but did not pass upon the truth or falsity of evidence of individual witnesses. Senator Burrows added that he did not think that there would be a minority report from the committee, but that the report when presented would be accompanied by individual statement of members of the committee.

TOBACCO GROWERS PLAN POOL.

Burley Growers of Four States Hold Meeting in Lexington, Ky.

The first definite steps were taken in Lexington toward the organization of growers of burley tobacco in this and adjoining states with a view to either rehabilitation of the 1910 pool or the elimination of the 1911 crop.

The call for the meeting of growers was signed by more than sixty men who have heretofore been independent, and the gathering included many also who were identified with the recently collapsed pool of 1909-10.

The burley growers of West Virginia, southern Indiana and southern Ohio were represented in addition to the burley growing belt of Kentucky.

FAMINE IN CHINA.

Roadways Are Said to Be Dotted With the Dead.

The throne has issued an edict refusing to create a constitutional cabinet in compliance with a memorial recently presented by the national assembly and also declining to accept the resignations of the grand councilors. The imperial senate also adopted a resolution, praying for the immediate creation of a cabinet and it was believed that the throne had decided to accede to the demand. The national assembly will meet, when the whole question will come up for discussion.

Winter is intensifying the famine in the Yangtsekiang district. The authorities are endeavoring to suppress the sale of children, which is estimated at over 1,000,000. The majority of these are girls. The roadways are dotted with starving and dead.

The relief committees is now making appeals abroad for aid.

HUGHES FOR PRESIDENCY.

Republicans Have Eye on the Justice.

Quiet talk of Charles E. Hughes, associate justice of the supreme court, for the republican presidential nomination in 1912 has been heard among prominent republican members of both branches of congress this week. The suggestion has been made in event President Taft does not care to stand for renomination or that his renomination would seem inadvisable.

GENERAL NEWS NOTES. An emergency fund of several thousand dollars has been raised among some of the leading Baptist educators of Alabama as the beginning of a sum of money which is to be regularly set aside to aid in eliminating expenses of the Baptist institutions of Alabama. The work is in charge of J. C. Carter, of Roanoke, who is chairman of the educational commission of the Baptist church.

Examination of a dog's head has just been completed in the State Pasteur department, showing that the canine which bit little Jenny Copeland, daughter of Dr. B. A. Copeland, of Birmingham, was afflicted with a bad case of rabies at the time of the accident. The animal bit the little girl on the 12th of December, and died from the effects of the disease on December 18. The little girl has been advised to begin the Pasteur treatment at once.

The senate passed the bill to extend for a term of three years the act providing for the marking of the graves for confederate soldiers and sailors who died in northern prisons. The original act was approved March 9, 1909, and provided that the work should be accomplished within four years. The bill just passed by both houses, extending the term three years, will now go to the president for his signature.

Because the eaves of his house fell on a pedestrian, Julian Horemda, of Mayaguez, Porto Rico, will be required to pay $9,800 damages as the result of the termination of a case in the supreme court of the United States. In 1907 Felix Gurman was injured by the eaves of a house falling upon him. A local jury awarded him $9,000 damages.

To hasten the completion of post-offices and other buildings authorized by the public building act passed by congress last June, Chairman Tawney, of the house appropriations committee, offered a resolution asking the secretary of the treasury to submit estimates of the amounts that can be expended upon all buildings to June 30, 1912.

Owen Moran, who recently knocked out "Battling" Nelson, issued a challenge at Boston to Ad Wolgast for the lightweight championship at any time or place the latter may name and offered to place a $5,000 side bet. Moran says he will give up any or all of his engagements to meet Wolgast.

The Pope has created twenty-four new Knights of the Golden Spur. Among these are the Duke of Orleans, the French Pretender; Marshal Hermez Fonseda, president of Brazil; Senor Franco, ex-premier of Portugal; four Austrian archdukes and six Italian princes.

The calendar year 1910 will be a banner year for the world's international trade, according to the bureau of statistics at Washington. The bureau receives statistics from practically every country and these show that both imports and exports are considerably greater than in 1909.

The American League of Associations, a combination of mercantile houses throughout the country, has started a campaign against the proposed establishment of rural local parcels post service and a fund is said to be available to fight the bill now before congress.

D. B. Johnson, a white man, was terribly mangled in a cotton gin near Clarton, Ga., dying later. One leg was torn from his body. He was married and leaves several children.

Following the fight made by the authorities of New Orleans on the promiscuous sale of cocaine and other habit forming drugs the state board of health has taken the matter up and the crusade will be made statewide.

Edward Douglas White, for sixteen years an associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, has become the ninth chief justice of the nation. The oath of allegiance was administered by Associate Justice Harlan.

Not the owners, tenants, directors or building inspectors were responsible for the factory fire of a Triangle shirt waist company in which twenty-five girls lost their lives, but the laws of the state of New Jersey. Such was the finding of a coroner's jury.

The schooner Gladys, the first to make the trip on a new line established between Galveston and Lake Arthur to ply the merchant trade, reached Lake Arthur Saturday. Regular trips will be made between the two ports in future.

In a shooting affray J. M. White, a prominent resident, was killed at Oakdale, La. Ward Clayburgh, charged with the shooting, is a fugitive from justice, and Ed Howard is held as an accessory. The shooting was the result of a brawl.

After many years in the license column with twenty-one saloons and several clubs enjoying the privilege of liquor selling, North Adams, Mass., has swung into the no-license rank by one vote.

The senate has confirmed C. C. McChord, of Kentucky, and B. H. Meyer, of Wisconsin, to be members of the interstate commerce commission.

CRIMES AND CASUALTIES. Hurled 90 feet into a ravine when a trolley car struck their team, Paul H. Grubb, aged 19, was instantly killed and Margaret Fry, aged 18, was seriously injured, near Erie, Pa. Seven young people were returning from a party when their wagon was caught on a bridge by the car. The five that escaped injury saved themselves by catching the guard rail as the wagon was turned over. Grubb's back and shoulder were broken and he died an hour afterward.

William Bechtel was killed at Lebanon, Ind., by a blow over the head with a chair, and Earl Swope was arrested, accused of striking the blow. Bechtel, according to the police, joked Swope about his name, when the latter became angry and picking up a chair, struck the man over the head. Bechtel fell to the floor and died five minutes later.

Private Charles Carroll, aged 24, a marine stationed at the Paris Island naval station, was burned to death in a fire which destroyed the town lockup and hose reel house at Port Royal, S. C. Carroll enlisted at Dallas, Tex., November 20, and gave as next of kin Miss Bridge Carroll, No. 1128 South West street, St. Louis, Mo. He had been locked up on a charge of being drunk and disorderly on the street. The origin of the fire is not known.

Miss Mattie Lou Jackson, daughter of a prominent citizen who lives near Oglethorpe, Ga., is dead as the result of being accidentally shot. There was a little boy named John Griffith, about six years old, visiting the Jackson family. In some way the little fellow got hold of a pistol and while playing with it the weapon was discharged, the bullet entering Miss Jackson's head and inflicting a fatal wound. Miss Jackson died a few hours after being shot.

Sixteen Chinese concealed in a box car were arrested at Yuleta, below El Paso, and two Americans were also arrested, charged with smuggling the Chinese into this country. The car had been lined around the sides with baled hay, leaving a space in the middle of the car, and into this space the Chinamen had been let down from the roof.

Sam Reighley, of Mowaka, Ill., was shot and killed at Hot Springs, Ark., by Patrolman Willox Ford, while resisting arrest. Reighley was arrested for being disorderly. It is said he recently inherited considerable money and had come to Hot Springs in search of his health.

Vice-President Edward Van Wyck Rossiter, of the New York Central lines, died at his home in Flushing, L. I., of a complication of diseases. REPUBLICS IN GERMANY.

Three City States Whose Constitutions the Empire Respects.

Hamburg, Bremen and Lubeck are commercially three republics which have for the mutual convenience of themselves and the empire come under the rule of the kaiser in all but purely local affairs. As they had joined the north German confederation, which was formed after Prussia's victory in 1866, there was nothing left for them to do but to give their allegiance to its successor, the empire.

Each is represented in the bundesrath, or federal council, as well as in the reichstag, and each retains the republican principle in its local legislature. The Hamburg senate may have fallen from its highest estate, but it still lives and legislates concurrently with the house of burgesses. The burgomaster of Hamburg remains the great man in the inheritor of the great traditions of the Hansa. Bremen and Lubeck have constitutions in exact kinship with Hamburg.

A wise empire respects the conservatism of these city states and refrains from any action blotting of the opinion of the steam roller in pursuit of harmony. The survivors of the Hansa have been more fortunate than some other republics of continental Europe. They have outlived several that had hopes of being left ignored in their republicanism.

Cracow was once a republic, but, being surrounded by Austrian possessions, was finally swallowed up in 1846. Since that time it has been a city of Austrian Poland.—Boston Transcript.

DROWNED THE MUSIC.

The Audience Was Angry, and Theodore Thomas Was Obstinate.

Theodore Thomas once undertook to raise a subscription fund for a series of concerts in San Francisco, but only $30,000 had been raised, and the enterprise hung fire. Then he announced that Emma Thursby would sing at each concert, and the guarantee fund promptly went up to $50,000.

Thomas had a rule against encores for soloists. They were allowed to appear and bow in recognition of applause, but that was all. The San Franciscans held that as it was Miss Thursby's engagement which was responsible for the raising of the fund they were entitled to encore her if they chose. Thomas, however, insisted stubbornly on his rule.

On the last night a determined effort was made to encore her. She appeared again and again, bowing her thanks, and each time the applause increased instead of diminishing. At last the audience began to shout its demands instead of merely applauding, and Miss Thursby turned to Thomas and said, "What shall I do?"

"Keep on bowing if you have to bow all night," snapped Thomas grimly.

And she went out and bowed again. This time Thomas directed the orchestra to go ahead with the final number. The audience, thoroughly indignant, shouted down the music, but Thomas was inflexible. The orchestra went on playing, utterly unheard, in a pandemonium of shouted protests. And it was probably the only time that a Thomas number fell on deaf ears.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Venetian Fashion.

Fashions were no less eccentric four centuries ago than they are today. "Before the streets of Venice were paved (in the thirteenth century)," says Mr. William Boulting in "Woman in Italy," "ladies went though the mud and filth on pattens. The custom was retained, and in spite of sumptuary laws the patten became heightened until women of rank stood on false feet half a yard high in the fifteenth century. They were unable to walk without the support of one or two gentlemen or servants."

A curiosity in banquets is mentioned by the same writer. It was a wedding feast at Milan and consisted of fifteen courses, "each being introduced by living specimens of the animals that composed it."

Tale of a Snake.

"Before he went fishin'," said the town story teller, "he swallowed 'bout a pint an' half of snake bite remedy, an' of course you know what that is. Well, after the snake bit him the remedy cut all sorts of capers, kase the remedy went straight to its head. Last thing it tried to do was to swaller its tail, an' it got itself in the form of a hoop, an' I'm a liar ef the children didn't roll it around all day!"—Atlanta Constitution.

"Keep on bowing if you have to bow all night," snapped Thomas grimly.

And she went out and bowed again. This time Thomas directed the orchestra to go ahead with the final number. The audience, thoroughly indignant, shouted down the music, but Thomas was indexible. The orchestra went on playing, utterly unheard, in a pandemonium of shouted protests. And it was probably the only time that a Thomas number fell on deaf ears.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Venetian Fashion.

Fashions were no less eccentric four centuries ago than they are today. "Before the streets of Venice were paved (in the thirteenth century)," says Mr. William Boulting in "Woman in Italy," "ladies went though the mud and filth on pattens. The custom was retained, and in spite of sumptuary laws the patten became heightened until women of rank stood on false feet half a yard high in the fifteenth century. They were unable to walk without the support of one or two gentlemen or servants."

A curiosity in banquets is mentioned by the same writer. It was a wedding feast at Milan and consisted of fifteen courses, "each being introduced by living specimens of the animals that composed it."

Tale of a Snake.

"Before he went fishin'," said the town story teller, "he swallowed 'bout a pint an' half of snake bite remedy, an' of course you know what that is. Well, after the snake bit him the reptile cut all sorts of capers, kaze the remedy went straight to its head. Last thing it tried to do wuz to swaller its tail, an' it got itself in the form of a hoop, an' I'm a liar ef the children didn't roll it around all day!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Wants to help Some One.

For thirty years J. F. Boyer, of Fertile, Mo., needed help and could not find it. That's why he wants to help some one now. Suffering as long himself he feels for all distress from backache, nervousness, loss of appetite, lassitude and, kidney disorders. He shows that Electric Bitters work wonders for such troubles. "Five bottles," he writes, "wholly cured me and now I am well and hearty." It's also positively guaranteed for liver trouble, dyspepsia, blood disorders, female complaints and malaria. Good Form

Good manners are not difficult for a young girl to acquire, but it is difficult for the average young girl to realize their tremendous importance. Yet if she will only stop to think she will remember some old woman who, in her eyes, holds everything of grace and charm. Then why does she not try to imitate her? Why does she not study this woman's personality and find out the secret of this charm? And if she studies this older woman, provided her model is a woman of distinction, she will always find that the secret of this charm generally lies in good manners.

The schoolgirl should try first to be considerate. In being that she will find nearly everything else will be comparatively easy. She will not talk in loud, breezy tones, because she will know that she is disturbing other persons; she will not hurry through the streets in a bold and pushing manner, nor stand in foolish, giggling groups on street corners, because she will know that she is making of herself a nuisance.

Nor will she enter shops and engage in high pitched conversation, plentifully larded with unintelligible slang, incommoding other customers by blocking the counters.

If she will only accept consideration as a foundation and conscientiously begin her building, using quiet tones and soft colors, laying well polished stones of tact and grace one upon another, leaving out all that is harsh and unlovely, she will soon find herself possessed of a structure called a charming personality.

And once a young girl is safely housed within these walls she need never fear the lack of friends and popularity.

Invitations by Telephone.

Women who entertain much agree that to have an immediate answer to an invitation, as is possible by use of the telephone, saves a hostess much nervous strain. But at the same time they admit that, however formal the occasion may be, if the persons are invited by word of mouth there is a certain casualness which a written request never can acquire. It is as though Dame Etiquette said, "You may, but I wouldn't."

One strong argument against telephone invitations is the danger of misunderstanding the date. This has happened more than once on the occasion of formal dinners, and one or more guests have arrived the wrong evening. That is why an invitation so given must be followed by a written answer, in which day, date and hour are repeated. Such a communication is regarded as imperative, even though a positive answer has been given over the telephone.

Nor should there be any delay in sending such a note. The person invited should go directly from the instrument to her desk and write the prospective hostess as though she were answering a note.

If any error has been made in time her note, containing the hour and the day as she understands it, will receive an immediate response from the other woman, making right the mistake.

Hints For School Behavior.

The first weeks away at school are difficult. Even where there is no homesickness to contend with, so much depends upon first impressions. A girl's entire school life—yes, after life—may hinge on the way she acts at first.

Here are a few don'ts that may help:

Don't boast, pose as exclusive or talk braggingly of your home friends.

Don't rush into friendship. The most desirable girls are rarely the most approachable.

Don't be confidential on short acquaintance. You will live to regret it, especially if you discuss teachers or other girls.

Don't be fresh, domineering, self assertive or a know-it-all as a stranger. Nothing will so surely "queer" you.

Don't be stand-offish. Willingness to meet friends halfway is a big asset toward popularity.

Don't complain of the food and go in for general criticism. This enrages the old girls who love the school and exact a school spirit in newcomers.

Don't go in for crushes on a day or two acquaintance. Don't go in for them at all if your school life is to be broadening and you wish to be a general favorite.

Wedding Hints.

For an early morning wedding a tailor dress is best form for the bride. She may wear flowers or carry them, as she chooses. The bridegroom may wear a sack suit, but a cutaway would be better. With the latter a high hat would be required, but with the former a derby would be correct.

Bridesmaid's duties are honorary. She should be willing to make herself useful to the bride before and immediately after the wedding.

At the ceremony she precedes the bride into the room or church, following her from it. She does nothing during the ceremony, as it is a maid of honor who holds the bride's flowers and turns back the veil.

Woman's World

Author of "The Rosary" a Sister of Maud Ballington Booth.

MRS. FLORENCE L. BARCLAY.

To the many women who have read with absorbed interest that delightful love story, "The Rosary" it will be of interest to know that its author, Mrs. Florence L. Barclay, is a sister of Maud Ballington Booth, who also has written some charming books for children.

The author of "The Rosary" comes from an English family trained in the traditions of the very best literature, and many of its members have achieved distinction through their pen. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. Charlesworth, whose "Ministering Children" was read with such avidity when it appeared a half century ago. She is a niece of the learned Arabic scholar Professor Cowell of England, to whose persuasion it was due that Fitzgerald took up the study of Arabic. Professor Cowell rendered valuable assistance in the connection with the translation of "Omar Khayyam."

Mrs. Barclay's new novel, "The Mistress of Shenstone," is said to transcend in interest the much appreciated "Rosary" and follows out the late career of certain characters that won sympathy in the former novel.

The Woman Who Farms.

Plenty of women fail in farming because they have taken it up either too hastily or with too little capital or because they have already worn themselves out at some other vocation and have not the strength for the hard work of the farm. If a teacher finds some disadvantages in caring for fifty restless children she must not expect cutting seed potatoes to be sheer pleasure, says the Saturday Evening Post. The hen run cannot take the place of the woman's club, nor can the tomato field be regarded as a salon.

Undoubtedly those who get along best are the ones who were brought up on a farm and thus have always had the right sort of exercise for the kind of physical development most valuable to them. They have had the practical work, and they can, if necessary, do all the farming operations. There are multitudes of such women standing behind the men farmers of this country. Those who stand alone on farms of their own are to be found in the east rather than in the west. The reason is not only that land is cheaper in the east, but that men are rarer, and in the west many women who could succeed well on a farm are taking the chance of succeeding well in marriage.

The New Collar Pins.

It may be surprising to hear that Dutch collar pins have gone. It is only the name, however, that has passed. Pierrot pins have taken their place. The fan shaped Pierrot pin has the advantage of following the lines of the frock where it meets the throat. Bar pins are in the ascendency. A becoming accessory to be worn with Pierrot collars is a black velvet collaret with jeweled ornament.

A Present For the Housewife.

For the busy housewife nothing in the way of a present is more acceptable than a mending basket—a receptacle that is not used for general sewing, but a mending basket pure and simple. The basket illustrated is just the thing for the purpose and was designed for the Woman's Home Companion. It is made of cretonne in mingled tones of burnt orange, golden brown and gray green on a cream ground, which covers the pieces of cardboard that go to form the basket. The handle is wound, the top edge is bound, and the various straps are made of upholsterer's antique gimp. There are no pockets on the basket—nothing but a strap for the scissors.

HUMOROUS QUIPS

Some Don'ts For Christmas.

Don't send a grand piano to your fiancee in Chicago with a little note requesting her to put it into her stocking.

Don't send an electric runabout to a freezing widow with five starving children. This is like throwing a rope of pearls to a drowning man.

Don't give your wife a set of Russian sables or an ermine opera cloak if your balance at the bank is down to an overdraft of $4.11.

Don't present your pastor with a copy of "The World's Best Sermons." He might preach one of them by mistake and interfere with your Sunday morning nap.

Don't send a blank check signed to your son in college. As a student of the arts it may be that he has learned to draw.

Don't undertake to impersonate Santa Claus for the delectation of your children and try to come down a 4 by 9 flue if you have a waist measurement of fifty-seven inches.

Don't be ostentatious in your celebration of the day. The man who decorated his windows last year with wreaths woven of greenbacks dotted all over with maraschino cherries instead of holly berries is sojourning this season at Bloomingdale.

Don't appear on the public highways with a piece of mistletoe decorating your winter hat unless you are a particularly angular old maid. There are a large number of freshmen home from college lurking about, and they might—Well, you never can tell.

Don't fail to discriminate in your Christmas economies. If you are using last year's gifts for this year's presents be careful not to send to your rich maiden aunt the very same ear tabs she knitted for you last Christmas.

Don't look ungraciously on the bargain counter cigars your wife buys for you as a little surprise, but keep them either to smoke when her mother is visiting you or to augment your popularity with the electorate when you run for office. Many a man has been wafted into the state legislature on the strength of that kind of weed.

Don't be sarcastic in your choice of gifts for those you love. It is all right to send a copy of the Payne tariff bill, bound in pigskin, to your member of congress or a barrel of sand to your grocer, but it is bad policy to send your wife a rolling pin labeled "A Woman's Club For Mother to Spend Her Afternoons At." She might insist upon your joining it some night on your return from your own club in a defenseless condition.

Don't make pre-Christmas promises that you do not intend to fulfill. It is not good form to promise your daughter a ring and then give her a muffin ring or to tell your son, who is fond of motoring, that he shall have a new machine for Christmas and then present him with a vacuum cleaner or a newfangled automatic potato reaper.

Don't fail to investigate closely the antecedents of any strange Santa Clauses that turn up unexpectedly in your household after midnight. There are several impostors about impersonating the good old chap who are entirely unauthorized to represent him and who have no standing whatsoever in the Yuletide union. If they stir your heart to action give them what you have for them quickly and without stint, lest, actuated by the spirit of the hour, they get in their gifts first.—Puck.

FREE SAMPLE OF LAXATIVE CURED THEIR CONSTIPATION

When a person has become discouraged through years of failure to find a cure, and finally, perhaps, gives up trying, it is small wonder that he becomes skeptical. And yet, to all who have constipation, we would say, "Try just one thing more."

We wish you would try Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a laxative tonic that has been used for a generation. Thousands are using it; surely some of your friends among the number. You can buy it of any druggist at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle, but better still, send your name and address to Dr. Caldwell for a free sample bottle. He will send you enough to convince you of its merits, and then if you like it you can buy it of your druggist. Mr. J. J. Petty of Unionville, Mo., Mr. George W. Zimmerman of Harrisburg, Pa. and many others of both sexes and in all parts of the country first used a sample bottle and now have it regularly in the house.

You will learn to do away with salts, waters and cathartics for these are but temporary reliefs while Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is guaranteed to cure permanently. It will train your stomach and bowel muscles so that they will do their work again naturally without outside aid. Cast aside your skepticism and try Syrup Pepsin.

Dr. Caldwell does not feel that the purchase of his remedy ends his obligation. He has specialized in stomach, liver and bowel diseases for over forty years and will be pleased to give the reader any advice on the subject free of charge. All are welcome to write him. Whether for the medical advice or the free sample address him Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 462 Caldwell building, Monticello, Ill.

The Hum of the Hive.

Economy in the use of foundation is wasteful, and it is a poor practice to put first strips or slatters of foundation in the section boxes, for it is an indisputable fact that a full sheet of foundation in each section box means not only their ready acceptance by the bees, but also the building of straighter combs.

By selection and restriction in the matter of queens we can improve our bees just as we can other stock, and there is always present in every apiary some choice queen far ahead of the others which will give us most excellent queens for requeening.

Don't keep bees unless you mean to give them the proper care and attention. If you can't do that you had better leave some one else keep the bees and buy your honey from him.

A man who knows "all about bees" and does not believe that anything more can be gained by reading bee journals, books on bees, etc., will soon be far behind the age.

The present improved system of management requires that hives should not stand too near each other. There should be at least six feet between them, and ten feet would be a preferable distance.

Be sure that your bees have a good, prolific Italian queen and the ants will not bother them.

Among the Christmas pardons issued by Governor Gomer was that of William T. Lucas, Chilton county, sent up seven years ago to serve 18 years on the charge of complicity with his father in murder The sire was sent up for 35 years. It is shown in the records that John Payne, deceased, had notorious habits, and that he may have been the instigator of the crime. William Lucas is pardoned on this showing.

W. J. A. Melton, Chilton county, who was paroled a few months ago, has had his civil rights restored to him.

The will of the late Newton J. Bell, son of the late O. R. Bell of Clanton, was probated at Montgomery Tuesday. A peculiar feature of the will is the fact that the estate is perpetuated to the extent that none of the children of the testator nor his wife, will receive the property, but provision is made that the estate is to be divided among the chidren of his children per stripes and not per capita.

Among the other provisions the trustees are instructed to lay off in lots and sell the 160 acres of land in Clanton, and to use the proceeds to pay off any encumbrance on the Bell building at Montgomery.

For a long time it looked as if Pud Walker would be the successful contestant for the Bicycle, but at the last Dorcas Maddox comes in with a big batch of ballots and carries off the prize.

Among the donors of the prizes, satisfaction is expressed at the successful conclusion of the contest.

The Alred Drug Company say it has helped their business, their customers have been greatly interested, and the results have been gratifying to them.

J. C. Jones & Co. are well pleased with the contest. It has materially helped their cash collections and been of considerable service in other directions.

The Clanton Millinery Company express their satisfaction with the contest, in which we understand their customers join.

W. J. Ruffin & Sons add their voice to the gratifying results of the contest conducted by The Banner and to the best of our knowledge and belief, all are thoroughly satisfied.

The Banner is pleased to have added this entertainment to its friends whether subscribers or not; it has entailed a large amount of work, but if it has given pleasure to our friends we care not for the extra work or expense—it is the province of a newspaper to first give the news of the community in which it circulates, and second to provide entertainment for its readers.

With this announcement we bid old 1910 adieu and wish to every one a Happy and prosperous new year.

Just Half in Bed.

Clyde, Ky.—Mrs. I. A. Decker writes from Clyde, "I recommend Cardui, the woman's tonic, to any woman in need of a remedy. For five years I was unable to do my work. Half my time was spent in bed. At times, I could not stand. At last I tried Cardui. Now I am well and happy, and can do my own work." Don't suffer pain, headache, backache and other womanly misery when your druggist has on his shelf a remedy—Cardui. Get a bottle for your shelf.

Every energy at the state experiment farm, in connection with the Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn, is directed toward combatting the boll weevil. Not only is the department of entomology busy in the problem, but all other sub-divisions of the Agricultural department have joined forces and are working toward a common end.

In the department of agriculture proper, under the direction of Professor J. A. Duggar, who is manager of the experiment station, every bit of research and experiment is performed with a view to the fact that the boll weevil is coming. Experimental work in corn and in wheat has proved successful so far that propaganda, advocating profitable substitutions of these for the threatened cotton, in favorable sections may be expected.

And neither have these workers for the common public good give up the idea that cotton its self may be developed to resist the boll weevil, whose appearance usually is made in late season. Experiments are being made in early fruiting varieties of cotton. Early fruiting and early harvesting is one means advocated to thwart the pest.

One of the interesting experiments is that in tile draigage. The experiment, for the most part was evolved in Auburn. The tiles used in draining land are made of cement, by a cimple device, which can be operated on every farm, and thus accordiug to Professor Duggar can be a thing of some incidental economic value in that it employs otherwise idle labor on rainy days. By the drainage effected in this way lands which otherwise would not be adaptable to cotton planting until late in the season, can be made fit for an early crop, and thus the manace of the weevil will be overcome.

Texas woman Near Death.

Wills Point, Tex.—In a letter from Wills Point, Mrs. Victoria Stalling says "I was afflicted with womanly trouble, had a dreadful cough and suffered awful pains. I certainly would have died if I had not been relieved by taking Cardui. Now I am stronger and in better health, than I ever was in my life I can't say half enough for this great medicine." Do you need relief? Cardui will help you, try it for your womanly troubles. Its age is its guarantee. It cures.

"Do as Rome Does."

The saying "Do as Rome does" originated with St. Ambrose in the fourth century. It arose from a diversity of the observance of Saturday. The Milanese made it a feast, the Romans a fast. St. Ambrose, being asked what should be done in such a case, replied: "In matters of little consequence it is better to be guided by the general usage. When I am at Milan I do not fast on Saturday, but when I am at Rome I do as they do in Rome."

SNAPSHOTS AT CELEBRITIES

Ben W. Hooper, Governor Elect of Tennessee.

From street waif to governor's chair is the romantic career of Benjamin W. Hooper, recently elected chief executive of the state of Tennessee. The governor elect is a Republican, and his election is due to the support given his candidacy by the Independent Democrats opposed to Governor Malcolm R. Patterson. For the first time in three decades a Republican has beaten a Democrat for the highest post in the gift of the state. Governor Elect Hooper's opponent was the redoubtable "Fiddling Bob" Taylor, who suffered his initial defeat at the hands of his fellow citizens.

The newly elected governor is a native of Newport, Tenn., where he was born forty years ago. When a child of six or seven he was picked up on the streets of Knoxville and sent to an orphan asylum. Several years later he was adopted by Dr. Hooper of Newport, and there he grew up and was educated. He studied law, was admitted to the bar and has since practiced his profession with success. His first entrance into politics was as a member of the state legislature, where his talents as a leader won recognition. After the Spanish war, in which he served as captain of infantry, he was appointed United States district attorney.

De Forest Gets Early Start.

The career of Lee De Forest in wireless telegraphy dates back to a thesis on the Hertzian waves which he wrote in college. He was the son of a minister at Council Bluffs and went to Yale less than sixteen years ago. He had always been an experimenter in electricity and had equipped his room at home with electric lights and bells. He entered the scientific school at Yale and in his third year wrote the thesis to qualify for a degree of doctor of philosophy. As Hertzian waves are the medium of wireless communication, his attention was there and then turned to practical telegraphy without wires. Marconi had just been experimenting, but De Forest experimented along independent lines.

President Diaz of Mexico.

For the eighth time General Porfirio Dias, at the age of eighty, has taken the oath of office as president of the republic of Mexico. In November, 1876, Diaz became provisional president and the following spring was declared constitutional head of the government. Manuel Gonzales succeeded Diaz in 1880, but things in Mexico went wrong under his control, and on Dec. 1, 1884, General Diaz was reinstated in the presidency by an overwhelming majority. Since that time he has retained the office.

PORFIRIO DIAZ.

When Diaz first grasped the reins of government Mexico was in a sorry condition. He found a disorganized state, exhausted by war, revolution, sectionalism and the reign of Maximilian. Since his advent Mexico knows what justice, liberty and education mean. Foreign capital has been welcomed and has built railroads, telegraphs, telephones and factories.

A Realist on Hope.

William Dean Howells, discussing realism at one of his Sunday afternoons in New York, let fall a neat epigram on hope.

"Hope," said the famous novelist, "is not really an angel in a diaphanous robe of white, but only the wisp of hay held before a donkey's nose to make him go."

She will be assisted by Mrs. Breeden, of Nashville, who has had experience of twelve years. Mrs. Breeden, also visited the Baltimore New York markets this fall, so you can feel assured of up to-date in gear if you purchase of Miss M. Muse. She invites you to visit Millinery Parlor, and inspect the beautiful things that she has been on for you. The lovely Scarfs, and new Facinators, and other novelties will appear to the good taste of her customers, and she feels sure that you will agree that never before has Clanton offered such a line ladies and childrens millinery.

I am a cripple, not able to do manly labor, but I am trying to an honest living. I have a Shoe Shop across the Street from the House, and any work you will bring me I will appreciate it.

Yours very truly,
THOMAS LOCKHART.

A FATHER'S DREAM

The Last Scheme Herr Bischoff Planned For His Son.

By HELEN COMFORT.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

In the center of a large tract of land in Germany a hundred years ago stood a hunting lodge owned by Wilhelm Bischoff, a retired merchant of Berlin. Both Bischoff and his son Carl were sportsmen and used to go to this lodge in the proper season to hunt. The wild boar was at that time still to be found in certain parts of that country. When food was scarce the woods were infested with wolves.

The elder Bischoff was an optimist, often surprising his family by some visionary scheme. His son Carl, who inherited the traits of his mother rather than those of his father, was of a more equitable mental organization.

On one of Carl's visits to the lodge when his father remained at home he stopped one day while hunting at an ancient schloss occupied by one of those impoverished German noblemen whose ancestors were great men and whose descendants have had to pay for their progenitors' prominence. The schloss had always belonged to the Gehrensteins, whose living had been gained by plundering. But that part of the country did not fill up with the rest, and the laws gradually did away with the employment of the robber barons. He who occupied the schloss at the time the incident narrated in this story occurred had a pitiful income, which he supplemented by game.

Carl Bischoff was entertained by the baron, the only member of whose family living was Gretchen, a fair haired, blue eyed maiden of nineteen. Brought up in a wild region, a certain uncouthness marked her movements. Yet she had inherited the peculiar superiority of her ancestors. Carl followed her with his eyes wherever she went and saw in her the lady of the middle ages of which he had often read. Indeed, having lived in the same schloss, in the same wild country as they, she could not be anything else.

Instead of hunting the wild boar Carl Bischoff remained at the schloss till the time had arrived for his return to Berlin. He went away desperately in love with Gretchen Gehrenstein, and as he was the first young man of quality she had ever seen his love was returned. And, being returned, it was returned tenfold.

When Carl reached his father's house the hunting season was drawing to a close. The elder Bischoff had been detained from his accustomed outing and a few days after his son's return started for the lodge. Before going he called Carl into his library and said:

"Carl, I have just completed negotiations for your marriage with the daughter of Herman von Hecker, who is in high favor with the king. I can settle upon you a fortune, and with this alliance you will be received at court. This will give you an opportunity to distinguish yourself either in the diplomatic service, the army or some department of the government."

"So?" said the young man, who was used to his father's schemes and thought it better to wait for him to replace the present one with another "That will be fine indeed."

Bischoff was much pleased with his son's compliance and went off to the lodge in a very good humor. A few days after his arrival the Lady Gretchen was riding through the forest when she came upon a riderless horse nipping what grass remained after the frosts preliminary to winter. The trappings denoted that the rider was above the ordinary woodchopper and trapper, and it was evident that some gentleman had met with an accident. She rode about till she caught sight of a man sitting on the ground leaning against a tree. Riding up to him, she asked him what was his trouble. She did not know that he was the father of her lover, and he did not know that she was his son's sweetheart.

"I am much pleased to see you, my dear young lady," he said feebly. "In chasing a boar my horse stumbled and fell, his whole weight coming down on my leg, which I fear is broken. I beg of you to catch him that I may get back to my hunting lodge."

Gretchen dashed away after the horse and soon returned leading him by the bridle. Dismounting, she endeavored to assist the man to rise, but in the effort to do so the pain of a broken leg threw him into a faint. Gretchen waited till he had come back to consciousness, when the two consulted what should be done. They were very near a wood road. It did not seem possible for them to make any move. Their only plan was to wait for some woodcutter to come and remove the injured man on his sledge.

An hour passed. It was coming dark, and yet no one had come. The invalid was growing despondent and somewhat terrified at the prospect of spending the night in the forest. Then the girl asked him if he would consent to stay alone while she went for assistance. He agreed to the plan. She mounted her horse and was about to ride away when a distant bark was heard. She waited, listening. The bark was answered by one near by.

"I cannot leave you," she said. "There are wolves near at hand."

Bischoff blanched. "But, my dear lady," he said, "if there are wolves you must go. I cannot consent that you should perish because I must perish."

She looked at him with a surprised expression, not seeming to understand him. Her ancestors had not been accustomed to fear any danger. It was a part of their lives. And as to leaving one of their companions to suffer death to insure their own safety, such a thing had not occurred to them. It did not occur to this faraway offspring that had never known any surroundings except those in which they had lived. She cast a quick glance at the horses, as much as to say, "They will suffice to feed the wolves if there are not too many of them." Then she took up Bischoff's rifle and examined it. It was no breechloader of the present day. Every charge had to be rammed home before another could be fired. A small rifle was hanging from the saddle of her horse. She unhooked it and laid it beside the man. Then she led her horse some fifty yards away, tied him to a tree and did the same with Herr Bischoff's horse, placing the animals on different sides of them. All these preparations she made as a general expecting an attack would dispose of his means of defense. The last preparation was the gathering of what wood she could find and the lighting of a fire.

It was quite dark before the first wolf was seen, and then only two eyes like coals of fire appeared. Frightful neighs were heard from both the horses as the brutes sprang upon them. The fire kept off the wolves, though Gretchen stood before it, her rifle in hand, and if one of them came too near she picked him off with unerring aim, reloading immediately. There was plenty of powder and ball at hand and so long as it was not necessary to fire rapidly the ammunition could be utilized. Bischoff sat with his rifle ready to shoot, while Gretchen reloaded, and with the two, the fire and the horses to satisfy the wolves' hunger the prospect was fair—that is, if not too far prolonged.

Herr Bischoff always referred to that period from the fall of darkness till daybreak as the "horrible night." For twelve hours the girl stood defending him, and then when a light began to permeate the forest the wolves were seen stealing away between the trunks of the trees. An hour later a man with a horse and an empty sledge came by on his way for wood. Bischoff was lifted on the sledge and driven to the schloss.

One morning Carl Bischoff, who was attending lectures at the university, received a letter from his father giving an account of his adventure and telling his son that he was at an old tumbledown schloss not far from the lodge with a broken leg. He desired Carl to come to him and as soon as he was able to be moved to take him home. Carl first went to the lodge, where he communicated with Gretchen, telling her that she had saved and was nursing his father and asking her not to recognize him (Carl) when he appeared.

This matter having been arranged between the lovers, Carl appeared at the schloss. When he had embraced his father and they had rejoiced that he had been spared to his family the latter said:

"Carl, I have a new scheme for you."

"Oh, father," said Carl, "you are always having new schemes! What is this one?"

"You remember the marriage plan I had for you. Well, I have changed my mind. This girl who has saved me is in truth a wild looking thing"—

"Very."

"But she has descended from great people. I think it quite possible your mother can take her and make a lady of her. Now, I wish you—if I can get her for you—to marry her. It is quite likely that by repairing this venerable pile and your taking the additional name of Gehrenstein at her father's death you may assume the title. This will be a better platform from which to enter public life"—

"Father, say no more. I cannot consent one day to please you by falling in with your selection of a wife for me and another falling in with another scheme."

"I will double the amount to be settled on you."

"Desist."

"I will spend a hundred thousand marks on this schloss."

"Do not tempt me, I am in love."

The father sighed. "With whom?" he asked lugubriously.

The son put his arms about his father's neck.

"With this girl, my old poppy, whom you have called a wild thing and who has preserved you for us."

"You love this girl?"

"Yes."

"And yet only last week you agreed to marry another."

"I knew you would change your mind."

This was the last dream Herr Bischoff had for his son, and it turned out a reality. The schloss was restored in more than its ancient splendor, and Carl is now Carl Bischoff von Gehrenstein.

FIGHTING THE CLUB ROOT.

Directions For Combating Destructive Disease of Cabbage.

Club root is one of the most destructive diseases affecting plants of the cabbage tribe. It is due to a slime mold disease which lives over as a saprophyte in the soil. The infection is subterranean; hence spray measures are of no avail. Crop rotation is the best means of avoiding this pest. Set only healthy plants. Infested land should not be set again in cabbage for several years.

Do not use manure containing cabbage refuse. Infection may be carried on plows and hoes which have been used in fields of diseased cabbage, therefore clean all implements and dip them in a 2 per cent solution of carbolic acid. If for any reason it is necessary to grow cabbage or allied crops continuously on the same land and the soil becomes infected, it may be largely disinfected by an application of caustic lime at the rate of two to five tons per acre at least six months before the land is set to cabbage. The seed bed should be treated in the same way.—Circular of Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station.

Grass Lands In Grain.

Humus making crops are such grasses as timothy, clover, blue grass, broom grass and alfalfa. It has been found grass land plowed is under better conditions of moisture and freer from weeds than land that has grown grain continuously.

Servants In Germany.

When a servant in Germany falls ill her mistress is not allowed to discharge her, but must pay about 50 cents a day, for her hospital expenses until she is able to return to work.

Jake Stahl Says He's Through.

J. Garland Stahl, better known in baseball circles as Jake, the Boston American first baseman, has quit baseball and gone into the banking business. He has accepted a responsible position with a Chicago national bank. His father-in-law has been connected with the institution for several years.

Sonoma Girl to Quit Track.

Sonoma Girl, the famous trotting mare, has been retired from the turf by her owner, Miss Lotta Crabtree of Boston. The mare's last race was at Phoenix, Ariz. It is understood that with her retirement Sonoma Girl will pass from the ownership of Miss Crabtree to a leading stock farm.

"I'll never be without Dr. King's New Life Pills again," writes A. Schingeck, 647 Elm St., Buffalo, N. Y. They cured me of chronic constipation when all others failed." Unequaled for billiousness, jundice, Indigestion, headach, chills, malaria, and Debility. 25c at Upchurch Drug co.

DON'T GET TOO SEDATE.

Play Is as Good For Grown Persons as For Children.

Play is just as necessary to keep a grown man young and a middle aged man from growing old as it is to make a child grow into a man. Wordsworth's lines are as sound physiology as good poetry:

My heart leaps up when I behold
The rainbow in the sky.
So was it when my life began;
So be it when I am a man
Or let me die.

In childhood we play because we are young. In middle age we are young because we play, and if we keep it up we shall never know that we are old until we are one day suddenly dead. Yet the absurd idea has grown up, and Mrs. Grundy has adopted it with her usual fatuousness, that play is something undignified in a grown man and unbecoming in a lady. And this unfortunately is one of the rare instances where "thinking makes it so." After a man has practiced this belief in the uselessness of exercise for half a decade or so and become fat and pompous and red faced or pale and slack muscled and short winded then the contortions that he indulges in when he decides to unbend and try to play furnish considerably more entertainment to spectators than to himself.—Dr. Woods Hutchinson in Outing.

Promoted.

"They're beginning to put on airs."

"Is that so?"

"Yes; their washwoman is now a laundress."—Detroit Free Press.

Patience is bitter, but its fruit is sweet.—Rousseau.

WORK FOR TEAM OF OXEN.

Overlooked Woman Sees Many Virtues in the Patient Animals.

For the small farmer as well as for the man who farms on a larger scale I believe oxen are well nigh indispensable on a New England farm, says a Connecticut woman correspondent of the Rural New Yorker. If a man cannot afford as large and heavy a team of horses as he needs he will do well, instead of buying a cheaper span of horses, to invest in a yoke of working cattle, with a horse for driving besides. The oxen will do all the heavy work and do it well, for, although they are slow, they are sure. The horse can be used for work that the oxen cannot do, such as on the mowing machine, rake, cultivating, etc. In our hill country oxen are constantly proving their value. One large farm has two yoke of cattle, which haul all the wood from the woods over rough, stony lands and apologetic roads. They also haul heavy loads of grain and coal from the station, hay and ice in the season and are being used constantly the year around.

They do not, as a rule, require shoeing when used on the farm alone, but when taken upon the roads they require shoeing if their feet are to be kept in good condition. They require the following ration of grain, which keeps them in first class working order: Two quarts of bran mixed with the same amount of cornmeal or two quarts of shorts mixed with the same amount of meal, fed twice daily, night and morning, making eight quarts a day for each ox. A large forkful of hay given three times a day—morning, noon and night—with plenty of fresh drinking water, constitutes the best bill of fare for a yoke of oxen. Oxen, of course, should receive their ration of salt also. Many farmers believe that their work in the long run is more profitable than that of horses, for unless tuberculosis gets in the herd they are not as liable to spells of sickness as horses are, they have greater strength and more endurance and are not afflicted with "nerves," therefore less liable to take affright and smash things generally. They are not as expensive to keep as horses, and, besides, when their days of working are over they can be fattened easily and die on the right side of the ledger, but when the horse is dead he is dead and a dead loss besides. Since time immemorial the ox has been the faithful servant of man. We do not care for him as we do for the horse. We do not regard him with the same affection nor give him credit for as much intelligence, but nevertheless in these days of aeroplanes and automobiles the ox maintains his place as a profitable and faithful servant of the farm.

Commonsenseism in farming is doomed. Cold facts of better practice are waking up more farmers to improved opportunities at home than have figured in the pleasantest dreams.—American Agriculturist.

Poultry Pointers.

Boys and girls attending school have splendid opportunities for poultry raising. Except the close attention that must be given to incubators and young chicks, school hours do not stand in the way of poultry raising. Ambitious boys and girls can solve the problems of poultrymen.

The orchard is a splendid place for poultry to range in. Poultry is a very good insect destroyer.

Save all the grain, such as Kaffir corn, sorghum, broom corn seed, millet seed, etc., for poultry. It is often difficult to get a variety of food for fowls during winter.

Nearly all diseases of poultry can be traced to filth. Clean off the droppings frequently.

Don't forget the charcoal, grit, etc. Keep plenty always in reach of the fowls.

A coat of lime inside the poultry house is an improvement in many ways. It makes the room lighter, destroys the woodworks; it dies up the vermin and prevents them from breeding.

The orchard is a splendid place for poultry to range in. Poultry is a very good insect destroyer.

Save all the grain, such as Kaffir, milo, sorghum, broom corn seed, millet seed, etc., for poultry. It is often difficult to get a variety of food for fowls during winter.

Nearly all diseases of poultry can be traced to filth. Clean off the drop boards frequently.

Don't forget the charcoal, grit, etc. Keep plenty always in reach of the poultry.

A coat of lime inside the poultry house is an improvement in many ways. It makes the room lighter; it preserves the woodwork; it fills up the crevices and prevents them from being breeding places of insects.

DRY FARM DECALOGUE.

Ten Commandments Worth Reading by Farmers of All Sections.

Professor W. C. Palmer, agricultural editor of the extension department at the State Agricultural college of North Dakota, gives the following "ten commandments of dry farming:"

First.—Thou shalt plow deep.

Deep plowing permits rain to penetrate the soil easily and without run off; also provides more feeding space for plant roots and makes available more plant food.

Second.—Thou shalt keep the surface soil loose.

This prevents soil moisture from evaporating and conserves the rainfall. Harrow grain after it is up two inches or use weeder.

Third.—Thou shalt cultivate level.

Level soil affords the least exposure to the air and will take in rainfall faster than ridged soil.

Fourth.—Thou shalt summer fallow.

This should be practiced in all districts where the annual precipitation is less than fifteen inches, as it conserves two years' rain for one crop and kills weeds and plant diseases. Land should be cultivated. Where the yearly rainfall is more than fifteen inches corn is as good a preparation for a crop as the bare fallow.

Fifth.—Thou shalt add organic matter to the soil.

Stable manure is the best form. Plow weeds under while green.

Weeds consume moisture and plant food, crowd plants, shade crops, retard plant life and make work.

Seventh.—Thou shalt grow early maturing crops.

Conditions for growing are best during the early summer. Winter grains are better than those sown in the spring.

Eighth.—Thou shalt grow corn every three to five years.

The cultivation required for corn saves moisture and kills weeds and plant diseases. Corn is the best preparation for a grain crop; it produces more food and fodder per acre than other crops. Do not hill up the corn, as this wastes the moisture.

Ninth.—Thou shalt grow clover or alfalfa every few years.

Rotating with these grasses adds fertility and organic matter to the soil, kills weeds and diseases of plants and produces an excellent hay and valuable seed crops.

Tenth.—Thou shalt keep stock.

The most profitable way of marketing grain and fodder is through stock, which produce the manure necessary to the soil and bring prosperity and plenty to the dry land farmer.

The appearance of the farm often reflects the character of the owner.

In the Shadow of Fame.

There are a number of former celebrities who are now running rooming and boarding houses in New York city. Many a singer, actress or writer who formerly held a place in the public eye has now settled down to the prosaic occupation of housing and feeding a small portion of that same public. Their houses are a magnet for young persons with the artistic temperament. One woman who once enjoyed a fair reputation as a violinist has five furnished apartments which she sublets room by room to aspirants for dramatic, operatic and literary honors. Reflected glory rather than physical comfort is the portion of most of these satellites, but the privilege of hobnobbing with yesterday's greatness compensates for material discomfort.—New York Press.

Cicero on Wit.

There are witty sayings which carry a concealed suspicion of ridicule, of which sort is that of the Sicilian who, when a friend of his made lamentaton to him saying that his wife had hanged herself upon a fig tree, said, "I beseech you give me some shoots of that tree that I may plant them." Of the same sort is what Crassus said to a certain bad orator who, when he imagined that he had excited compassion at the close of a speech, asked our friend here after he had sat down whether he appeared to have raised pity in the audience. "Very great pity," replied Crassus, "for I believe that there is no one here so hard hearted but that your speech seemed pitiable to him."—Cicero's Oratory.

Her Bad Habit.

"I don't like that woman."

"Why not?"

"She's the woman who is all the time teaching my wife a new way of serving up cold meat."—Detroit Free Press.

Integrity without knowledge is weak and useless, and knowledge without integrity is dangerous and dreadful.—Johnson.

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson I.—First Quarter, For Jan. 1, 1911.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings xii, 1-24. Memory Verses, 13, 14—Golden Text, Prov. xiii, 20—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Our last lesson in regular Old Testament studies was in December, 1908, and in connection with the dedication of the temple, and we asked special attention to the fact that the desire of the Lord was that through Israel and the temple all the people of the earth might know the Lord as the only God and put their trust in Him (I Kings viii, 43-60). It is the eternal purpose of God that all nations shall yet know Him through Israel and worship Him (Jer. iii, 17), and this was foreshadowed in the days of Solomon, when not only the queen of Sheba, but all the earth, sought to hear the wisdom of God through Solomon and brought Him gifts (I Kings x, 1, 10, 24, 25). There was another foreshadowing when the wise men from the East brought their treasures to Jesus as an infant and worshiped Him as the King of the Jews (Matt. ii, 1, 2, 17).

Perhaps the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of the heart were never more manifest than in Solomon, of whom it is written: "There was no king like him who was beloved of his God. • • • Nevertheless even him did outlandish women cause to sin" (Neh. xiii, 26). His wives turned away his heart after their gods, and therefore all the kingdom was taken from him except the tribes of Judah and Benjamin (I Kings xi, 9-13), for Jerusalem's sake, the city which He hath chosen, and for the sake of David, His chosen servant.

Canon Fausset thinks that the Song of Solomon represents his first love to Jehovah in youth, Proverbs his matured experience in middle age and Ecclesiastes the sad retrospect of old age, the latter giving probable evidence of his repentance. As to his son and successor, it may be that Solomon had him in mind when he wrote, "Who knoweth whether the man that shall be after me shall be a wise man or a fool? Eccl. ii, 18, 19; Ps. xxxix, 6, is always true of those who gather riches, "He heapeth up riches and knoweth not who shall gather them."

The way of man is not in himself. It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps (Jer. x, 23), but the counsel of the Lord will stand, and He will do all His pleasure (Isa. xlvi, 10). Although all Israel came to Shechem to make Rehoboam king the Lord had purposed otherwise because of Solomon's sin. When the ten tribes revolted under Jeroboam because of Rehoboam's threats of increased oppression by the advice of his young men and Rehoboam gathered Judah and Benjamin to fight against Israel and bring the kingdom back to himself, the Lord sent His messenger to forbid Judah to fight against Israel and said, "Return every man to his house for this thing is from me" (verses 21-24). It is also written in verse 15 of our lesson that the king hearkened not unto the people, for the cause was from the Lord, that He might perform His saying which the Lord spake by Ahijah. Had the king listened to the counsel of the old men who stood before Solomon, his father, while he yet lived (verses 6, 7) the kingdom might have remained united, but it was not so to be.

Rehoboam therefore strengthened himself in Jerusalem and reigned seventeen years in the city which the Lord had chosen. The priests and Levites in all Israel, being cast off by Jeroboam, resorted to him, as did also some out of all the tribes of Israel who set their hearts to seek the Lord God of Israel and therefore came to Jerusalem to sacrifice unto the Lord God of their fathers (II Chron. xi, 13-16; xii, 13-14). Yet Rehoboam did evil and prepared not his heart to seek the Lord. When we remember that those who reigned at Jerusalem were said to sit on the throne of the Lord as His representative (I Chron. xxix, 23) it makes their disobedience and misrepresentation of Him seem all the worse.

But what shall be said of us who are redeemed with the precious blood of Jesus Christ and who are here to represent Him and make His life manifest in these mortal bodies if we, instead of being separate and given wholly up to Him and filled with His spirit, become conformed to this evil age and walk in fellowship with it? As to the Lord working out His purposes in spite of people, good or bad, see how He defeated the counsel of Ahithophel by the counsel of Hushai, the friend of David (II Sam. xvii, 14).

We are on our way to a kingdom of peace and righteousness on this earth, when the Son of David shall sit on the throne of His father at Jerusalem and reign not only as King of Israel, but as King of kings and Lord of lords. We are offered a place with Him in His throne and to reign with Him (Rev. iii, 21; v, 9, 10); but, while our redemption, provided at infinite cost, is free to us and wholly of grace, our position in His kingdom will depend upon our faithfulness here.

The twelve apostles are to occupy twelve thrones with Him when He shall reign as King of Israel, but the privilege of the church, His body, shall be much greater, even as His bride, the true Adam and Eve over all the earth (Luke xxii, 29, 30; Col. iii, 4).

Who Was There That You Knew?

IN the shadowy ranks of those who marched to defeat or death or victory fifty years ago in the mighty conflict that convulsed this great nation, is there father or grandfather or uncle of yours? Would you like to see a photograph of him in that long ago day of his youth—a photograph that he never knew was taken? Perhaps we can show you one; and in any case, we can tell you a story, stranger than any detective fiction, of 3,500 priceless photographs that were lost and are found again.

3,500 Long Buried Photographs of the Civil War

THEY were taken by the greatest photographer in the United States of that day; they were bought by the United States Government for $30,000; they were buried in the War Department for 50 years—they are buried there still. But a duplicate set was kept by the photographer—who died poor and broken down; that duplicate set was knocked from pillar to post for nearly 50 years, until it was discovered by a New England collector. J. Pierpont Morgan tried to secure the collection—Ex-President Garfield and General Benjamin F. Butler said it was worth $150,000—yet with the help of the Review of Reviews, the entire collection has been gathered into 10 great volumes and is placed within your reach at less than the value of one of the photographs. It is the one accurate, impartial history of the Civil War—for the camera cannot lie. It tells the story of the War you never heard before. Taken under protection of the Secret Service, these photographs bring to light thousands of little-known phases of the war; they penetrate to strange places and record strange things.

One on the Judge.

The lawyer for the prosecution had finished his closing argument, and the Judge, a pompous and long winded individual, was charging the jury.

He was in the midst of an unusually long and tedious address when he suddenly noticed that one of the jurymen had fallen fast asleep. The indignation of his honor was boundless. Rapping sharply on his desk, he awakened the slumberer, who seemed not at all abashed at being thus caught napping. After glaring at him angrily for a few moments the magistrate in his most severe tone said:

"So that's the way you attend to your duty, is it? You're a fine specimen to have on a jury. Do you think your opinion will be of any value when I send you out to determine the fate of this prisoner?"

"Yes, sir," said the juryman quietly; "I think so."

"Oh, you do, do you?" shouted the exasperated judge. "Pray tell me, sir, how long you have been sleeping?"

"I don't know, your honor," was the reply. "How long have you been talking?"—New York Herald.

Getting Rich Quick.

A souse wandered into a downtown barber shop and after being shaved sat down in the bootblack's chair.

"How do you get paid? Wages?" he asked.

"No, suh," answered the bootblack; "I work on a percentage. Sixty puh cent's mine."

"Shickshty p'cent yours?" said the souse deliberately. "Shickshty p'cent."

"Yes, suh."

Warning the Colonel.

A raw recruit from a remote corner of the Green Isle was engaged for the first time in a field maneuver in England on outpost duty. The sergeant instructed him to look out carefully for the colonel coming to inspect the post.

After an hour he returned and asked the soldier, "Has the colonel been here?"

Receiving an answer in the negative, he went away, returning later on with the same inquiry.

Awhile later the colonel appeared. The recruit did not salute properly, which incensed the colonel, who as a first asked him:

"Do you know who I am?"

"Faith and I do not," answered the recruit.

"I am the colonel."

"Begorra, you will catch it then," said the soldier. "The sergeant has been asking twice for yez already!"

Far From Upright.

Reilly and Coran were "having it out." They had been deadly enemies for years, but neither had offered to lay hands on the other up to now, both of them being somewhat afraid of the issue.

At last they came to it, and it was decided that it was to be a fair stand up fight, and with that they started. Coran had it all his own way from the beginning. He kept knocking Reilly down and down again until that worthy was about sick of it. He turned to the bystanders and said, "Sure, an' wasn't it to be a fair, stand up fight?"

"It was," returned an onlooker.

"An' 'ow, thin, can he be expectin' me ter foight 'im fairly if he do be knockin' me down all the time?"—London Ideals.

A Polished Diplomat.

"Did you see anything that particularly struck your fancy when you were looking round the furniture shops today?" asked a young husband of his lately made wife on her return from a tour of furniture inspection.

"Yes," she replied; "I saw something exceedingly pretty in looking glasses."

"I have no doubt you did," he observed, "if you looked into them."

The halo of a calm, sweet peace rests upon that home.

Idleness.

It is an undoubted truth that the less one has to do the less one finds time to do it in. One yawns, one procrastinates, one can do it when one will, and therefore one seldom does it at all, whereas those who have a great deal of business must buckle to it, and then they always find time enough to do it in.

The Hardest Thing.

"What's the hardest thing about roller skating when you're learning?" asked a hesitating young man of the instructor at a rink.

"The floor," answered the attendant.

A Dilemma.

Irishman (as some one knocks at his door)—Shure, if I don't answer it's some wan to give me a job, an' if I do it's the landlord after the rint."—London Punch.

For the Serious Moment.

"I hear he refused to take chloroform when he was operated on."

"Yes; he said he'd rather take it when he paid his bill."

A Precaution.

He—They're weighing the anchor, Sue—I don't blame them. The trades people aren't to be trusted nowadays.—Century Magazine.

"Did you get the raise in salary you demanded?"

"Not exactly. But in recognition of my valued services the boss agreed to supply me with a roll top desk and have my name printed on the door."—Detroit Free Press.

To shake the stage with footfalls mild
A friend of other days has come.
To smile anew and frequently—
The stately, swell chrysanthemum.
—Buffalo Express.

The broken down cabby regarded with a gleam of delight the taxi which had broken down. But he spoke not a word. The chauffeur began operating on his machine. He turned it and twisted it and banged it and screwed it, but to no avail. And still the cabby spoke not.

The chauffeur banged again. He did things to ignition sparks that wouldn't ignite and cranks that refused to be anything but cranky. And still the cabby, sour of visage, lay low and said nuffin'.

Then the chauffeur wiped his beady brow, and then the cabby, still with the gleam in his eye, crossed over.

"'Ere!" he exclaimed grimly, holding out his whip. "'Ere y'are, mister! 'It 'im with this!"—Answers.

The morning mists were fading fast
When through the luncheon room there passed
A man who ordered breakfast food
And got a bowl of nicely stewed excelsior.

"Is your wife backward with your people?"

"Not a bit. She has already begun to teach sister how to look stylish and mother how to cook."—Kansas City Journal.

I saw an object cross the street,
Which hopped along on two small feet
And seemed to be in much distress.
It was a maid in bobble dress.
—Chicago Record-Herald.

"Even if you do not like mamma (I admit that she is sometimes a little trying), you should remember that she will leave us a great deal when she dies," the young wife said consolingly.

John sighed rather hopelessly.

"Yes," he admitted. Then he brightened for a moment.

"Do you suppose," he suggested, "that she would be willing to leave us less when she dies and once in awhile before then?"—Harper's Bazar.

"How far is it to Gloomyville?" we ask of the native who is leaning over the gate.

"Ten mile, straight ahead," he answers.

"But we met a man a little way back and he said it was only two miles."

"Short, fat man, drivin' a fleabitten sorrel hoss?"

"That's the man."

"Did you meet him or pass him?"

"We passed him."

"Thought so. He's drivin' a balker I traded him, an' he didn't want his hoss to know how much furder it had to go."—Chicago Evening Post.

His Sarcastic Friend.

He was very proud of his new automobile—talked excessively about its capabilities, road performance, etc. Finally one of his friends became a nuisance, and each to himself swore softly that he would take his time and if the opportunity should give him a little curbstone thereat.

Finally one long suffering individual was asked to go for a ride. Excuses were of no avail. He was bundled into the machine and taken for a spin through the parks and over the boule vards. In due course of time, without any serious mishap, they pulled up at the Automobile club. The auto crank and his guest were soon surrounded by several of their friends.

"How did you enjoy your ride?" was asked of the auto crank's friend.

"Until today I never thought an automobile could go so fast," was the reply. (Here the auto crank was all attention. That was some praise for his car. Right out in public too. That would silence some of the scoffers who said his machine should be called Snail.) "Why, do you know there was a car went by us at such a clip that I could hardly see it."

The auto crank glared, and under his gaze the group melted away. They had had their revenge.—Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

Juvenile Suicides.

"A generation ago the taking of their own lives by minors was almost an unheard of occurrence," said a physician. "Now it is becoming alarmingly frequent not only in this country, but in Europe. In most cases the phenomenon can be set down to the artificial life people lead and to the complex conditions of modern existence. Very often parents are too ambitious for their children and by constant appeals to them so work on the nervous temperaments of their offspring as to bring on a derangement of the mental faculties. One of the most noted specialists of France, Dr. Berillon, who has made a study of the matter, asserts that children who have a suicidal tendency are for the most part wanting in the sense of smell. He makes recommendation that all who suffer from this defect should be taken to an expert for examination, as it might tend to forestall some future tragedy. —Baltimore American.

The First Automobilist.

Nicholas Joseph Cugnot was the first automobilist. Many years before Stephenson had introduced his railway locomotive Cugnot, who was a military engineer, had made a locomotive for roads. His locomotive has been piously preserved at the Conservatoire des Arts et Metiers. Cugnot died in 1804. His lot was not that of many geniuses. He did not die in want. Napoleon had secured him a pension of 1,000 francs—passing rich on $200 a year. In this respect the premier consul showed more enlightenment than he did in regard to Fulton of steamboat fame, whom he considered—it is distressing to write—an adventurer. Cugnot's carriage was built to transport arms and he had designed a service gun. These achievements alone would be a passport to Napoleon's favor.—London Globe.

His Luxurious Pillow.

"When sleeping cars first came in," said a railroad man, "the bedclothes in the berths were very scanty. On one of these early cars one night after everybody had turned in and the lights were low a loud voice called from an upper berth:

"'Porter, got a corkscrew?'

"The porter came hurrying down the aisle.

"'Boss,' he said in a scandalized tone, 'we don't allow no drinkin' in the berths. It's against the rules.'

"'Oh, it ain't that, porter,' the voice answered. 'I just want to dig out a pillow that's sort of worked its way into my ear.'"

The Persian Crow's Beak.

There is a weapon known as the crow's beak which was formerly much in use among men of rank in Persia and north India. It was a horseman's weapon and consisted of a broad curved dagger blade fixed at right angles to a shaft, pickax fashion. The shaft incloses a dagger, unscrewing at the butt end. This concealed dagger is a very common feature of Indian arms and especially of the battleaxes of Persia.

Her Question Answered.

Yes, Geraldine, we quite agree with you that the crunching of celery is a noise abhorrent to the sensitive soul. A much better way is to cut the stalks into medium sized pieces and hold them in the mouth until they dissolve.

Write again, Geraldine. We are always glad to dispense useful information.—Lippincott's.

Maternal Pride.

Mr. Newlywed—This paper says there are 50,000,000 babies born every year. Mrs. Newlywed—Oh, darling, doesn't that make you proud? Mr. N.—Why should it? Mrs. N.—Why, just to think that our baby is the smartest and prettiest of 50,000,000.—Cleveland Leader.

An Amendment.

A health hint says, "Do not bolt your food." And a comedian comes back with the observation, "It is much better to use a padlock."—Exchange.

Pleasant.

The Friend—Your wife doesn't appear to be in very good humor, Husband—No. She thinks I've invited you to dinner.—Jeu Qui Rit.

Bad laws are the worst of tyranny.—Burke.

Their Question.

"Your neighbor of Jim Flagler, while you was up to the city?" asks the village grocer.

"Yep. Run arrest him on the street one morning," answers the worthy butcher who has just returned to the little town.

"Understand Jim's livin' pretty well up there."

"I dunno. Ast him where he was livin', an' he told him an' his family was settled in a bunghole in the country."—Judge.

He and She.

Man designs an aeroplane,
Digs away with might and main,
Working out a clever scheme
That will crystallize his dream.
Racks his brain o'er guy and gear,
Gets the thing so it will steer,
Then upon a happy day
In he steps and soars away.

Woman sees the aeroplane,
Gets to work with might and main,
Buys a lot of flimsy things—
Ribbons, laces, silk that clings—
Cuts 'em, sews 'em, pats 'em flat,
Builds an aviation hat,
Then upon a happy day
Puts it on and struts away.
—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

His Explanation.

Mrs. Dorkins—John, in your sleep last night you muttered something about "coppering the ace." What does that mean?

Mr. Dorkins—That's a chemical term, Maria. To copper is to electropiate; an ace, microscopically speaking, is an atom. "Coppering an ace" means electroplating an atom.—Chicago Tribune.

Courtesy.

A man may be extremely bad,
A pirate and a skin,
But that, belike, is just his fad.
You mustn't rub it in.

Though fraud and treason both combine
To make his record sable,
No decent person will decline
To sit with him at table.

Reproof or rude demeanor would
But add to his distress.
A friendly smile will make him good,
Toujours la politesse!
—Puck.

A Great Help.

Chicago Slim—Do youse think dat a college eddication helps a man any, Bill?

Boston Bill—Sure it do! Just think uv de smooth line o' talk a college man kin hand out when he's hittin' de line fer handouts!—Sunday Illustrated Magazine.

Vehicles For Rhymes.

Some women are judged by their bodies,
And others are judged by their heels;
Quite often they're judged by their carriage;
Again, they are judged by their "wheels."
Sometimes we can size up a woman,
But often we're fearfully stung.
We judge her too oft by her "harness"
When really the test is her tongue.
—Yonkers Statesman.

His New Job.

A San Francisco conductor who recently embraced religion was called upon to take up the Sunday morning offering. He did very well until he came to a boy. "Young man," he said sternly, "you will have to pay half fare."—Success Magazine.

The Weary Ones.

Sometimes too weary to wander
In hope of the pastures so fair;
The Land of Content's over yonder.
But you won't feel at home when you're there.

"All you have to do is to act the way you feel!"—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

No Decision.

She was a decided blond,
To me she once confided;
But when I dared propose one day
She never answered nay nor yea,
And I knew she was undecided.
—Chicago News.

His Sentiment.

Mrs. Jawback—John, I do believe you are jealous of my first husband.

Mr. Jawback—Well, no, I don't believe I'd call it jealousy. Envy is the word.—Cleveland Leader.

Eh, Ladies?

To the ladies who dress a la hobble:
